The only way to listen to Mozart in the shed at Tanglewood is with your eyes closed. Then you might be back in Salzburg two hundred years ago and the thrills and appoggiaturas could be neatly fitted into the rich baroque surroundings. Somehow they just don't belong with steel girders, sheet metal, blue jeans and sport shirts.

The first half of the program on Sunday was graciously conducted by Mr. Munch. The A major Symphony, No. 29, and the D minor Piano Concerto, No. 20, are as traditionally Mozart as anything he ever wrote. Seymour Lipkin performed with precision and clarity.

In the second half, Hugh Ross conducted the orchestra and Tanglewood Choir in a big cantata entitled Davidde Penitente, which has nothing at all to do with the King of Israel, and did not sound altogether penitential to me. This work is based on an earlier Mass which Mozart turned into a cantata by changing the text and adding two arias. With either text, the work is more appropriate to the opera house than to the church.

Musically, the Bavidde Penitente is a rich and powerful composition. Ross conducted it with a fine feeling for Mozart's melodic line

V00

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
JUL 16 1961

MOZART MUSIC HEARD BY 5000 AT TANGLEWOOD

Weather Holds Crowd Down; Dr. Munch and Orchestra Hailed

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—Another damp, misty night did little to lure people to the Music Shed and the music of Mozart, but those who were on hand, 5008 of them, heard a magnificent program played with superlative artistry by the virtuosi of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Charles Munch was on the podium to keep things in order.

Concerto for Bassoon

First on the program came the stunning Concerto for Bassoon, in B-Flat Major with the vastly gifted Sherman Walt as soloist. This concerto was tailor-made for the virtuoso bassoonist. Its wide leaps, runs and singing passages for the solo instrument were all completely realized by Mr. Walt. On the whole, this concerto is romantic, full of intriguing melodies and it must be a joy to perform. The collaboration by the orchestra was excellent. One listened to fabulous performances of the three cadenzas. The response by his colleagues was heart-warming, as was the audience response.

Next on the program was the lovely Concerto for Flute, in G Major in which Doriot Anthony Dwyer was the soloist. Just to look at Mrs. Dwyer is a pleasure and to hear her play is in experience quite unequaled today. Although Mozart had harsh words to say about the flute, his writing for it was expert. Mrs. Dwyer plays the original slow movement with full comprehension of its worth, realizing its very personal significance, its delicacy and beauty. Her tone is always a joy to hear; her phrasing impeccable and the variety of color almost limitless. Mrs. Dwyer reaped the applause due her.

The program concluded with the glorious Sinfonia Concertante, in E Flat. The eminent soloists were Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon, and James Stagliano, horn. It has been considered by some as Mozart's "first great symphonic work." Its spirit is joyous and the deft handling of the woodwind colors could only have come from Mozart.

The solo passages of the work were played in superb style and the complete ensemble was admirably proportioned, perfect in its homogeneity under a conductor who truly likes the music of Mozart.

This afternoon Dr. Munch concludes the Mozart series. He will offer the Symphony in A Major, No. 29; the Piano Concerto in D Minor, No. 20 and, with chorus and soloists, the cantata Davidde Penitente.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
JUL 17 1961

Mozart Comes to the Berkshires

Dr. Munch Wields a Vital Baton

By Louis Chapin

Lenox, Mass.

Tanglewood is a number of things.

It is an estate in the Berkshires; a music school; the summer home of the Boston Symphony. It is, of course, a list of concerts—the Berkshire Music Festival—subject to critical estimates both before and after they actually occur.

But underlying everything else, Tanglewood is people—thousands of them, coming and going, some veterans of many seasons, plenty of others attending their first concert. They may come far distances, or they may be two girl counselors from a nearby camp spending their free evening and a good slice of their week's take.

Tanglewood, for most of its people this weekend, was Mozart; and judging by the first Boston Symphony concert, he was quite at home with it all.

* * *

Whatever preconceptions any of his audience may have brought, the Mozart who met them Friday night was in a thoughtful rather than a festive mood. As we listened to Charles Munch conducting the animated deliberations of his "Linz" Symphony (No. 35 in C), we could be properly amazed at the speed with which this pithy work had been composed. If Mozart had written it for this Tanglewood concert, instead of for his friend Count Thun during a Vienna visit, he could have arrived in Lenox the previous Sunday afternoon, started to work, and had it ready in time for parts to be copied, the orchestra rehearsed, and for us to hear just when we did.

This is fast work; and yet such is its lucid precision that we are not conscious of a composing process at all—fast or slow.

We are not so much concerned with what happened in five days as with what has appeared to happen instantaneously. Dr. Munch evidently understands this. His tempos are alive; and the immediate interest of the textured sound is such as to make "now" the all-important word. Only occasionally the drive of his gesture slightly smudged a bit of fast passage-work—an effect which can be partly visual when his beat is pulling ahead.

* * *

At the center of the program, surrounding the intermission, were two pieces written for sections of the orchestra. The C minor Serenade, for two each of oboes, clarinets, horns, and bassoons, is another deliberative work, but requires niceties of technique that were especially demanding on a damp night. The sonority and intonation of this small group came nearer to the usual high standard as the four movements progressed. Academically this may be described as "occasional music"; certainly it was Mozart's occasion.

The strings of the orchestra were then heard alone in an Adagio and Fugue (K. 546), whose stable subject emphasizes the same diminished seventh that characterizes certain fugues of Bach and Handel (such as "And With His Stripes" from "Messiah"). It is terse, commanding music, and was so played.

The final Mozart of the evening was also the most familiar—the G minor Symphony (No. 40). No amount of familiarity (and I say this advisedly) can dull the expressive persistence of his next-to-last work in this form, when it is interpreted in Dr. Munch's way.

* * *

This symphony is not an obviously restful one—in fact it does much, in its rhythms and counterpoint, to give the effect of questioning, of refusing to settle happily for its final cadences. Dr. Munch brings to it an unsurpassed awareness of the surfaces on which such authentic music rests. He offers his audience an underlying serenity without in any way denying the overlying questions. It is all, of course, the same inseparable music, and a superb affiliation between a conductor and a composer.

Mozart's audience left, reluctantly, with a great deal to think about.

Irwin D. Hoffman's portrait of Doriot Anthony Dwyer, who was soloist with the Boston Symphony Sunday at Tanglewood in Mozart's G major Flute Concerto.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUL 15 1961

3,491 Attend First Of Mozart Concerts At Tanglewood

The first of three Mozart concerts scheduled for this weekend in the Tanglewood, Music Shed was heard by an estimated crowd of 3,491 persons last evening.

The program included the Symphony in C major, No. 36; the Serenade for Winds, the Adagio and Fugue for Strings, and Symphony in G minor, No. 40.

Tonight's program will include Concerto for Bassoon in B-flat major, Concerto for Flute in G major, and Sinfonia Concertante in E flat. Sunday afternoon the featured work will be the cantata "Davidde Penitente," for which three solo singers, chorus and orchestra. Alson on the program are E. Symphony in A major, No. 29 and the Piano Concerto in D Minor with Seymour Lipkin as soloist.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL - AMERICAN
D. 6 8,802 S 8'2,836
JUL 17 1961

AT TANGLEWOOD

A Fine Evening of Mozart

By MILES KASTENDIECK

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASS. JULY 17 — RAINY WEATHER cut attendance but hardly dampened the ardor of those attending the Berkshire Festival's Mozart Weekend. A total of 16,170 people showed why these single-composer weekends have been transferred to the music shed, for audiences have grown considerably whatever the weather.

Charles Munch and Hugh Ross shared the conductoral duties of yesterday afternoon's concert: The former in the Symphony No. 29 (K. 201) and the Piano Concerto (K. 468) with Seymour Lipkin as Soloist; the letter in the cantata "Davidde Penitente" (K. 469) with the Tanglewood Choir and Soloists. The cantata could be classified as something of a novelty here.

Based on Mass

Mozart reset his earlier Mass in C Minor to make this cantata, an unusual procedure for him. He added two ornate arias in condescension to his soloists. The superimposed Italian text offers an interesting study in using the same music for different words.

Many would prefer the original, though the "new" version is quite acceptable. The choruses, especially the translation of the "Gratias and Qui Tollis" of the Mass, give the work its stature.

Mr. Ross conducted with due regard for the prayerful nature of the work. Since the florid arias have an operatic cast, they do not quite conform. The choir reflected the fine training Mr. Ross gives his singers.

Soloists Satisfactory

The soloists — Ginetta La Bianca and Gloria Ciricillo, sopranos, and Howard Fried, tenor, proved no more than satisfactory nevertheless, the performance as a whole had more color and life than the earlier ones.

Mr. Lipkin found more that was pretty than dramatic in the concerto. Mr. Munch and the orchestra saved the performance.

This work calls for much more rugged treatment than the pianist gave it; his sensitivity detracted from its essential nature. Under the circumstances Mr. Munch extended to the concerto the soft quality noticeable in his playing of the symphony, but he did not overlook the drama that makes the concerto distinctive.

The Saturday concert had an unusual program, devoted as it was to the woodwinds: Concerto for Bassoon, Concerto for Flute, and the Sinfonia Concertante (for oboe, clarinet, bassoon, and horn). Incidentally Danny Kaye sold out the music shed on Thursday night as guest conductor without portfolio and par excellence.

England New...
078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
ORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,456
JUL 16 1961

Music:

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

ENOX—If Charles Munch ... Boston Symphony Orches... ated on Mozart's name to ... magic at the boxoffice, ... correct to the extent ... persons came to Tanglewood ... night for what was straight ... onnoisseur's program.

his was the second in the ... kend series of three all-Mozart ... certs. Five of the orchestra's ... k-desk men were soloists in the ... owing: Concerto for Bassoon ... B flat major, K.191 (Sherman ... t, soloist); Concerto for Flute ... G Major, K.313 (Doriot Anthony ... Dwyer); Sinfonia Concertante ... E Flat, K.297B (Ralph Gomberg ..., oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; ... es Stagliano, horn, and Mrs. ... er).

in last weekend's Bach con... the orchestra has been de... to 40 players for the Mo... Theoretically ... with 18th Century instrumen... although it must come as ... ning of a surprise to those ... xpect the full strength of ... yers. The visual effect is ... ewhat helped by paneling that ... been set up in the rear and ... des of the stage to make it ap... ear smaller and more compact.

Rousing Receptions

Last night's program did not ... clude Mozart's most felicito... works, at least from the stand... oint of popular appeal. In fact, ... he music was much more adap... able to intimate surroundings. ... hree concertos may have ... eemed two too many. Except for ... he most rabid Mozart disciples ... his program might have seemed ... ard to take, except that the ... assoon and flute soloists ... iven rousing receptions, ... uts of "bravo" by ... men after each ... move... not suggesting th... symphonies were the ... ut last night's mate... nature of selection... None of which has ... on the quality of ... l or solo performances ... music itself for, that ...

bassoon concerto is ... g if not inspiring ... performance (mar... apse of memory in ... ment) was propelled ... devotion — and ... rvousness.

Commanded Respe...

fact, it was play... " throughout ... ments, commanding ... hestra and audience ... to have the orchestra ... uild" placed in the ... disclosing its capabilities ... nical splurge and poetic to...

Mozart gave the orchest... ty to do — probably as a ... tion — which collaboration ... to the soloist's glory. Walt... the prolific runs, leaps ... and filigree of the two swift ... ments with fine dexterity, ... tude of tone, polished p... and rich quality.

The cadenzas (by G. ... Gutter) carried through ... tent to exploit the instrum... performer to the hilt. In ... the memory lapse by the ... er, the slow movement ... to many the revelation

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,456

JUL 1 3 1961

Music: 2nd Mozart Concert At Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX—If Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra counted on Mozart's name to perform magic at the boxoffice, they were correct to the extent that 5,000 persons came to Tanglewood last night for what was strictly a connoisseur's program.

This was the second in the weekend series of three all-Mozart concerts. Five of the orchestra's first-desk men were soloists in the following: Concerto for Bassoon in B flat major, K.191 (Sherman Walt, soloist); Concerto for Flute in G Major, K.313 (Doriot Anthony Dwyer); Sinfonia Concertante in E Flat, K.297B (Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; James Stagliano, horn, and Mrs. Dwyer).

As in last weekend's Bach concerts, the orchestra has been delated to 40 players for the Mozart. Theoretically, this falls in line with 18th Century instrumentation, although it must come as something of a surprise to those who expect the full strength of 04 players. The visual effect is somewhat helped by paneling that as been set up in the rear and ides of the stage to make it appear smaller and more compact.

Rousing Receptions

Last night's program did not include Mozart's most felicitous works, at least from the standpoint of popular appeal. In fact, the music was much more adaptable to intimate surroundings. Three concertos may have seemed two too many. Except for the most rabid Mozart disciples, this program might have seemed hard to take, except that the bassoon and flute soloists were given rousing receptions, set off by shouts of "bravo" by the orchestra men after each movement.

We're not suggesting that three Mozart symphonies were the solution. But last night's material was in the nature of selective research. None of which has any bearing on the quality of the orchestral or solo performances on the music itself for that matter.

The bassoon concerto is an interesting if not inspiring curiosity. Walt's performance (marred only by a lapse of memory in the slow movement) was propelled by obvious devotion — and a degree of nervousness.

Commanded Respect

In fact, it was played "con amore" throughout its three movements, commanding respect of orchestra and audience. It was good to have the orchestra's "step child" placed in the limelight, disclosing its capabilities for technical splurge and poetic tone.

Mozart gave the orchestra plenty to do — probably as a precaution — which collaboration added to the soloist's glory. Walt played the prolific runs, leaps, trills and filigree of the two swift movements with fine dexterity, amplitude of tone, polished phrasing and [illegible] quality.

The cadenzas (by G. Walter Gutter) carried through their intent to exploit the instrument and performer to the hilt. In spite of the memory lapse by the performer, the slow movement brought to many the revelation that the bassoon is an ardent poet of the woodwinds and not restricted to the orchestra's clowning.

Purest Sound

Mrs. Dwyer's flute makes just about the purest sound in the Boston Symphony. This is demonstrated at virtually every concert and last weekend was brought out into the light with Bach's Suite No. 2 in B Minor for Flute and Strings.

The Mozart concerto fully exposed this fine artist's talents. The opening "Allegro Maestoso" and concluding "Rondo" (in the style of a minuet) were played with a gusto and polish that didn't impair the delight of a limpid tone.

Full Recognition

Munch took full recognition of the solo instrument's light tone and balanced backgrounds that supported rather than intruded.

Customarily, the "Adagio" from another of Mozart's flute concertos is used with the one in G major. It seems that the original did not please the flutist who commissioned the work.

Last night, Mrs. Dwyer played the original, making it into highly personal music. The orchestra reflected beautifully muted sounds against the solo passages. This afternoon ends the Mozart series. Munch will conduct the orchestra in Symphony in A Major, No. 29, K.201. Seymour Lipkin will be soloist in Piano Concerto in D Minor, No. 20, K.466. Hugh Ross will conduct the Tanglewood Choir and Orchestra in the cantata, "Daviddde Penitente," K.469. Soloists will be Ginetta La Bianca and Gloria Ciricillo, sopranos; William Lewis, tenor.

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127

JUL 3 1 1961

Tanglewood Draws 26,914 on Weekend; Mozert Wednesday

With 8,747 persons present yesterday afternoon and 8,213 Saturday night, the total weekend attendance at Tanglewood came to 26,914.

Yesterday Byron Janis was piano soloist and Saturday night Eugere Ormany of the Philadelphia Orchestra made his first appearance as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Fine Arts Quartet will offer a program of Mozart Wednesday night and on Thursday night Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Boston Pops.

Pierre Monteux will make his second of three appearances conducting the Boston Symphony Friday night. Saturday night and Sunday afternoon Charles Munch will return to the podium.

Friday's program will consist of Beethhoven, Schumann, Strauss and Sibelius and Saturday's of Brahms, Prokofiev and Franck. Sunday the weekend will round out with Beethoven again, Bartok, and Respighi.

Mozart Featured In Berkshires

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — With rain on Saturday and cool or overcast weather on Friday and Sunday, the second weekend of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood set no new records but held up well. The Mozart concerts performed by the Boston Symphony ensemble of 40 drew slightly over 5,000 on Saturday night and again on Sunday afternoon.

Charles Munch took advantage of opportunities the varied music of Mozart afforded, to reveal the wealth of talent within the orchestra. Friday's concert, though it featured no soloists and concentrated on two symphonies, No. 35 and No. 40, also gave prominence to the famout string section in the Adagio and Fugue (K. 546) and to pairs of oboes, clarinets, horns and bassoons in the Serenade in C minor (K. 388).

Concerto for Bassoon

Saturday's concert brought forward Sherman Walt in the Concerto for Bassoon in B flat major (K. 191) and Mrs. Doriot Anthony Dwyer in the Concerto for Flute in G major (K. 313). The "Sinfonia Concertante" in E flat (K. 397b) featured four first-desk wind players, Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Gino Cioffi, clarinet, James Stagliano, horn, and Walt, bassoon. The bassoon and flute concertos found the soloists playing entirely from memory, and the "bravos" heard all over the orchestra at the conclusion of each work expressed the same admiration as prolonged ovations from the audience.

Sunday again sought great variety, opening with the Symphony No. 29, in A major, presenting Seymour Lipkin in the Piano Concerto in D minor, No. 20 (K. 466) and bringing Hugh Ross to the podium in the first Tanglewood performance of the Cantata, "'Davidde Penitente" (K. 469). The soloists for the latter were Ginetta La Bianca and Gloria Ciricillo, sopranos, and Howard Fried, tenor.

Wind Soloists

Out of all these aspects of Mozart and Tanglewood, I chose to hear the Saturday compositions for wind soloists. Though the concert was in the big Music Shed, no effort was made to achieve exaggerated volume of tone for its own sake. The quality of Walt's playing was smooth and ingratiating, and Dr. Munch kept a knowing restraint on the orchestra to achieve fine balances. The agility and expressiveness of the instrument were at their best in cadenzas devised by J. Walter Gutter.

Mrs. Doriot's skill was productive of pure and elegant phrases, the notes being delightfully even and effortless. In the "Adagio non troppo," especially, there was opportunity for delicious repartee between the flute and ensemble, with subtle blendings of great beauty.

5-Pronged Problem

The "Sinfonia Concertante" found the four featured players using scores. There were a few moments when one remembered that balances were a five-pronged problem. Nevertheless, the total effect was dazzling, without undue stress or strain. The quartet of players was not always conspicuously scored in the opening movement. The "Adagio" brought moments of lovely repose and shimmering tone. The final "Andantino con variazioni" chose the oboe and clarinet as leaders in the elaborate phrases. Dr. Munch revealed his pride in his first-desk players at the conclusion of each work.

Next weekend brings the full 104-piece orchestra under Charles Munch on Friday and Saturday, and the amazing 85-year-old Pierre Monteux on Sunday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

JUL 1 5 1961

Music Review

Mozart at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THIS IS the Mozart weekend at Tanglewood. As has been the plan established by Koussevitzky early after the war, the second week's series has been devoted entirely to the music of Mozart. Charles Munch led the small ensemble of first-chair men of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program of two of the symphonies enclosing a work for wind instruments alone and one for strings only.

The size of this group was about that which Mozart was accustomed to write for and participate with in his day. He wrote from Paris that his first violins numbered about 10, but the other voices at his disposal were not as strong numerically as Munch uses in these concerts.

* * *

THE EVENING started with the "Linz" symphony (K.425) in C major. The conductor was at his most relaxed ease, and the performance came off with happy fidelity. The introduction was impressively proportioned. Mozart wrote no two consecutive symphonies for the same orchestration. This "Linz" was the only work of the evening which utilized tympani, yet it was not explosive nor offensively vehement.

This benign mood was not maintained for the rest of the evening. The C minor "Serenade" is an octet for oboes, clarinets, bassoons and horns. The sonority was lovely. It produces a beautiful timbre, but Munch neither inspired nor did the performers generate mood proper to the music. We had the opinion that the Shed is not suitable for this small ensemble. We missed some of the tonal contrasts strings give this music when it is played in the quintet version the composer himself adapted. Nor did the themes receive their proper distinction in our ears. The performance, however, was without flaws.

* * *

THIS SERENADE gives the performers opportunities to display their virtuosity without destroying the musical interest of the work. The menuetto has a trio "al rovescio," at the reverse, in which every descending interval is imitated by an ascendin gone, or vice versa.

The adagio and fugue for strings (K.546) was not more convincing. Munch dragged out the ritard of the adagio beyond the potentials of the bows and then took an unpardonable pause before plunging into the fugue. And then he did not ask the cellos to blast out the first three notes with adequately stentorian power nor allow the following ascending scale to be articulated distinctly.

* * *

THE G MINOR symphony (K.550) closed the evening. This is one of Mozart's more endearing utterances. The Bostonians caught its spirit, in spite of the conductor's exhortations to inject some frenzy into it. Munch got off to a hurried start in the andante with the violas and the second violins and the progress got back to repose and sense only when the first violins took over. In the final allegro, there is no call for such a furious answer to the initial dainty, piquant arpeggio. All this kind of playing does have the attribute or merit of animation, but we doubt if that alone is a worthy objective.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Republican (m)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 22,546

JUL 1 8 1961

16,170 Hear Tanglewood Mozart Series

(Special to The Republican)

LENOX, MASS. — Despite two days of rain the Mozart series at Tanglewood drew more than 16,170 listeners, some 3,000 less than last season, when conditions were excellent for listening from the lawns. This week end the major concert series begins at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival with Charles Munch conducting Friday and Saturday nights and the venerable Pierre Monteux Sunday afternoon.

Friday night's audience of 3,491 heard the "Linz Symphony in C Major" and the "Serenade in C Minor" for two oboes, two clarinets, two horns, and two bassoons." Saturday night's 5,008 heard Sherman Walt in "Concerto for Bassoon, in B Flat Major" and Doriot Anthony Dwyer in "Concerto for Flute, in G Major." Both soloists gave performances for which they were roundly applauded. The Sunday afternoon audienc of 5,003 heard Seymour Lipkin in "Piano Concerto in D Minor, No. 20," played with delicacy, sparkle, and some brittleness. At times it seemed music more appropriate for a small drawing room than the large shed at Tanglewood.

Hugh Ross conducted the Tanglewood Choir in the Cantata, "Davidde Penitente" for the concluding Sunday selection with Ginetta La Bianca and Gloris Ciricillo as the two sopranos and Howard Fried as tenor. The soloists were good and as usual the choir did its excellent performance. Saturday night's audience heard four soloists from the orchestra in "Sinfonia Concertante, in E-Flat." They were Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; and James Stagliano, horn.

This season's audiences have heard some Mozart not previously played as Mr. Munch has tried to introduce variety but for one listener, at least, the Mozart series did not measure up to the grandeur and richness of the Bach week-end a week ago.

S.M.

MISSION PLANNED

OBSCURED TEXT

102

Second Thoughts On Music

Walt Displays Beautiful Tone With Mozart Piece

Gifted Bassoonist Shows Limitless Technical Prowess in Notable Tanglewood Performance

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—Thinking back to the three Tanglewood concerts devoted to the music of Mozart, conducted by Dr. Charles Munch, one performance stands out in our memory. It was the "Concerto for Bassoon in B Flat major." It was played by the gifted bassoonist Sherman Walt. Mr. Walt produces a most beautiful tone and has limitless technical prowess. The concerto contains lovely melodies and each movement ends in a glittering cadenza. Great performances of this concerto are rare. Mr. Walt had all the necessary resources to provide a great performance, technical security, beautiful tone and imagination.

Well Deserved

His colleagues in the orchestra gave him a splendid ovation, with bravos and everything and the audience followed suit. It was well deserved.

There are few performers here more admired than flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer. She was heard in the "Concerto for Flute in G major." She also provides a warm and attractive tone from her instrument, a tone which takes on limitless colors and her virtuosity is legendary. The flute concerto was performed in the grand manner and with meticulous attention to detail. Her colleagues in the orchestra were less demonstrative than they were for Mr. Walt's performance, but the audience made its admiration known in no uncertain manner.

The final work on this concerto program was the "Sinfonnia, in E Flat." This is a stunning work both for the ensemble and the four soloists who were Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioorri, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon and James Stagliano, horn. The ensemble was quite perfect and the mastery of the quartet of soloists absolute. The beauty of the music was enhanced by them.

The opening program was well proportioned but a bit on the bland side. It opened with a somewhat subdued performance of the (Linz) symphony; a performance that did not get far off the ground at any time. Dr. Munch was at his most relaxed. The symphony was followed by the "Serenade in C minor" for two bassoons, two oboes, two clarinets and two horns. This is a particularly significant creation. Although labeled "Nacht Musique," it is something less than convivial in mood, although the last movement approaches the mood. It clearly was not suited to the private parties customary at the time where cheerful music, strung out over many movements was expected. It does make fine listening, night or day.

Mozart Mastery

The "Adagio and Fugue for Strings" is a work of art revealing the Mozart mastery contrapuntal music. Except in his masses, Mozart wrote seldom in this medium. The clarity of the performance and the melodic interest in the work were enhanced by a fine, sturdy performance.

The program concluded with the "Symphony in G minor." The performance would have benefited by a more vigorous approach but the tonal quality was ravishing.

The final program brought forth a novelty for Tanglewood, the cantata "Davidde Penktente" for chorus, two sopranos and tenor. Asked to write this work, Mozart took the easy by combing the Kyrie and Gloria of his "Mass in C minor" and using an Italian text. To pacify the first soprano and tenor, he wrote a long ornate aria for each. The result ws an emasculated "Mass in C minor," not too interesting, but admirably sung by the Tanglewood Choir and less admirably by soloists Ginetta La Bianca, Gloria Ciricillo and Mr. Fried.

Seymour Lipkin, a favorite pianist at Tanglewood, was soloist in the lovely "Piano Concerto in D minor." the concerto is in a style most suited to this pianist. He played it with delicacy of tone and flashes on glittering pyrotechnics, The exquisite middle movement, a "Romance," was played with ravishing tone, and the pianist's splendid intelligence was manifested throughout the performance.

Tanglewood reverted to its old time glory when the big orchestra took over the Music Shed. From now on we shall hear varied programs and conductors like Pierre Monteux, Richard Burgin, Eugene Ormandy and Charles Munch.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
JUL 23 1961

WORCESTER TELEGRAM

Music:

Lipkin Solo Pianist In Mozart Concerto

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The combination of inclement weather and all-Mozart programs of moderate interest resulted in weekend attendance at the Berkshire Music Festival lower than for the corresponding series last summer.

Yesterday afternoon's concert was heard by 5,003 persons, bringing the weekend total to 16,170. Last year the Mozart concerts attracted 19,310. This weekend's figure does not include the special Th... night con... featuring Danny K...

Charles Munch conducted 40 players ... Symphony in 4-movements ... Piano Concerto in D-minor, No. 20, K. 466, with Seymour Lipkin as soloist.

Cantata Impressive

Hugh Ross conducted the Tanglewood Chour and Orchestra in "Davidde Penitenti," K. 469. Soloists were Ginetta la Bianca and Gloria Ciricillo, sopranos, and Howard Fried, tenor, substituting for William Lewis.

Most impressive portions of the program were the A-major symphony and the chorus' participation in the cantata. The symphony ... flood of joy. Even in the slow movement ... contentment.

... was inspired in that orchestra and conductor seemed infused with its joyful spirit. In the opening and closing movements changes of volume were wide and instantaneous. Ornaments were sensitively placed in the setting executed with the precision of a string quartet. The finale was an outburst of happiness, with especially fine commentaries from strings and horns.

Expressive, hushed sound abounded in the slow movement addressed with devotion and care and notable repartee between strings and woodwinds. The minuet was as debonnair as anything heard over the weekend. Munch presented it as a comparatively slow dance, alive with prevailing melody and constanty active dynamics.

No 'Tinke-Tinkle'

The orchestral introduction to the concerto set th estage for what could and should have been an exciting performance. This is a work of serious men, and the last thing Mozart wanted was that it be infested with "tinkle-tinkle" piano passages.

From the first entrance by the solo instrument, one sensed a conflict of tempo and style with the orchestra. Lipkin's technique was agile enough, though spotted here and there with inaccuracies. Scale passages had much of their necessary satiny smoothness, but some of the pianist's attempts to get an exaggerated pianissimo came out as a thin or inaudible tone. Certainly this was the case in the first movement's cadenza.

Seemingly obsessed with emotion, the pianist tried to infuse the romance with something extra that nearly turned into slush and sugar. The orchestra fortunately succeeded in alleviating the situation because the movement threatened to drown itself in its own tears.

Prayerful Cantata

We have unqualified respect for Ross as a choral scholar and coach. His objectives in the cantata were clearly that of a prayer, in effect a litany. When contronted ... an orchestra, however, Ross falls prey to the worst of podium mannerisms.

... terday's cues to the orchestra were sparse indeed. They seemed restricted to demanding more tone, or less. He constantly used hand and arm vibratos, attempting to increase whatever it was that wasn't forthcoming.

At the risk of sounding heretic, we must admit that we found the cantata to be dull. The chorus of 125 Berkshire Music Center students did nobly with the "Gloria" and "Sii Pur Sempre." In the latter, however, the soprano's voices received strident competition in the form of a portable organ played by Daniel Pinkham. It was a curious-looking thing, shaped like an upright piano, with pipes extending upward.

Nevertheless, the chorus gave a balanced composition of sound, phrased with fine discipline and pronounced clearly.

The soloist were not remiss in effort, but pretty shallow in results. Miss La Bianca has a rather thin, wavering voice that lacks warmth and it didn't help that she appeared quite ill-at-ease.

Miss Ciricillo has a voice of greater power, but too heavy for the Mozartean frills in "Lungi le Cure." Fried's approach to his one aria, "A te, fra tanti affanni" was operatic and overly-enforced with instrumental sound.

Friday night the festival will be reasumed, with Munch conducting the full orchestra of 104 players. The program will include Beethoven's "Coriolan" overture, Brahms' first symphony and Poulenc's "Gloria," for chorus and orchestra, with Adele Addison, soprano.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 40,709
JUL 17 1961

Tanglewood Offers Works Of Mozart

(Special To The American)

LENOX, MASS. — Despite two days of rain the Mozart series at Tanglewood drew more than 16,170 listeners, some 3,000 less than last season, when conditions were excellent for listening from the lawns. This week end the major concert series begins at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival with Charles Munch conducting Friday and Saturday nights and the venerable Pierre Monteux Sunday afternoon.

Friday night's audience of 3,491 heard the "Linz Symphony in C Major" and the "Serenade in C Minor" for two oboes, two clarinets, two horns, and two bassoons." Saturday night's 5,008 heard Sherman Walt in "Concerto for Bassoon, in B-Flat Major" and Doriot Anthony Dwyer in "Concerto for Flute, in G Major." Both soloists gave performances for which they were roundly applauded. The Sunday afternoon audienc of 5,003 heard Seymour Lipkin in "Piano Concerto in D Minor, No. 20," played with delicacy, sparkle, and some brittleness. At times it seemed music more appropriate for a small drawing room than the large shed at Tanglewood.

Hugh Ross conducted the Tanglewood Choir in the Cantata, "Davidde Penitente" for the concluding Sunday selection with Ginetta La Bianca and Gloris Ciricillo as the two sopranos and Howard Fried as tenor. The soloists were good and as usual the choir did its excellent performance. Saturday night's audience heard four soloists from the orchestra in "Sinfonia Concertante, in E-Flat." They were Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; and James Stagliano, horn.

This season's audiences have heard some Mozart not previously played as Mr. Munch has tried to introduce variety but for one listener, at least, the Mozart series did not measure up to the grandeur and richness of the Bach week-end a week ago.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
JUL 20 1961

Stern, Monteux at BSO Concerts in Lenox Weekend

Charles Munch conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Friday, July 21, 8:30 and Saturday, July 22, 8:30 evenings and Pierre Monteux makes his first appearance at the 1961 Berkshire Festival to conduct the Orchestra Sunday afternoon July 23, 2:30.

CHARLES MUNCH

The Poulenc "Gloria" will receive its first Berkshire Festival performance at Friday's concert. The Friday program will also include the "Coriolan" Overture by Beethoven and Brahms' Symphony No. 1.

Violinist Isaac Stern will be soloist at the Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon concerts. On Saturday evening he will be heard in a performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto. At this concert Charles Munch will also conduct William Schuman's Symphony No. 7 and the Overture to "Genoveva" by Robert Schumann.

At Sunday's concert, conducted by Pierre Monteux, Mr. Stern will perform two concertis Viotti's Violin Concerto No. 22 and the Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra by Bartok. The concert will include "Antique Dances and Airs" by Respighi, the Dances from the "Three-Cornered Hat" by de Falla and the Suite from "Rosenkavalier" by Richard Strauss.

Lit... Book Review

OBSCURED TEXT

102

Second Thoughts On Music

Walt Displays Beautiful Tone With Mozart Piece

Gifted Bassoonist Shows Limitless Technical Prowess in Notable Tanglewood Performance

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—Thinking back to the three Tanglewood concerts devoted to the music of Mozart, conducted by Dr. Charles Munch, one performance stands out in our memory. It was the "Concerto for Bassoon in B Flat major." It was played by the gifted bassoonist Sherman Walt. Mr. Walt produces a most beautiful tone and has limitless technical prowess. The concerto contains lovely melodies and each movement ends in a glittering cadenza. Great performances of this concerto are rare. Mr. Walt had all the necessary resources to provide a great performance, technical security, beautiful tone and imagination.

Well Deserved

His colleagues in the orchestra gave him a splendid ovation, with bravos and everything and the audience followed suit. It was well deserved.

There are few performers here more admired than flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer. She was heard in the "Concerto for Flute in G major." She also provides a warm and attractive tone from her instrument, a tone which takes on limitless colors and her virtuosity is legendary. The flute concerto was performed in the grand manner and with meticulous attention to detail. Her colleagues in the orchestra were less demonstrative than they were for Mr. Walt's performance, but the audience made its admiration known in no uncertain manner.

The final work on this concerto program was the "Sinfonia, in E Flat." This is a stunning work both for the ensemble and the four soloists who were Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Ciorri, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon and James Stagliano, horn. The ensemble was quite perfect and the mastery of the quartet of soloists absolute. The beauty of the music was enhanced by them.

The opening program was well proportioned but a bit on the bland side. It opened with a somewhat subdued performance of the (Linz) symphony; a performance that did not get far off the ground at any time. Dr. Munch was at his most relaxed. The symphony was followed by the "Serenade in C minor" for two bassoons, two oboes, two clarinets and two horns. This is a particularly significant creation. Although labeled "Nacht Musique," it is something less than convivial in mood, although the last movement approaches the mood. It clearly was not suited to the private parties customary at the time where cheerful music, strung out over many movements was expected. It does make fine listening, night or day.

Mozart Mastery

The "Adagio and Fugue for Strings" is a work of art revealing the Mozart mastery contrapuntal music. Except in his masses, Mozart wrote seldom in this medium. The clarity of the performance and the melodic interest in the work were enhanced by a fine, sturdy performance.

The program concluded with the "Symphony in G minor." The performance would have benefited by a more vigorous approach but the tonal quality was ravishing.

The final program brought forth a novelty for Tanglewood, the cantata "Davidde Penitenti," for chorus, two sopranos and tenor. Asked to write this work, Mozart took the easy by combing the Kyrie and Gloria of his "Mass in C minor," and using an Italian text. To pacify the first soprano and tenor, he wrote a long ornate aria for each. The result was an emasculated "Mass in C minor," not too interesting, but admirably sung by the Tanglewood Choir and less admirably by soloists Ginetta La Bianca, Gloria Ciricillo and Mr. Fried.

Seymour Lipkin, a favorite pianist at Tanglewood, was soloist in the lovely "Piano Concerto in D minor." the concerto is in a style most suited to this pianist. He played it with delicacy of tone and flashes on glittering pyrotechnics. The exquisite middle movement, a "Romance," was played with ravishing tone, and the pianist's splendid intelligence was manifested throughout the performance.

Tanglewood reverted to its old time glory when the big orchestra took over the Music Shed. From now on we shall hear varied programs and conductors like Pierre Monteux, Richard Burgin, Eugene Ormandy and Charles Munch.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
JUL 23 1961

WORCESTER ~~TELEGRAM~~

Music: Lipkin Solo Pianist In Mozart Concerto

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The combination of inclement weather and all-Mozart programs of moderate interest resulted in weekend attendance at the Berkshire Music Festival lower than for the corresponding series last summer.

Yesterday afternoon's concert was heard by 5,003 persons, bringing the weekend total to 16,170. Last year, the Mozart concerts attracted 19,310. This weekend's figure does not include the special Thursday night concert featuring Danny Kaye.

Charles Munch conducted 40 players of the [illegible] Symphony in A-major, No. 29, K. 201, Piano Concerto in D-minor, No. 20, K. 466, with Seymour Lipkin as soloist.

Cantata Impressive

Hugh Ross conducted the Tanglewood Choir and Orchestra in "Davidde Penitenti," K. 469. Soloists were Ginetta la Bianca and Gloria Chricillo, sopranos, and Howard Fried, tenor, substituting for William Lewis.

Most impressive portions of the program were the A-major symphony and the chorus' participation in the cantata. The symphony is a thread of joy. Even in the slow movement, it fairly bursts at the seams with contentment.

Yesterday's performance was inspired in that orchestra and conductor seemed infused with its joyful spirit in the opening and closing movements. changes of volume were wide and instantaneous. Ornaments were sensitively placed in the setting executed with the precision of a strong quartet. The finale was an outburst of happiness, with especially fine commentaries from strings and horns.

Expressive, hushed sound abounded in the slow movement addressed with devotion and care and notable repartee between strings and woodwinds. The minuet was as debonnair as anything heard over the weekend. Munch presented it as a comparatively slow dance, alive with prevailing melody and constantly active dynamics.

No 'Tinke-Tinkle'

The orchestral introduction to the concerto set th estage for what could and should have been an exciting performance. This is a work of serious men, and the last thing Mozart wanted was that it be infested with "tinkle-tinkle" piano passages.

From the first entrance by the solo instrument, one sensed a conflict of tempo and style with the orchestra. Lipkin's technique was agile enough, though spotted here and there with inaccuracies. Scale passages had much of their necessary satiny smoothness, but some of the pianist's attempts to get an exaggerated pianissimo came out as a thin or inaudible tone. Certainly this was the case in the first movement's cadenza.

Seemingly obsessed with emotion, the pianist tried to infuse the romance with something extra that nearly turned into slush and sugar. The orchestra fortunately succeeded in alleviating the situation because the movement threatened to drown itself in its own tears.

Prayerful Cantata

We have unqualified respect for Ross as a choral scholar and coach. His objectives in the cantata were clearly that of a prayer, in effect a litany. When confronted with an orchestra, however, Ross falls prey to the worst of podium mannerisms.

Yesterday's cues to the orchestra were sparse indeed. They seemed restricted to demanding more tone, or less. He constantly used hand and arm vibratos, attempting to increase whatever it was that wasn't forthcoming.

At the risk of sounding heretic, we must admit that we found the cantata to be dull. The chorus of 125 Berkshire Music Center students did nobly with the "Gloria" and "Sii Pur Sempre." In the latter, however, the soprano's voices received strident competition in the form of a portable organ played by Daniel Pinkham. It was a curious-looking thing, shaped like an upright piano, with pipes extending upward.

Nevertheless, the chorus gave a balanced composition of sound, phrased with fine discipline, and pronounced clearly.

The soloist were not remiss in effort, but pretty shallow in results. Miss La Bianca has a rather thin, wavering voice that lacks warmth and it didn't help that she appeared quite ill-at-ease.

Miss Ciricillo has a voice of greater power, but too heavy for the Mozartean frills in "Lungi le Cure." Fried's approach to his one aria, "A te, fra tanti affanni" was operatic and overly-enforced with instrumental sound.

Friday night the festival will be resumed, with Munch conducting the full orchestra of 104 players. The program will include Beethoven's "Coriolan" overture, Brahms' first symphony and Poulenc's "Gloria," for chorus and orchestra, with Adele Addison, soprano.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 40,709
JUL 17 1961

Tanglewood Offers Works Of Mozart

(Special To The American)

LENOX, MASS. — Despite two days of rain the Mozart series at Tanglewood drew more than 16,170 listeners, some 3,000 less than last season, when conditions were excellent for listening from the lawns. This week end the major concert series begins at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival with Charles Munch conducting Friday and Saturday nights and the venerable Pierre Monteux Sunday afternoon.

Friday night's audience of 3,491 heard the "Linz Symphony in C Major" and the "Serenade in C Minor" for two oboes, two clarinets, two horns, and two bassoons." Saturday night's 5,003 heard Sherman Walt in "Concerto for Bassoon in B Flat Major" and Doriot Anthony Dwyer in "Concerto for Flute, in G Major." Both soloists gave performances for which they were roundly applauded. The Sunday afternoon audience of 5,003 heard Seymour Lipkin in "Piano Concerto in D Minor, No. 20," played with delicacy, sparkle, and some brittleness. At times it seemed music more appropriate for a small drawing room than the large shed at Tanglewood.

Hugh Ross conducted the Tanglewood Choir in the Cantata, "Davidde Penitente" for the concluding Sunday selection with Ginetta La Bianca and Gloria Cinicillo as the two sopranos and Howard Fried as tenor. The soloists were good and as usual the choir did its excellent performance. Saturday night's audience heard four soloists from the orchestra in "Sinfonia Concertante, in E-Flat." They were Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; and James Stagliano, horn.

This season's audiences have heard some Mozart not previously played as Mr. Munch has tried to introduce variety but for one listener, at least, the Mozart series did not measure up to the grandeur and richness of the Bach week-end a week ago.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
JUL 20 1961

Stern, Monteux at BSO Concerts in Lenox Weekend

Charles Munch conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Fri day, July 21, 8:30 and Satu day, July 22, 8:30 evenings an Pierre Monteux makes his fir appearance at the 1961 Berk shire Festival to conduct th Orchestra Sunday afternoo July 23, 2:30.

CHARLES MUNCH

The Poulenc "Gloria" wi receive its first Berkshire Fe tival performance at Friday' concert. The Friday progra will also include the "Corio lan" Overture by Beethove and Brahms' Symphony No. 1

Violinist Isaac Stern will b soloist at the Saturday evenin and Sunday afternoon con certs. On Saturday evening he will be heard in a performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto. At this concert Charles Munch will also conduct William Schuman's Symphony No. 7 and the Overture to "Genoveva" by Robert Schumann.

At Sunday's concert, conducted by Pierre Monteux, Mr. Stern will perform two concerti, Viotti's Violin Concerto No. 22 and the Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra by Bartok. The concert will include "Antique Dances and Airs" by Respighi, the Dances from the "Three-Cornered Hat" by de Falla and the Suite from "Rosenkavalier" by Richard Strauss.

Third Week - July 17 - 23

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 618 802 S. 812,830
JUN 23 1961

Academy Charts Tanglewood Trip

The Brooklyn Academy of Music will run its fifth annual "Sunday at Tanglewood" excursion on July 23. The all-inclusive ticket includes round trip transportation, a box lunch on the Tanglewood grounds and a reserved seat inside the music shed for the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Pierre Monteux, the beloved octogenarian conductor who has had a busy European Spring season, and who opened the Lewisohn Stadium last Tuesday night, will conduct.

The soloist will be Isaac Stern, world-renowned American violin virtuoso, who will play Concerto No. 22 by Giovanni Viotti, an 18th century Italian violinist and composer, and Bela Bartok's Violin Rhapsody.

The orchestra will be heard in Respighi's Ancient Dances and Airs, DeFalla's Three-Cornered Hat dances and the Suite from Strauss' opera, "Der Rosenkavalier."

MANY ATTEND

Mrs. Monroe D. Stein, of the Women's Committee for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in Brooklyn, is the chairman of the "Sunday at Tanglewood" committee this year.

Nearly a thousand persons have participated in the four excursions sponsored by the Academy.

The excursionists will travel by air-conditioned buses leaving Vanderbilt ave. between 44th and 45th sts., Manhattan, at 8:30 a.m.

Tuesday, July 18, at 5 p.m. is the reservation deadline for tickets.

Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 105,695
JUL 16 1961

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL IS ACTIVE

Charles Munch and guest conductor Pierre Monteux will divide podium honors in the three major concerts at the Berkshire Music Festival this coming weekend. Dr. Munch will conduct the programs on Friday and Saturday evenings and Monteux will make his first appearance in the current festival next Sunday afternoon.

PIERRE MONTEUX

Friday's concert will highlight a performance of Poulenc's "Gloria" which received its world premiere by the orchestra last winter and subsequently won the New York Music Critics Circle Award. Soprano Adele Addison, who participated in the work's premiere, will again be featured in this festival presentation, and the Festival Chorus will have the choral role. Beethoven's "Coriolan" Overture and Brahms' Symphony No. 1 will complete the program.

Violinist Isaac Stern is to have guest roles in the other two concerts. On Saturday evening he will perform Beethoven's Violin Concerto. The orchestral offerings list the Overture to "Genoveva," by Robert Schumann, and William Schuman's Symphony No. 7. The latter was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and first performed by the Boston Symphony.

In next Sunday afternoon's concert, Stern will be heard as soloist in two works — Viotti's Violin Concerto No. 22 and the Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra, by Bartok. The program will include the following works: "Antique Dances and Airs," by Respighi; Dances from the "Three-Cornered Hat," by de Falla; Suite from "Rosenkavalier," by Strauss.

The Beaux Arts Trio will give the program in the regular weekly chamber music concerts on Wednesday evening. The program: Chausson's Trio in G minor, Op. 3; Beethoven's Trio in G major, Op. 1, No. 2; Schubert's Trio in B flat major, Op. 99.

FIFTH EVENT AT NORFOLK

Friday evening's fifth event in the Norfolk series at the Yale Summer School of Music and Art (8:15) again lists an interesting program. The performers in these concerts are, of course, principally drawn from the resident faculty at the school.

Friday's program follows: Sonata in G major for viola and piano —Bach; Fantasy for violin and piano (Op. 47)—Schoenberg; Five Pieces for small orchestra (1959)—Peter Westergaard; Sinfonia Concertante for violin, viola, and orchestra (K. 364)—Mozart. Gustav Meier will conduct the latter two works.

FOOT GUARDSMEN IN CONCERT

The West Haven Green is to be the scene on Tuesday evening (8 p.m.) of the third concert of a series being given there by the Second Company Band of the Governor's Foot Guard. Capt. Anthony R. Teta will conduct a "Music of Connecticut" program in which the guest soloists will be singers Connie Cacoparde and Sal DeLise. In the event of rain, the concert will be given in the West Haven High School auditorium.

Briefs . . . The Young Artists Group of the Connecticut Experimental Theater will present a benefit program under the direction of Mrs. Hilda Riggio this afternoon at 4 in the Sachcliff Ballroom, Morris Cove.

Tanglewood Swings Into High

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX—The Berkshire Festival swung into high gear this weekend, at Tanglewood, with the full 104 players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Saturday's attendance of 10,949 was only 50 short of being an all-time record for this weekend, but other concerts trailed last year. Increased interest was shown in the open rehearsal at 10 a.m. Saturday, at which 5,302 listeners contributed some $7,500 in gate admissions to swell the orchestra's pension fund.

Charles Munch conducted the first two concerts. Friday, the management honored Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, 80, a leading spirit in establishing these concerts in 1934. The Beethoven "Coriolan" Overture and Brahms Symphony No. 1 were in strong contrast to the modern Poulenc's "Gloria," with Adele Addison, soprano, and the Festival Chorus, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson. This exciting work I had the privilege of reviewing at Boston at its premiere last January.

Saturday evening brought opposite composers of somewhat similar names, with Robert Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva," and the American William Schuman's Symphony No. 7.

Isaac Stern aroused strong enthusiasm in the Beethoven Violin Concerto in D major.

Sunday's concert offered two attractions: Stern and that remarkable personality, turned 86 in April, Pierre Monteux. The orchestra greeted Monteux with a standing ovation, and played for him with superb zeal.

The afternoon was a charming parade of colors and styles, turning gradually from older Italian forms to modern treatment of Spanish and Hungarian national materials, and the rich scoring of Richard Strauss.

Clear Tone

Utterly delightful was Respighi's Suite No. 1 of "Old Airs and Dances for the Lute." The "Gagliarda" was frank, brisk, well-accented music, alternating with lingering phrases. The "Villanella" was slow and sweet, tenderly mournful. The "Passo mezzo e mascherada" returned to an exuberant mood, its rapid phrases bringing some of the few moments of raggedness heard during the afternoon.

Stern, playing Viotti's Concerto in A minor with an orchestra of reduced size, brought not only dazzling technique but a tone which, while not the largest, was of great clarity. Some of his most eloquent messages were delivered in mezzo voice, and the elaborate ornaments were handled as a part of a gentle picture, rather than as bold feats. The closing movement was a beehive of busy accuracy.

Bartok's Rhapsody No. 1 had a wealth of opportunities for the violinist and orchestra. Its slow "lassu" assigned many colorful exclamations to the violin, and an interesting cadenza played principally against a taut piano score. Here and in the rapid "friss" the entire orchestra was displayed in interesting hues and rhythms. Monteux's ability to secure neat results without loss of verve shone as always.

The conductor roused the audience to "bravos" with his handling of three dances from Falla's ballet, "The Three-Cornered Hat." Starting in the program's established gentle mood, these dances worked up to ever more varied and explosive effects, the final one alternating the grandiose with wry phrases full of robust humor.

The Suite from Richard Strauss' "Der Rosenkavalier" was a joy throughout. It burst immediately into glittering and irresistibly flowing rhapsody, and continued as a vibrant and engrossing experience. A brilliant waltz brought amid its extravagant variations a fine solo by concert master Richard Burgin. The suite abounds in tender scenes not heard in the familiar collection of waltzes from this opera.

ADVERTISEMENT

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545

Benefactor Honored

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, a leader in founding the original Berkshire Festival concerts, was honored at last Friday night's intermission in the Tanglewood Shed. On the occasion of her 80th birthday Miss Robinson Smith was presented with a scroll and a unique recording of Poulenc's "Gloria" as it was sung at last January's Symphony Hall première.

The first conductor, in 1934, was Henry Hadley. The Boston Symphony, under Serge Koussevitzky, gave its first Tanglewood performances in 1936. The Music Shed was dedicated, largely in response to Miss Robinson Smith's efforts, in August, 1938.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 317,264 S. 257,590
JUN 28 1961

Pierre Monteux will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood July 23. The Brooklyn Academy of Music has selected that day for its fifth annual excursion.

Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, left, and Isaac Stern discuss some details surrounding Mr. Stern's appearance at the Berkshire Festival on July 22 and 23. Munch will conduct on the former date and Pierre Monteux on the latter.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
D. 66,353
JUL 22 1961

Music Will Fill Tomorrow's Air

Tanglewood, Berkshire Quartet Among Those Planning Concerts

Tomorrow is a great big day for music in the near and medium - far country side surrounding Albany.

The biggest concentration is over Massachusetts way. There, at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony plays at 2:30 p.m., with Isaac Stern as soloist in not one but two works—the Viotti concerto No. 22 and the Bartok violin rhapsody, the latter a Tanglewood first.

Pieere Monteux will be conducting his first Tanglewood concert of the season Sunday.

Manwhile, east of Pittsfield, Cummington School of the Arts offers a piano concert at 3:30 p.m. Gordon Myers is the soloist. He will be heard in works by Bach, Beethoven, Weber, Schubert and Schumann.

Quartet to Play

At 4 p.m. just over the Connecticut border in Falls Village, The Berkshire Quartet with the help of Keith Wilson, head of the Yale Summer School of Music in Norfolk, Conn., and a regular Friday night concerteer on his home grounds, will join his neighbors in the Brahms quartet. Otherwise, the Berkshire group will give works of Mozart and Malipiero.

And now back to Lee, Mass., at 8:30 p.m. for a dance event at Jacob's Pillow. Pauline Koner, featured at regular Jacob's Pillow events later next week, will dance her way through a special lecture.

If you like jazz, too you'll end up with a case of split personality. Also at 8:30 p.m. at the Music Barn, in Lenox, none other than Cannonball Adderley and his quartet are going to hold forth, which go to?

Art and Music

Some of this pleasant mental anguish can be avoided by travelling to Woodstock in the Catskills tomorrow at 3 p.m. to take in the Maverick Chamber Music concert there. If you linger and look at Woodstock's are shows, you might be too late to be able to make the Lenox—Pillow decision.

Exactly the same reasoning may bring you to 3:30 p.m. music tomorrow. Then paintings at the Southern Vermont Arts Center in Manchester.

As for the rest of the week, there's tonight at Tanglewood, with Mr. Stern playing the Beethoven violin concerto and Charles Munch conducting him in it and in the same composer's Seventh Symphony and Schumann's Genoveva overture.

At the exact instant a little south in New Marlboro, Mass., Rameau, Beethoven, Martinu and Kent Kennan are the featured composers in an evening of solo and chamber music.

Five Programs

For members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Festival, there are five open events this week. Tomorrow morning at 10, a chamber music concert; Monday at 8:30 p.m., a composer's forum; Tuesday at 8:30, opera scenes; Thursday at 8:30, the Berkshire Music Center orchestra and Friday at 3:15 p.m., a seminar in contemporary music.

Meanwhile, there's an open-to-the-public rehearsal of the Boston Symphony on Saturday and a chamber music concert at 8:30 p.m. Wednesday in which the New York Pro Musica Antiqua group makes what one hopes will continue to be an annual apperance. This time the group offers early Renaissance music.

The regular Boston Symphony program at Tanglewood Friday night has Charles Munch releasing the baton to Aaron Copland so that the latter can conduct his own "Appalachian Spring" and "Preamble." Dr. Munich then takes over for the second half—Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe," complete, with the Berkshire Festival chorus.

BATONEER — French conductor Pierre Moteux will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra Sunday at Tanglewood.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 448,828 SAT. 173,691
JUN 23 1961

Footlights and Spotlights

Academy Goes to the Symphony To Break Summer Lull in Music

By JACQUELINE RADIN,
World-Telegram Staff Writer.

In the summer the Boston Symphony Orchestra does not come to the Brooklyn Academy of Music so the Brooklyn Academy goes to the Boston Symphony.

For many years the world-famous symphony orchestra has stopped in Brooklyn five times during the winter season under the auspices of the Women's Committee for the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn.

For the past four years, to provide musical activity during the summer lull, the academy has run an annual "Sunday at Tanglewood," providing transportation, admission and lunch for Brooklynites eager to hear the Boston Symphony during its summer season in the Berkshires.

Some 1000 people have taken the trip since its inception. Until this year the New Haven Railroad was the mode of transportation. This year, for greater flexibility (a dinner stop on the way home has been added) and for insured air-conditioning, the trip will be made by bus on Sunday, July 23.

Pierre Monteux will conduct the orchestra in Respighi's Ancient Dances and Airs, DeFalla's Three-Cornerend Hat Dances and the Suite from Strauss' "Der Rosenkavalier." Violinist Isaac Stern will be guest soloist. He will play Giovanni Viotti's Concerto No. 22 and Bela Bartok's Violin Rhapsody.

ISAAC STERN

PIERRE MONTEAUX

...on Times 7/20/61

ISAAC STERN, WORLD RENOWNED VIOLINIST, will be soloist in a performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on Sunday, July 23, at 2:30 p.m. Pierre Monteux will conduct the orchestra as Mr. Stern plays the Viotti Concerto, No. 22, and the Bartok Violin Rhapsody.

First Tanglewood Performance Of "Gloria" Slated

Charles Munch conducts the 104-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Friday, July 21, at 8:30 p.m., and Saturday, July 22, at 8:30 p.m., and Pierre Monteux makes his first appearance at the 1961 Berkshire Festival to conduct the Orchestra Sunday afternoon, July 23, at 2:30.

Dr. Munch has designated the Friday concert to be given in honor of Gertrude Robinson Smith's 80th birthday. Miss Robinson Smith, who was instrumental in the formation of the Berkshire Festival and in the building of the Music Shed at Tanglewood, will attend the concert and will be presented with a specially made recording of the "Gloria" by Francis Poulenc.

The Poulenc "Gloria", — which won the New York Music Critics Circle Award, — was given its world premiere by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Miss Addison, this winter. It will receive its first Berkshire Festival performance at Friday's concert. The Friday program will also include the "Coriolan" Overture by Beethoven and Brahms' Symphony No. 1.

Violinist Isaac Stern will be soloist at the Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon concerts. On Saturday evening he will be heard in a performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto. At this concert Charles Munch will also conduct William Schuman's Symphony No. 7 — commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and first performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra — and the Overture to "Genoveva" by Robert Schumann.

At Sunday's concert, conducted by Pierre Monteux, Mr. Stern will perform two concerti: Viotti's Violin Concerto No. 22 and the Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra by Bartok. The concert will include "Antique Dances and Airs" by Respighi, the Dances from the "Three-Cornered Hat" by de Falla and the Suite from "Rosenkavalier" by Richard Strauss.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to these events this week at Tanglewood: The Berkshire Music Center Orchestra Thursday July 20, 8:30, in the Mucis Shed; Seminar in Contemporary Music Friday, July 21,

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Press (e)
MIDDLETOWN, Conn.
Circ. 17,729
JUL 19 1961

These Days

Some Birthday Parties

By GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY

Up here in the Berkshires at Tanglewood, in a couple of days, the 80th birthday of Gertrude Robinson Smith will be celebrated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and several thousand people. Gertrude Robinson Smith created Tanglewood, an altogether new concept in musical festivals. Her basic idea was that a musical festival in this country could maintain the highest standard, not compromising to bring crowds, and at no point reducing it to a bandstand in a park. On the whole, with rare exceptions, Tanglewood has been able to maintain its high quality. There is one night when all hell breaks loose and Arthur Fiedler does a Boston Pops concert but generally there has been no compromise.

Gertrude Robinson Smith will be 80 years old, which is ripe enough for these parts where the aged are numerous. However, there is very little age about Gertrude who has just flipped in from Paris and will undoubtedly spend a very busy summer entertaining and being entertained by the very many who love her and who recognize her devotion to music in its noblest forms. Tanglewood will ever be a monument to her organizational talents which age has not lessened.

Unfortunately I shall not be at her birthday party because I have promised to go to another that very night. And this one is for Lewis Rosenstiel who built the Schenley Corporation which sells whiskey and such matters. But he is perhaps more concerned with the economics of the world and the movement of gold and the perils of mankind in fiat money. Often a man's hobbies are more significant than what one does for his daily bread. And this is true of Rosenstiel although he likes to give the impression that his major concern is bottles and what goes into them.

Then next month in August I shall be celebrating the birthdays of two men whom I have come to love over the years. One is Herbert Hoover who will be 87 on August 10. I have known Herbert Hoover with some degree of intimacy for close to 30 years and during recent years I have lunched with him once a week, gathering from him such knowledge and wisdom as only such an encyclodepic mind and broad experience as his can possess.

Back in such years as 1933 and 1934, Hoover was deeply depressed. He was sensitive to the bitter and unjust attacks on him and perhaps by the fact that so many who owed their careers and perhaps fortunes to him, cut themselves off from him. However, time passed and Herbert Hoover went to work, turning out book after book, studying current conditions, travelling about the world on food problems, heading two commissions for the organization of the Executive branch of government and finally undertaking the massive research in the foreign policy of the United States since 1933—a task that will probably take him another year or two.

Buoyant, gay, full of the zest of life, Herbert Hoover is today a more exciting personality than he was when he was President. He has grown into a philosophic historian whose wisdom is above and beyond party. He is today the prototype of the American, born in poverty, on a farm in Iowa, working his way through college, becoming one of the country's leading engineers, and, having made his fortune and given the recognition and opportunity, devoted the rest of his life to public service.

Everyone says that it is so remarkable that Herbert Hoover has lived long enough to see the day when he is again recognized by his people as a beloved figure. But it does not matter to Herbert Hoover how long he has lived. What concerns him most is that there is so much left to do.

And then a few days later, many will recall kindly the birthday of that amazing personality, Bernard Baruch, who at 91 sits about discussing the affairs of the world in intimate detail, whose colossal memory is always a shock to younger men who remember so little. Bernard Baruch has lived long and he has served his country well.

His father, a Polish Jew, settled in Charleston, South Carolina where, as a physician, he served in the Confederate Army. Bernie's mother came of a family that had been in the United States several centuries. After the Civil War, the family moved to New York City where Dr. Baruch did the best he could to eke out a living for a large family. Bernard went to what is now the City College which made no charges. He has repaid the city a thousand-fold for his education. He became a stockbroker, earned a large fortune and when opportunity came in 1917, he entered upon a career of devotion to his country.

Baruch is often called "advisor to Presidents"—a meaningless title. His true greatness is that he has served his country men honorably and truthfully and has given the people sound economic advice.

Famous Guests at Tanglewood

EUGENE ORMANDY

AARON COPLAND

BYRON JANIS

Dr. Charles Munch has invited Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra; Aaron Copland, faculty chairman of the Berkshire Music Center; and Byron Janis, noted pianist, to be guests at Tanglewood Saturday, Friday and next Sunday, respectively.

Music

Pierre Monteux to Be Guest Conductor

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL—This evening's program at the Berkshire Festival in Lenox will be conducted by Dr. Charles Munch and will include Schumann's "Genoveva" Overture, Schuman's Symphony No. 7 and Beethoven's Violin Concerto with Isaac Stern as soloist.

Pierre Monteux

Tomorrow at 2:30 o'clock, the celebrated veteran of symphony and opera, Pierre Monteux will be the guest of Dr. Munch as conductor. Mr. Monteux has chosen Respighi's Antique Dances and Airs; the Violin Concerto No. 22 by Viotti, Three-Cornered Hat Dances, Bartok's Violin Rhapsody and the "Rosenkavalier" Suite by Strauss. Mr. Stern will be the violin soloist in the Viotti and Bartok compositions.

There will be a composer's forum in the Chamber Music hall Monday evening, and this will be followed by a program of one act operas on Tuesday. These will be in the Theater. A seminar in Contemporary music will be in session on Friday afternoon at 3:15 o'clock to be followed in the evening by a concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Charles Munch, conductor. The Festival chorus will assist and music by Copland and Ravel will be performed.

Word comes from Tel Aviv that an operatic program featuring Mozart's "Cosi fan Tutte" scored a tremendous success recently. It seems that the affair was conducted in as informal style as one could wish for. There was a crudely constructed stage, no scenery, only hats and makeup for props, but surrounding the platform were members of the Israel Philharmonic orchestra with Thomas Schippers serving as conductor. In the cast which included Rosalind Elias of this city, were other singers from the Met, among whom were, Gloria Davy, soprano; Laurel Hurley, soprano and Cesare Valletti, tenor. They were joined by non-Met singers, Armand McLane, baritone and Gimi Beni, bass.

Pablo Casals, Pierre Monteux, Dr. Charles Munch and Bruno Walter are the honorary chairmen for the Dimitri Mitropoulos International Music competition which will be held from Dec. 1 through Dec. 17, 1961, in New York City.

The 1961 competition will be for men and women pianists up to and through the age of 30. Those who will Not have attained their 31st birthday by Dec. 17, 1961, are eligible.

It has been said by countless people that when Dimitri Mitropoulos died, the world lost a great talent—and young musicians lost a great friend.

As countless young artists can testify, Mitropoulos, in spite of the most taxing schedule, always found time for kindness, advice, and an open purse.

To honor him, the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies has announced the establishment of the Dimitri Mitropoulos International Music competition for young artists.

Tanglewood Artists

The Lenox Quartet will present a concert of contemporary music in the theater at Tanglewood Saturday afternoon at 3. From the left the former Berkshire Music Center students are Donald McCall, violincello, Theodora Mantz, violin, Paul Hersh, viola, and Peter Marsh, violin. The program will include works by Kirchner, Schoenberg and Carter.

Tangelwood Topics

Eugene Ormandy, famed conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra for the past 25 years and inveterate world traveler, has refused many requests for his services this summer in order to have an extended vacation with Mrs. Ormandy at their Berkshire County estate. Mr. Ormandy has accepted only one summer engagement and that is to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood next Saturday evening.

Charles Munch has invited Mr. Ormandy to conduct at the Berkshire Festival not only because of Mr. Ormandy's international fame but because of the personal admiration which exists between the two gentlemen; Mr. Ormandy has made exception to this decision of no summer concerts in order to accept his friend's invitation. In the past Mr. Ormandy has conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra several times in Boston—and Dr. Munch has been guest conductor of the Phildelphia Orchestra in Philadelphia — but the Tanglewood concert Saturday will mark Mr. Ormandy's first appearance at the Berkshire Festival.

* * *

Noah Greenberg and his New York Pro Musica return to Tanglewood Wednesday evening to give a program of early Renaissance music for vocal and instrumental ensembles as the fourth concert of the 1961 Berkshire Festival's chamber music series.

For their Tanglewood concert the New York Pro Musica—consisting of six vocalists and four instrumentalists—will perform works by Heinrich Isaac, Ludwig Senfl and Orlando Lassus, and from the Glogauer Liederbuch.

HACKENSACK, N.J.
RECORD
D. 96,806
AUG 5 1961

Tanglewood Founder

Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees, and Charles Munch, conductor of the orchestra, were joined by the public in an appropriate tribute lately at their Tanglewood summer headquarters in Lenox, Mass. Honored on her eightieth birthday was Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, at whose home in nearby Stockbridge plans for a summer festival were drawn in the mid-'30s, even before the Boston Symphony was part of the project. It was through the vigor, foresight, and generosity of Miss Robinson Smith, that the marks of permanence were put on Tanglewood—first by persuading the Boston Symphony Orchestra to become a part of the enterprise, then by leading a campaign to provide a permanent shed for its use.

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122

JUL 16 1961

106

Artists Rehearse for Tanglewood Concerts

These scenes were taken at rehearsal sessions of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood in preparation for the concerts to be presented on Saturday and Sunday. At left, Violinist Isaac Stern rehearses with Conductor Dr. Charles Munch. At right, Pierre Monteux, guest conductor, holds up rehearsals for a moment of reflection. Mr. Stern will be soloist both Saturday and Sunday with the orchestra at Tanglewood. Dr. Munch will conduct Friday and Saturday evening performances and M. Monteux will conduct the Sunday matinee concert.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

JUL 17 1961

Her 80th Birthday

BSO Concert in Shed Friday To Honor Miss Robinson Smith

TANGLEWOOD — The major concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed will open Friday night. Dr. Charles Munch, musical director of the BSO, has designated that concert in honor of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith's 80th birthday.

Miss Robinson Smith, founder of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and its only president since its establishment in 1934 until the organization dissolved in 1955, is responsible for spearheading the drive for $100,000 to build the Music Shed where the Boston Symphony Orchestra has performed since 1937 when Mrs. Gorham Brooks made a gift of the Tanglewood property to the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the BSO.

Although her birthday was July 13, Dr. Munch and BSO officials delayed making formal recognition of it until Friday, the first of the so-called big concerts in the Shed and the first of the Friday Berkshire Nights series.

Miss Robinson Smith, who is now at her summer home, the Residence, in Glendale, spent the winter in Paris.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith

Special Recording

At Friday night's concert, she will be presented a specially made recording of Francis Poulenc's "Gloria."

The composition, which won the New York Music Critics Circle Award, was given its world premiere by Dr. Munch and the BSO with Miss Adele Addison as soloist, last winter at Carnegie Hall in New York. It will receive its first Berkshire Festival performance at Friday's concert. The Friday program will also include the "Coriolan" Overture by Beethoven and Brahms' Symphony No. 1.

Stern Soloist Saturday

Violinist Isaac Stern will be soloist at the Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon concerts. On Saturday evening he will be heard in a performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto. At this concert Dr. Munch will also conduct William Schuman's Symphony No. 7—commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and first performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra—and the overture to "Genoveva" by Robert Schumann.

At Sunday's concert, conducted by Pierre Monteux, Mr. Stern will perform two concerti: Viotti's Violin Concerto No. 22 and the Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra by Bartok. The concert will include "Antique Dances and Airs" by Respighi, the dances from the "Three-Cornered Hat" by de Falla and the suite from "Rosenkavalier" by Richard Strauss.

The third concert of the annual Tanglewood chamber music series will be given by the Beaux Arts Trio of New York in the Theater Wednesday evening at 8:30. The trio will perform Chausson's Trio in G minor, Op. 3, instead of the originally announced Trio by Roussel, plus Beethoven's Trio in G major, Op. 1, No. 2, and the Trio in B-flat major, Op. 99, by Schubert.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to five events this week at Tanglewood: composer's forum, tonight at 8:30, in the Chamber Music Hall; the Tanglewood choir, tomorrow at 8:30, in the Theater; the Berkshire Music Center orchestra Thursday at 8:30, in the Music Shed; seminar in contemporary music Friday, 3:15, in the Chamber Music Hall; and Berkshire Music Center chamber music Sunday morning at 10 in the Chamber Music Hall.

Pierre Monteux Makes Season Debut at Festival

Noted Conducter Returns to Tanglewood for Matinee Performance Next Sunday

LENOX—Charles Munch conducts the 104-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Friday and Saturday evenings at 8.30 and Pierre Monteux makes his first appearance at the 1961 Berkshire Festival to conduct the orchestra Sunday afternoon at 2.30 p. m. Dr. Munch has designated the Friday concert to be given in honor of Gertrude Robinson Smith's 80th birthday. Miss Robinson Smith, who was instrumental in the formation of the Berkshire Festival and in the building of the Music Shed at Tanglewood, will attend the concert and will be presented with a specially made recording of the "Gloria" by Francis Poulenc.

"Gloria" Performed

The Poulenc "Gloria" — which won the New York Music Critics Circle Award — was given its world premiere by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Miss Addison, this winter; it will receive its first Berkshire Festival performance at Friday's concert. The Friday program will also include the "Coriolan" Overture by Beethoven and Brahms' Symphony No. 1.

Violinist Isaac Stern will be soloist at the Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon concerts. On Saturday evening he will be heard in a performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto. At this concert Dr. Munch will also conduct William Schuman's Symphony No. 7—commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and first performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra — and the Overture to "Genoveva" by Robert Schumann.

At Sunday's concert, conducted by Pierre Monteux, Mr. Stern will perform two concerti: Viotti's Violin Concerto No. 22 and the Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra by Bartok. The concert will include "Antique Dances and Airs" by Respighi, the Dances from the "Three-Cornered Hat" by de Falla and the Suite from "Rosenkavalier" by Richard Strauss.

Beaux Arts Trio

The third concert of the annual Tanglewood chamber music series will be given by the Beaux Arts Trio of New York in the theater Wednesday evening at 8.30. The trio will perform Chausson's Trio in G minor, Op. 3, instead of the originally announced Trio by Roussel, plus Beethoven's Trio in G major, Op. 1, No. 2, and the Trio in B-flat major, Op. 99, by Schubert.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to five events this week at Tanglewood: Composer's Forum, Monday, 8.30 p. m. in the Chamber Music Hall; the Tanglewood Choir, Tuesday, 8.30 p. m. in the theater; the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra Thursday at 8.30 p. m. in the Music Shed; Seminar in Contemporary Music Friday at 3.15 p. m. in the Chamber Music Hall; and Berkshire Music Center Chamber Music Sunday morning, the 23d, 10 a. m., in the Chamber Music Hall.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

JUL 21 1961

Whitestone

ISAAC STERN, violin soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed at Tanglewood tomorrow night and Sunday afternoon, rehearses tomorrow's program with Charles Munch conducting. Sunday afternoon Pierre Monteux will conduct at BSO concert.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News
WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,700
JUL 20 1961

Monteux Makes 1st Tanglewood AppearanceSun.

Charles Munch conducts the 104-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood tomorrow (Friday) night at 8:30 and Saturday night and Pierre Monteux makes his first appearance at the 1961 Berkshire Festival to conduct the Orchestra Sunday afternoon at 2:30.

Doctor Munch has designated the Friday concert to be given in honor of Gertrude Robinson Smith's 80th birthday. Miss Robinson Smith, who was instrumental in the formation of the Berkshire Festival and in the building of the Music Shed at Tanglewood, will attend the concert and will be presented with a specially made recording of the "Gloria" by Francis Poulenc. The program will also include the "Coriolan" Overture by Beethoven and Brahms' Symphony No. 1.

Violinist Isaac Stern will be soloist at the Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon concerts. On Saturday evening he will be heard in a performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto. At this concert Charles Munch will also conduct William Schumann's Symphony No. 7—commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and first performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra—and the Overture to "Genoveva" by Robert Schumann.

At Sunday's concert, conducted by Pierre Monteux, Mr. Stern will perform two concerti: Viotti's Violin Concerto No. 22 and the Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra by Bartok. The concert will include "Antique Dances and Airs" by Respighi, the Dances from the "Three-Cornered Hat" by de Falla and the Suite from "Rosenkavalier" by Richard Strauss.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to several events this week-end at Tanglewood: the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra tonight (Thursday) at 8:30, in the Music Shed; Seminar in Contemporary Music tomorrow at 3:15, in the Chamber Music Hall; and Berkshire Music Center Chamber Music Sunday morning at 10:00 a.m. in the Chamber Music Hall.

PIERRE MONTEUX

HACKENSACK, N.J.
RECORD
D. 86,806
JUL 15 1961

Monteux To Conduct Tanglewood Program

CHARLES MUNCH will conduct the 104-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) Friday and next Saturday evenings. Pierre Monteux will make his first appearance at the 1961 Berkshire Festival to conduct the Orchestra next Sunday afternoon, July 23, at 2:30.

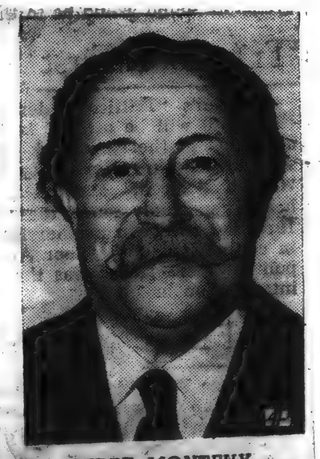
Dr. Munch has designated the Friday concert to be given in honor of Gertrude Robinson Smith's eightieth birthday. Miss Robinson Smith, who was instrumental in the formation of the Berkshire Festival and in the building of the Music Shed at Tanglewood, will attend the concert and will be presented with a specially made recording of the "Gloria" by Francis Poulenc.

The Poulenc "Gloria" — which won the New York Music Critics Circle Award — was given its world premiere by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Miss Addison, this winter; it will receive its first Berkshire Festival performance at Friday's concert. The Friday program also will include the "Coriolan" Overture by Beethoven and Brahms's "Symphony No. 1".

Violinist Isaac Stern will be soloist at the Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon concerts. On Sunday evening he will be heard in a performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto. At this concert Charles Munch will also conduct William Schuman's "Symphony No. 7" — commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and first performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra — and the Overture to "Genoveva" by Robert Schumann.

At Sunday's concert, conducted by Pierre Monteux, Stern will perform two concerti: Viotti's Violin Concerto No. 22 and the Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra by Bartok. The concert will include "Antique Dances and Airs" by Respighi, the Dances from the "Three-Cornered Hat" by de Falla, and the Suite from "Rosenkavalier" by Richard Strauss.

The third concert of the annual Tanglewood chamber music series will be given by the Beaux Arts Trio of New York in the theater Wednesday at 8:30 P. M. The Trio will perform Chausson's Trio in G minor, Op. 3, instead of the originally announced Trio by Roussel, plus Beethoven's Trio in G major, Op. 1, No. 2, and the Trio in B-flat major, Op. 99, by Schubert.



PIERRE MONTEUX

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 153,116
JUL 16 1961

TANGLEWOOD SOLOIST: Isaac Stern, world renowned violinist, will be soloist in a performance of the Beethoven Violin Concert. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a Saturday evening concert at 8:30 in the Music Shed. Mr. Stern, with Pierre Monteux conducting the Boston Symphony, will be soloist twice on the program for Sunday afternoon (July 23, 2:30). He will play the Viotti Concerto No. 22, and the Bartok Violin Rhapsody.

Exciting Music Scheduled This Week at Tanglewood

Charles Munch conducts the 104-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) Friday (July 21, 8:30) and Saturday (July 22, 8:30) evenings and Pierre Monteux makes his first appearance at the 1961 Berkshire Festival to conduct the Orchestra Sunday afternoon (July 23, 2:30).

Doctor Munch has designated the Friday concert to be given in honor of Gertrude Robinson Smith's 80th birthday. Miss Robinson Smith, who was instrumental in the formation of the Berkshire Festival and in the building of the Music Shed at Tanglewood, will attend the concert and will be presented with a specially made recording of the "Gloria" by Francis Poulenc.

The Poulenc "Gloria" — which won the New York Music Critics Circle Award — was given its world premiere by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Miss Addison, this winter; it will receive its first Berkshire Festival performance at Friday's concert. The Friday program will also include the "Coriolan" Overture by Beethoven and Brahms' Symphony No. 1.

Stern to Solo

Violinist Isaac Stern will be soloist at the Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon concerts. On Saturday evening he will be heard in a performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto. At this concert Charles Munch will also conduct William Schuman's Symphony No. 7 — commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and first performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra — and the Overture to "Genoveva" by Robert Schumann.

At Sunday's concert, conducted by Pierre Monteux, Stern will perform two concerti: Viotti's Violin Concerto No. 22 and the Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra by Bartok. The concert will include "Antique Dances and Airs" by Respighi, the Dances from the "Three-Cornered Hat" by de Falla and the Suite from "Rosenkavalier" by Richard Strauss.

The third concert of the annual Tanglewood chamber music series will be given by the Beaux Arts Trio of New York in the Theater Wednesday evening (July 19, 8:30). The Trio will perform Chausson's Trio in G minor, Op. 3, instead of the originally announced Trio by Roussel, plus Beethoven's Trio in G major, Op. 1, No. 2, and the Trio in B-flat major, Op. 99, by Schubert.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to five events this week at Tanglewood: Composer's Forum, Monday, July 17, 8:30, in the Chamber Music Hall; the Tanglewood Choir, Tuesday, July 18, 8:30, in the Theatre; the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra Thursday July 20, 8:30, in the Music Shed; Seminar in Contemporary Music Friday, July 21, 3:15, in the Chamber Music Hall; and Berkshire Music Center Chamber Music Sunday morning, July 23, 10:00 a.m., in the Chamber Music Hall.

PIERRE MONTEUX TO CONDUCT BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA AT BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL at Tanglewood on Sunday afternoon, July 23, the day of the one-day excursion sponsored by The Brooklyn Academy of Music.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News
WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,700
JUL 20 1961

Monteux Makes 1st Tanglewood AppearanceSun.

Charles Munch conducts the 104-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood tomorrow (Friday) night at 8:30 and Saturday night and Pierre Monteux makes his first appearance at the 1961 Berkshire Festival to conduct the Orchestra Sunday afternoon at 2:30.

Doctor Munch has designated the Friday concert to be given in honor of Gertrude Robinson Smith's 80th birthday. Miss Robinson Smith, who was instrumental in the formation of the Berkshire Festival and in the building of the Music Shed at Tanglewood, will attend the concert and will be presented with a specially made recording of the "Gloria" by Francis Poulenc. The program will also include the "Coriolan" Overture by Beethoven and Brahms' Symphony No. 1.

Violinist Isaac Stern will be soloist at the Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon concerts. On Saturday evening he will be heard in a performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto. At this concert Charles Munch will also conduct William Schumann's Symphony No. 7—commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and first performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra—and the Overture to "Genoveva" by Robert Schumann.

At Sunday's concert, conducted by Pierre Monteux, Mr. Stern will perform two concerti: Viotti's Violin Concerto No. 22 and the Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra by Bartok. The concert will include "Antique Dances and Airs" by Respighi, the Dances from the "Three-Cornered Hat" by de Falla and the Suite from "Rosenkavalier" by Richard Strauss.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to several events this week-end at Tanglewood: the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra tonight (Thursday) at 8:30, in the Music Shed; Seminar in Contemporary Music tomorrow at 3:15, in the Chamber Music Hall; and Berkshire Music Center Chamber Music Sunday morning at 10:00 a.m. in the Chamber Music Hall.

PIERRE MONTEUX

HACKENSACK, N.J.
RECORD
D. 96,806
JUL 15 1961

Monteux To Conduct Tanglewood Program

CHARLES MUNCH will conduct the 104-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) Friday and next Saturday evenings. Pierre Monteux will make his first appearance at the 1961 Berkshire Festival to conduct the Orchestra next Sunday afternoon, July 23, at 2:30.

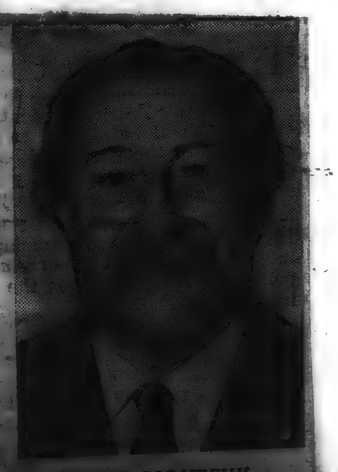
Dr. Munch has designated the Friday concert to be given in honor of Gertrude Robinson Smith's eightieth birthday. Miss Robinson Smith, who was instrumental in the formation of the Berkshire Festival and in the building of the Music Shed at Tanglewood, will attend the concert and will be presented with a specially made recording of the "Gloria" by Francis Poulenc.

The Poulenc "Gloria" — which won the New York Music Critics Circle Award — was given its world premiere by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Miss Addison, this winter; it will receive its first Berkshire Festival performance at Friday's concert. The Friday program also will include the "Coriolan" Overture by Beethoven and Brahms's "Symphony No. 1".

Violinist Isaac Stern will be soloist at the Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon concerts. On Sunday evening he will be heard in a performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto. At this concert Charles Munch will also conduct William Schuman's "Symphony No. 7" — commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and first performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra — and the Overture to "Genoveva" by Robert Schumann.

At Sunday's concert, conducted by Pierre Monteux, Stern will perform two concerti: Viotti's Violin Concerto No. 22 and the Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra by Bartok. The concert will include "Antique Dances and Airs" by Respighi, the Dances from the "Three-Cornered Hat" by de Falla, and the Suite from "Rosenkavalier" by Richard Strauss.

The third concert of the annual Tanglewood chamber music series will be given by the Beaux Arts Trio of New York in the theater Wednesday at 8:30 P. M. The Trio will perform Chausson's Trio in G minor, Op. 3, instead of the originally announced Trio by Roussel, plus Beethoven's Trio in G major, Op. 1, No. 2, and the Trio in B-flat major, Op. 99, by Schubert.



PIERRE MONTEUX

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 153,116
JUL 16 1961

TANGLEWOOD SOLOIST: Isaac Stern, world renowned violinist, will be soloist in a performance of the Beethoven Violin Concert. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a Saturday evening concert at 8:30 in the Music Shed. Mr. Stern, with Pierre Monteux conducting the Boston Symphony, will be soloist twice on the program for Sunday afternoon (July 23, 2:30). He will play the Viotti Concerto No. 22, and the Bartok Violin Rhapsody.

Exciting Music Scheduled This Week at Tanglewood

Charles Munch conducts the 104-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) Friday (July 21, 8:30) and Saturday (July 22, 8:30) evenings and Pierre Monteux makes his first appearance at the 1961 Berkshire Festival to conduct the Orchestra Sunday afternoon (July 23, 2:30).

Doctor Munch has designated the Friday concert to be given in honor of Gertrude Robinson Smith's 80th birthday. Miss Robinson Smith, who was instrumental in the formation of the Berkshire Festival and in the building of the Music Shed at Tanglewood, will attend the concert and will be presented with a specially made recording of the "Gloria" by Francis Poulenc.

The Poulenc "Gloria" — which won the New York Music Critics Circle Award — was given its world premiere by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Miss Addison, this winter; it will receive its first Berkshire Festival performance at Friday's concert. The Friday program will also include the "Coriolan" Overture by Beethoven and Brahms' Symphony No. 1.

Stern to Solo

Violinist Isaac Stern will be soloist at the Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon concerts. On Saturday evening he will be heard in a performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto. At this concert Charles Munch will also conduct William Schuman's Symphony No. 7 — commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and first performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra — and the Overture to "Genoveva" by Robert Schumann.

At Sunday's concert, conducted by Pierre Monteux, Stern will perform two concerti: Viotti's Violin Concerto No. 22 and the Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra by Bartok. The concert will include "Antique Dances and Airs" by Respighi, the Dances from the "Three-Cornered Hat" by de Falla and the Suite from "Rosenkavalier" by Richard Strauss.

The third concert of the annual Tanglewood chamber music series will be given by the Beaux Arts Trio of New York in the Theater Wednesday evening (July 19, 8:30). The Trio will perform Chausson's Trio in G minor, Op. 3, instead of the originally announced Trio by Roussel, plus Beethoven's Trio in G major, Op. 1, No. 2, and the Trio in B-flat major, Op. 99, by Schubert.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to five events this week at Tanglewood: Composer's Forum, Monday, July 17, 8:30, in the Chamber Music Hall; the Tanglewood Choir, Tuesday, July 18, 8:30, in the Theatre; the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra Thursday July 20, 8:30, in the Music Shed; Seminar in Contemporary Music Friday, July 21, 3:15, in the Chamber Music Hall; and Berkshire Music Center Chamber Music Sunday morning, July 23, 10:00 a.m., in the Chamber Music Hall.

PIERRE MONTEUX TO CONDUCT BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA AT BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL at Tanglewood on Sunday afternoon, July 23, the day of the one-day excursion sponsored by The Brooklyn Academy of Music.

TOS
705 Church Street - New York
MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
SEP 1961

LENOX, MASS.

Monteux at Tanglewood

It is always a keen pleasure to watch Pierre Monteux at work again with the Boston Symphony, even though the job in hand is the regeneration of a fairly routine program. The Sunday I caught him at Tanglewood, the men played their Sunday best for him, in spite of the shirtsleeves heat and a treacherous humidity that made their pitch pegs slip.

PIERRE MONTEUX during rehearsal at Tanglewood. A report on his concert is included in this issue and also a story (page 4) of his being named conductor of the London Symphony.

The opening suite, Respighi's Old Dances and Airs for Lute, showed a subtlety which justified the translation of these miniatures to the velvet realm of the symphony.

When Monteux accompanied Isaac Stern in Viotti's A minor Violin Concerto, he made an unequal match, unfortunately, with the soloist's determination to translate this trifle of chamber ensemble into another Tschaikovsky vehicle for the violin. But here again we might explain the scoops and slurs by a humidity which spread like dew over musicians and listeners alike.

— ROBERT DUMM

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 21 1961

Major Concerts Open Tonight For First of Five Weekends

TANGLEWOOD—The major concerts of the Berkshire Festival will open in the Music Shed tonight and continue for the next five weekends.

This evening's program, starting at 8:30, will be given by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in honor of the 80th birthday of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of Stockbridge, founder of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in 1934.

At intermission, Miss Robinson Smith will be publicly honored on the stage when Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orcehstra will present to her a specially made recording of Francis Poulenc's "Gloria," which the BSO will perform tonight with the Festival Chorus and Miss Adele Addison, soloist. The program will open with Beethoven's "Coriolan" Overture, followed by Brahms' Symphony No. 1 and after intermission, Poulenc's "Gloria."

Isaac Stern will be the violin soloist with the BSO at tomorrow night's concert and again Sunday afternoon. Dr. Munch will conduct the Saturday concert and Pierre Monteux will lead the orchestra Sunday afternoon in his first appearance at Tanglewood this season.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUL 20 1961

Student Soloist Tonight at Music Center, Tanglewood

Tonight's Berkshire Music Center Orchestra concert at Tanglewood will feature the first student soloist of the season. Isidor Saslov of Detroit, Mich., will be heard in a performance of Prokofieff's Violin Concerto No. 1 in D major, Op. 19. Serge Fornier will conduct this part of the program.

Roland Chagnon of Paris, France, will be the conductor in the orchestra's presentation of the Mother Goose Suite by Ravel. The orchestra will conclude with a complete reading of Dvorak's Symphony No. 5, Op. 95, "From the New World." Abraham Kaplan of New York City, a member of the Berkshire Music Center's active conducting class, is to lead the students in the first movement of the Dvorak work. Eleazar de Carvalho, head of the Music Center's Department of Instrumental Music, will direct the students in the final three movements of the symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 18 1961

Opera Scenes At Tanglewood Thursday at 4

TANGLEWOOD — Boris Goldovsky, head of the Berkshire Music Center's opera department, has announced a special program of opera scenes to be given in the theatre on Thursday at 4 p.m. This will be the first performance by members of the opera department this season.

Mr. Goldovsky has stated that the program is subject to change but he has tentatively scheduled scenes from Mozart's Cosi Fan Tutte and the Marcellina-Susanna Duet and the Letter Duet from Figaro.

Also included in this special program will be the Septet from Don Giovanni, the Duet from Act II of La Traviata, and scenes from Aida and Carmen.

This event will be presented under the auspices of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Voluntary donations made to the Friends augment the scholarship funds of the Music Center.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUL 18 1961

Tanglewood Choir To Present First Concert Tonight

The Tanglewood Choir will present its first concert of the season tonight at 8:30 o'clock in the theater. The choir, under the general direction of Alfred Nash Patterson of the Berkshire Music Center Choral Department, will sing works which range from the early Renaissance to contemporary music.

The program will begin with the Jubilate Deo by Gabrieli conducted by David Fox of Newton, Massachusetts. Christe, qui Lux by Byrde and "Wer sind diese" by Melchior Franck will be conducted by Bennet Penn who is from Louisville, Kentucky. Mr. Patterson will direct Monteverdi's group of madrigals: "Ere yet the dawn had come," "Then the first one spoke," and "Cruel Amaryllis."

Stewart Raleigh, Syracuse, New York will be the conductor of Jan Meyerowitz' Eternitie scored for chorus, wind and brass instruments. Mr. Meyerowitz wrote the music for the opera "Port Town" which received its premiere performance at Tanglewood in 1960.

Hugh Ross, head of the Choral Department, will conduct his students in Rubbra's Missa in Honorem Sancti Dominici. Talmon Herz, who is from Tel-Aviv, Israel will direct two works by William Schuman: Four Rounds on Famous Words and Carols of Death. Mr. Schuman is President of the Julliard School of Music, and will be at Tanglewood this week for the performance of his Symphony No. 7 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its regular concert on Saturday, July 22.

Two works to be conducted by Seymour Schonberg of New York City will conclude the Choir's initial program. Mr. Schonberg will direct Borowski's Elegy and Ralph Vaughan Williams' O Clap Your Hands.

This concert is another in the series presented by the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 18 1961

Choral Concert Set for Tonight At Tanglewood

The Tanglewood Choir will present its first concert of the season tonight at 8:30 in the Theater. The choir, under the general direction of Alfred Nash Patterson of the Berkshire Music Center Choral Department, will sing works which range from the early Renaissance to contemporary music.

The program will begin with the Jubilate Deo by Gabrieli conducted by David Fox of Newton. "Christe, qui Lux" by Byrde and "Wer sind diese" by Melchior Franck will be conducted by Bennet Penn who is from Louisville, Ky. Mr. Patterson will direct Monteverdi's group of madrigals: "Ere yet the dawn had come," "Then the first one spoke," and "Cruel Amaryllis."

Other Numbers

Stewart Raleigh, Syracuse, N.Y. will be the conductor of Jan Meyerowitz' "Eternitie," scored for chorus, wind and brass instrumentts. Mr. Meyerowitz wrote the music for the opera "Port Town," which received its premiere performance at Tanglewood in 1960.

Hugh Ross, head of the Choral Department, will conduct his students in Rubbra's "Missa in Honorem Sancti Dominici." Talmon Herz, who is from Tel-Aviv, Israel, will direct two works by William Schuman: "Four Rounds on Famous Words and Carols of Death." Mr. Schuman is president of the Juilliard School of Music, and will be at Tanglewood this week for the performance of his Symphony No. 7 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its regular concert on Saturday.

This concert is another in the series presented by the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUL 20 1961

3 Works Sunday In Student Concert

Three works are to be performed at the Sunday morning student chamber music concert. This program will be presented at 10 a.m. in the Chamber Music Hall at Tanglewood.

Opening the concert will be the Beethoven Trio, Op. 11 which has been coached by Samuel Mayes, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Roger Voisin, principal trumpet of the Boston Symphony, has coached the Wind Quintet of Ingolf Dahl. For many years Mr. Dahl was head of the Tanglewood Study Group, the predecessor of the current Listening and Analysis Department. Following the Dahl work will be Cesar Franck's Piano Quintet which has been prepared under the direction of William Kroll, Associate Head of the Chamber Music Department.

This concert and that of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra are presented by the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Courier
GT. BARRINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,564
JUL 20 1961

LENOX QUARTET TO PERFORM JULY 29

Special Concert at Tanglewood Will Be Open to Public

The Lenox Quartet will present a special concert of contemporary music at Tanglewood on Saturday, July 29, at 5:00 p.m. The Berkshire Music Center has stated that this concert will be open to the public.

Brought together three years ago as the string contingent of the Fromm Players at Tanglewood, the Lenox Quartet has received wide critical acclaim for its performances of contemporary music. Aaron Copland, head of the Department of Composition at the Berkshire Music Center, described the group as "one of the leading groups in the profession." Following its New York concert last December, the quartet received excellent notices from the press.

Members of the Lenox Quartet are: Peter Marsh and Theodora Mantz, violins; Paul Harsh, viola; and Donald McCall, violincello. Their program will include the Quartet No. 1 (1949) by Leon Kirchner, who was composer in residence during the 1959 and 1960 sessions of the Berkshire Music Center. Also to be heard is Arnold Schoenberg's String Trio Op. 45, and following intermission the concert will close with Elliot Carter's Quartet No. 2 (1959).

TOR

155 Church Street - New York
MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
SEP 1961

LENOX, MASS.

Monteux at Tanglewood

It is always a keen pleasure to watch Pierre Monteux at work again with the Boston Symphony, even though the job in hand is the regeneration of a fairly routine program. The Sunday I caught him at Tanglewood, the men played their Sunday best for him, in spite of the shirtsleeves heat and a treacherous humidity that made their pitch pegs slip.

PIERRE MONTEUX during rehearsal at Tanglewood. A report on his concert is included in this issue and also a story (page 4) of his being named conductor of the London Symphony.

The opening suite, Respighi's Old Dances and Airs for Lute, showed a subtlety which justified the translation of these miniatures to the velvet realm of the symphony.

When Monteux accompanied Isaac Stern in Viotti's A minor Violin Concerto, he made an unequal match, unfortunately, with the soloist's determination to translate this trifle of chamber ensemble into another Tschaikovsky vehicle for the violin. But here again we might explain the scoops and slurs by a humidity which spread like dew over musicians and listeners alike.

— ROBERT DUMM

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 21 1961

Major Concerts Open Tonight For First of Five Weekends

TANGLEWOOD—The major concerts of the Berkshire Festival will open in the Music Shed tonight and continue for the next five weekends.

This evening's program, starting at 8:30, will be given by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in honor of the 20th birthday of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of Stockbridge, founder of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in 1934.

At intermission, Miss Robinson Smith will be publicly honored on the stage when Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orcehstra will present to her a specially made recording of Francis Poulenc's "Gloria," which the BSO will perform tonight with the Festival Chorus and Miss Adele Addison, soloist. The program will open with Beethoven's "Coriolan" Overture, followed by Brahms' Symphony No. 1 and after intermission, Poulenc's "Gloria."

Isaac Stern will be the violin soloist with the BSO at tomorrow night's concert and again Sunday afternoon. Dr. Munch will conduct the Saturday concert and Pierre Monteux will lead the orchestra Sunday afternoon in his first appearance at Tanglewood this season.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUL 20 1961

Student Soloist Tonight at Music Center, Tanglewood

Tonight's Berkshire Music Center Orchestra concert at Tanglewood will feature the first student soloist of the season. Isidor Saslov of Detroit, Mich., will be heard in a performance of Prokofieff's Violin Concerto No. 1 in D major, Op. 19. Serge Fernier will conduct this part of the program.

Roland Chagnon of Paris, France, will be the conductor in the orchestra's presentation of the Mother Goose Suite by Ravel. The orchestra will conclude with a complete reading of Dvorak's Symphony No. 5, Op. 95, "From the New World." Abraham Kaplan of New York City, a member of the Berkshire Music Center's active conducting class, is to lead the students in the first movement of the Dvorak work. Eleazar de Carvalho, head of the Music Center's Department of Instrumental Music, will direct the students in the final three movements of the symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 18 1961

Opera Scenes At Tanglewood Thursday at 4

TANGLEWOOD — Boris Goldovsky, head of the Berkshire Music Center's opera department, has announced a special program of opera scenes to be given in the theatre on Thursday at 4 p.m. This will be the first performance by members of the opera department this season.

Mr. Goldovsky has stated that the program is subject to change but he has tentatively selected scenes from Mozart's Cosi fan Tutte and the Marcellina-Susanna Duet and the Letter Duet from Figaro.

Also included in this special program will be the Septet from Don Giovanni, the Duet from Act II of La Traviata, and scenes from Aida and Carmen.

This event will be presented under the auspices of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Voluntary donations made to the Friends augment the scholarship funds of the Music Center.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUL 18 1961

Tanglewood Choir To Present First Concert Tonight

The Tanglewood Choir will present its first concert of the season tonight at 8:30 o'clock in the theater. The choir, under the general direction of Alfred Nash Patterson of the Berkshire Music Center Choral Department, will sing works which range from the early Renaissance to contemporary music.

The program will begin with the Jubilate Deo by Gabrieli conducted by David Fox of Newton, Massachusetts. Christe, qui Lux by Byrde and "Wer sind diese" by Melchior Franck will be conducted by Bennet Penn who is from Louisville, Kentucky. Mr. Patterson will direct Monteverdi's group of madrigals: "Ere yet the dawn had come," "Then the first one spoke," and "Cruel Amaryllis."

Stewart Raleigh, Syracuse, New York will be the conductor of Jan Meyerowitz' Eternitie scored for chorus, wind and brass instruments. Mr. Meyerowitz wrote the music for the opera "Port Town" which received its premiere performance at Tanglewood in 1960.

Hugh Ross, head of the Choral Department, will conduct his students in Rubbra's Missa in Honorem Sancti Dominici. Talmon Herz, who is from Tel-Aviv, Israel will direct two works by William Schuman: Four Rounds on Famous Words and Carols of Death. Mr. Schuman is President of the Julliard School of Music, and will be at Tanglewood this week for the performance of his Symphony No. 7 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its regular concert on Saturday, July 22.

Two works to be conducted by Seymour Schonberg of New York City will conclude the Choir's initial program. Mr. Schonberg will direct Borowski's Elegy and Ralph Vaughan Williams' O Clap Your Hands.

This concert is another in the series presented by the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 18 1961

Choral Concert Set for Tonight At Tanglewood

The Tanglewood Choir will present its first concert of the season tonight at 8:30 in the Theater. The choir, under the general direction of Alfred Nash Patterson of the Berkshire Music Center Choral Department, will sing works which range from the early Renaissance to contemporary music.

The program will begin with the Jubilate Deo by Gabrieli conducted by David Fox of Newton. "Christe, qui Lux" by Byrde and "Wer sind diese" by Melchior Franck will be conducted by Bennet Penn who is from Louisville, Ky. Mr. Patterson will direct Monteverdi's group of madrigals: "Ere yet the dawn had come," "Then the first one spoke," and "Cruel Amaryllis."

Other Numbers

Stewart Raleigh, Syracuse, N.Y. will be the conductor of Jan Meyerowitz' "Eternitie," scored for chorus, wind and brass instruments. Mr. Meyerowitz wrote the music for the opera "Port Town," which received its premiere performance at Tanglewood in 1960.

Hugh Ross, head of the Choral Department, will conduct his students in Rubbra's "Missa in Honorem Sancti Dominici." Talmon Herz, who is from Tel-Aviv, Israel will direct two works by William Schuman: "Four Rounds on Famous Words and Carols of Death." Mr. Schuman is president of the Juilliard School of Music, and will be at Tanglewood this week for the performance of his Symphony No. 7 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its regular concert on Saturday.

This concert is another in the series presented by the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUL 20 1961

3 Works Sunday In Student Concert

Three works are to be performed at the Sunday morning student chamber music concert. This program will be presented at 10 a.m. in the Chamber Music Hall at Tanglewood.

Opening the concert will be the Beethoven Trio, Op. 11 which has been coached by Samuel Mayes, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Roger Voisin, principal trumpet of the Boston Symphony, has coached the Wind Quintet of Ingolf Dahl. For many years Mr. Dahl was head of the Tanglewood Study Group, the predecessor of the current Listening and Analysis Department. Following the Dahl work will be Cesar Franck's Piano Quintet which has been prepared under the direction of William Kroll, Associate Head of the Chamber Music Department.

This concert and that of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra are presented by the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Courier
GT. BARRINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,564
JUL 20 1961

LENOX QUARTET TO PERFORM JULY 29

Special Concert at Tanglewood Will Be Open to Public

The Lenox Quartet will present a special concert of contemporary music at Tanglewood on Saturday, July 29, at 9:00 p.m. The Berkshire Music Center has stated that this concert will be open to the public.

Brought together three years ago as the string contingent of the Fromm Players at Tanglewood, the Lenox Quartet has received wide critical acclaim for its performances of contemporary music. Aaron Copland, head of the Department of Composition at the Berkshire Music Center, described the group as "one of the leading groups in the profession." Following its New York concert last December, the quartet received excellent notices from the press.

Members of the Lenox Quartet are: Peter Marsh and Theodora Mantz, violins; Paul Harsh, viola; and Donald McCall, violincello. Their program will include the Quartet No. 1 (1949) by Leon Kirchner, who was composer in residence during the 1959 and 1960 sessions of the Berkshire Music Center. Also to be heard is Arnold Schoenberg's String Trio Op. 45, and following intermission the concert will close with Elliot Carter's Quartet No. 2 (1959).

Theatre - Concert Hall — Tanglewood

SEVEN CONCERTS OF CHAMBER MUSIC

Wednesday Evenings at 8:30

July 19

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
CHARLES MUNCH
Music Director

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL 1961

Beaux Arts Trio

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York will present a concert of chamber music at Tanglewood Wednesday at 8.30 p. m. in the theater. The program will include works by Beethoven, Chausson and Schubert.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
JUL 20 1961

BEAUX ARTS TRIO SCORES AT FESTIVAL

1313 at Tanglewood Hail Performance by New York Group

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — There was excitement for all as the Beaux Arts Trio of New York played the third concert in the chamber music series Wednesday night before 1313 people. The trio has appeared here several times and always with great personal success. Its membership includes pianist Menahem Pressler, violinist Daniel Guilet and cellist Bernard Greenhouse.

Finely Moulded

Several years of association has moulded the group into a fine ensemble. Even Mr. Pressler, who in the early days was practically a trio in himself, has calmed down. But his intense feeling for the music is evident through his facial expressions. The trio is a fabulous technical group, each member a master of his instrument.

The recital opened with the Trio in G Major, Op. 3, No. 2, by Beethoven. It was given a highly sophisticated performance, a little too much so for Beethoven. Dynamically and expressively the performance was a gem, but some of the reality within the music seems lacking.

Chausson's Trio in G Minor, Op. 3, was a vehicle tailormade for this group. While it lacks the bravura and solidity of the concerto for quartet, solo violin and piano, it does have some stunning dramatic moments, swift changes of mood and flashes of brilliance. It was performed with consumate artistry, so much so that one was inclined to wish that the music had been more worthy of the performance.

Schubert Work Cheered

The final work on the program was Schubert's Trio in B Flat Major, Op. 99. This is quite possibly the best known trio as far as the general public is concerned. The trio contains some of the loveliest music Schubert ever wrote, ranging from the bouyant theme of the first movement through the beauty of the berceuse-like theme of the andante and the charm of the scherzo to the jollification of the final rondo.

Again one could admire the brilliance of the playing, the suave charm of the interpretation and the inclusion of the inherent feeling of earthiness which is in this music. All this was clearly revealed as the sweep of melody poured forth in an unobstructed stream.

The audience reaction was eloquent proof of the splendor of the performances. The famed New York Pro Musica will be heard July 26.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUL 18 1961

Beaux Arts Trio Will Give Third Chamber Concert

The third of the Tanglewood chamber music concert series will be given by the Beaux Arts Trio of New York in the theater at 8:30 tomorrow night. The trio will perform Chausson's Trio in G minor, Op. 3, Beethoven's Trio in G major, Op. 1, No. 2, and the Trio in B-flat major, Op. 99 by Schubert.

Friday and Saturday evening's at 8:30 Charles Munch will conduct the 104-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed, while Pierre Monteux will make his first appearance of the 1961 Berkshire Festival conducting the Orchestra on Sunday afternoon at 2:30.

The Friday night concert will be given in recognition of the 70th birthday of Gertrude Robinson Smith who will be present for the event. Miss Robinson Smith was instrumental in the formation of the Berkshire Festival and in the building of the Music Shed at Tanglewood. The program will include the "Gloria" by Francis Poulenc, which was given its world premiere this winter by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Also on the Friday program are Beethoven's "Coriolan" Overture and Brahms' Symphony No. 1.

Violinist Isaac Stern will be soloist at the Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon concerts. Saturday evening he will be heard in a performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto. At this concert Charles Munch will also conduct William Schuman's Symphony No. 7 and the Overture to "Genova" by Robert Schumann.

At Sunday's concert, conducted by Pierre Monteux, Mr. Stern will perform two concerti, Viotti's Violin Concerto No. 22 and the Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra by Bartok. The concert will include "Antique Dances and Airs" by Respighi, the Dances from the "Three-Cornered Hat" by DeFalla and the Suite from "Rosenkavalier" by Richard Strauss.

Theatre - Concert Hall — Tanglewood

SEVEN CONCERTS OF CHAMBER MUSIC

Wednesday Evenings at 8:30

July 19

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
CHARLES MUNCH
Music Director

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL 1961

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York will present a concert of chamber music at Tanglewood Wednesday at 8:30 p. m. in the theater. The program will include works by Beethoven, Chausson and Schubert.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
JUL 20 1961

BEAUX ARTS TRIO SCORES AT FESTIVAL

1313 at Tanglewood Hall Performance by New York Group

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — There was excitement for all as the Beaux Arts Trio of New York played the third concert in the chamber music series Wednesday night before 1313 people. The trio has appeared here several times and always with great personal success. Its membership includes pianist Menahem Pressler, violinist Daniel Guilet and cellist Bernard Greenhouse.

Finely Moulded

Several years of association has moulded the group into a fine ensemble. Even Mr. Pressler, who in the early days was practically a trio in himself, has calmed down. But his intense feeling for the music is evident through his facial expressions. The trio is a fabulous technical group, each member a master of his instrument.

The recital opened with the Trio in G Major, Op. 3, No. 2, by Beethoven. It was given a highly sophisticated performance, a little too much so for Beethoven. Dynamically and expressively the performance was a gem, but some of the reality within the music seems lacking.

Chausson's Trio in G Minor, Op. 3, was a vehicle tailor-made for this group. While it lacks the bravura and solidity of the concerto for quartet, solo violin and piano, it does have some stunning dramatic moments, swift changes of mood and flashes of brilliance. It was performed with consumate artistry, so much so that one was inclined to wish that the music had been more worthy of the performance.

Schubert Work Cheered

The final work on the program was Schubert's Trio in B Flat Major, Op. 99. This is quite possibly the best known trio as far as the general public is concerned. The trio contains some of the loveliest music Schubert ever wrote, ranging from the bouyant theme of the first movement through the beauty of the berceuse-like theme of the andante and the charm of the scherzo to the jollification of the final rondo.

Again one could admire the brilliance of the playing, the suave charm of the interpretation and the inclusion of the inherent feeling of earthiness which is in this music. All this was clearly revealed as the sweep of melody poured forth in an unobstructed stream.

The audience reaction was eloquent proof of the splendor of the performances. The famed New York Pro Musica will be heard July 2[illegible].

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUL 18 1961

Beaux Arts Trio Will Give Third Chamber Concert

The third of the Tanglewood chamber music concert series will be given by the Beaux Arts Trio of New York in the theater at 8:30 tomorrow night. The trio will perform Chausson's Trio in G minor, Op. 3, Beethoven's Trio in G major, Op. 1, No. 2, and the Trio in B-flat major, Op. 99 by Schubert.

Friday and Saturday evening's at 8:30 Charles Munch will conduct the 104-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed, while Pierre Monteux will make his first appearance of the 1961 Berkshire Festival conducting the Orchestra on Sunday afternoon at 2:30.

The Friday night concert will be given in recognition of the 90th birthday of Gertrude Robinson Smith who will be present for the event. Miss Robinson Smith was instrumental in the formation of the Berkshire Festival and in the building of the Music Shed at Tanglewood. The program will include the "Gloria" by Francis Poulenc, which was given its world premiere this winter by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Also on the Friday program are Beethoven's "Coriolan" Overture and Brahms' Symphony No. 1.

Violinist Isaac Stern will be soloist at the Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon concerts. Saturday evening he will be heard in a performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto. At this concert Charles Munch will also conduct William Schuman's Symphony No. 7 and the Overture to "Genova" by Robert Schumann.

At Sunday's concert, conducted by Pierre Monteux, Mr. Stern will perform two concerti, Viotti's Violin Concerto No. 22 and the Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra by Bartok. The concert will include "Antique Dances and Airs" by Respighi, the Dances from the "Three-Cornered Hat" by DeFalla and the Suite from "Rosenkavalier" by Richard Strauss.

PIANO TRIO IN G MAJOR, OP. 1, No. 2
By LUDWIG VAN BEETHOVEN (1770-1827)

It was in 1793, the year after Beethoven had established himself in Vienna, that he submitted the manuscripts of three trios for private performance at the house of his patron Prince Lichnowsky. Haydn was present, and the gathering of friends looked to him for his opinion. The old man approved the first two but had reservations about the third, in C minor, reservations which Beethoven did not take in good part. When Haydn, according to Ferdinand Ries, asked that Beethoven's name be published in the scores as "pupil of Haydn," Beethoven was quoted as refusing on the grounds that "although he had had some instruction from Haydn, he had never learned anything from him." This seems to have been true so far as lessons were concerned; that Beethoven was much indebted to the music of Haydn is evident in these trios and in many later works. It was two years afterwards that he gave the three trios (revised) to Artaria to be published as his Opus 1. He had undoubtedly brought a number of his manuscripts from Bonn, perhaps including sketches for these. Their publication was a wise choice for they at once proved popular.

The Second, unlike its mates, has a slow introduction. Here and in the Allegro of the first movement, the piano has the traditional forefront of attention. Only in the sustained song of the Largo con espressione does the violin carry the main burden of the melody, while the cello has an echoing voice. The swift Finale, in sonata form, brings full play for all.

PIANO TRIO IN G MINOR, OP. 3
By ERNEST CHAUSSON (1855-1899)

Like the other pupils of César Franck, Ernest Chausson's music was inevitably colored by the characteristic fervor and chromaticism of that master. And yet this Trio is less Franckian than Chausson's later works. He composed it in 1881, the year when he first took lessons from Franck, having studied briefly at the Conservatoire under Massenet. It was his first chamber work, having been preceded only by a group of piano pieces (destroyed) and a group of songs. Chausson was for a long time little noticed even by his colleagues, for he was a modest man, unwilling to push his cause. Possessing independent means, he would not pay for the publication of his own scores, avoiding the stigma of the wealthy amateur. Since he started his musical study at the age of twenty-five and died at the age of forty-four (as the result of a bicycle accident), he left but few works.

Vincent d'Indy, who was four years older, and a fellow member of the Société Nationale de Musique, has written about him in Cobbett's Cyclopedic Survey of Chamber Music:

"If the well-known adage, 'The style is the man,' expresses a truth, no artist's career could offer a better illustration of it than that of Ernest Chausson. Sincerity, good-heartedness, modesty—sometimes exaggerated to the point of a lack of faith in himself—such were the characteristic qualities of this fine musician, whose early death—the result of a wretched accident—was universally deplored, for he was loved by all who knew him. And these qualities are seen clearly throughout his works, written with a care

THIRD CONCERT OF THE CHAMBER MUSIC SERIES

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York

MENAHEM PRESSLER, Piano
DANIEL GUILET, Violin
BERNARD GREENHOUSE, Cello

●

PROGRAM

BEETHOVEN Trio in G Major, Op. 1, No. 2
- I. Adagio; Allegro vivace
- II. Largo con espressione
- III. Scherzo: Allegro
- IV. Finale: Presto

CHAUSSON Trio in G minor, Op. 3
- I. Pas trop lent; Animé
- II. Vite
- III. Assez lent
- IV. Animé

INTERMISSION

SCHUBERT Trio in B-flat Major, Op. 99
- I. Allegro moderato
- II. Andante un poco mosso
- III. Scherzo: Allegro
- IV. Rondo: Allegro vivace

Mr. Pressler uses the Steinway Piano

CONCERTS TO FOLLOW:—

July 26 . . . . . The New York Pro Musica
August 2 . . . . . The Boston Fine Arts String Quartet (Assisted by Joseph de Pasquale, Viola)
August 9 . . . . . The Kroll String Quartet
August 16 . . . . . Claudio Arrau, Piano

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
JUL 20 1961

BEAUX ARTS TRIO SCORES AT FESTIVAL

1313 at Tanglewood Hail Performance by New York Group

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — There was excitement for all as the Beaux Arts Trio of New York played the third concert in the chamber music series Wednesday night before 1313 people. The trio has appeared here several times and always with great personal success. Its membership includes pianist Menahem Pressler, violinist Daniel Guilet and cellist Bernard Greenhouse.

Finely Moulded

Several years of association has moulded the group into a fine ensemble. Even Mr. Pressler, who in the early days was practically a trio in himself, has calmed down. But his intense feeling for the music is evident through his facial expressions. The trio is a fabulous technical group, each member a master of his instrument.

The recital opened with the Trio in G Major, Op. 3, No. 2, by Beethoven. It was given a highly sophisticated performance, a little too much so for Beethoven. Dynamically and expressively the performance was a gem, but some of the reality within the music seems lacking.

Chausson's Trio in G Minor, Op. 3, was a vehicle tailor-made for this group. While it lacks the bravura and solidity of the concerto for quartet, solo violin and piano, it does have some stunning dramatic moments, swift changes of mood and flashes of brilliance. It was performed with consumate artistry, so much so that one was inclined to wish that the music had been more worthy of the performance.

Schubert Work Cheered

The final work on the program was Schubert's Trio in B Flat Major, Op. 99. This is quite possibly the best known trio as far as the general public is concerned. The trio contains some of the loveliest music Schubert ever wrote, ranging from the bouyant theme of the first movement through the beauty of the berceuse-like theme of the andante and the charm of the scherzo to the jollification of the final rondo.

Again one could admire the brilliance of the playing, the suave charm of the interpretation and the inclusion of the inherent feeling of earthiness which is in this music. All this was clearly revealed as the sweep of melody poured forth in an unobstructed stream.

The audience reaction was eloquent proof of the splendor of the performances. The famed New York Pro Musica will be heard July 26.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUL 18 1961

Beaux Arts Trio Will Give Third Chamber Concert

The third of the Tanglewood chamber music concert series will be given by the Beaux Arts Trio of New York in the theater at 8:30 tomorrow night. The trio will perform Chausson's Trio in G minor, Op. 3, Beethoven's Trio in G major, Op. 1, No. 2, and the Trio in B-flat major, Op. 99 by Schubert.

Friday and Saturday evening's at 8:30 Charles Munch will conduct the 104-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music shed, while Pierre Monteux will make his first appearance of the 1961 Berkshire Festival conducting the Orchestra on Sunday afternoon at 2:30.

The Friday night concert will be given in recognition of the 70th birthday of Gertrude Robinson Smith who will be present for the event. Miss Robinson Smith was instrumental in the formation of the Berkshire Festival and in the building of the Music Shed at Tanglewood. The program will include the "Gloria" by Francis Poulenc, which was given its world premiere this winter by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Also on the Friday program are Beethoven's "Coriolan" Overture and Brahms' Symphony No. 1.

Violinist Isaac Stern will be soloist at the Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon concerts. Saturday evening he will be heard in a performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto. At this concert Charles Munch will also conduct William Schuman's Symphony No. 7 and the Overture to "Genova" by Robert Schumann.

At Sunday's concert, conducted by Pierre Monteux, Mr. Stern will perform two concerti, Viotti's Violin Concerto No. 22 and the Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra by Bartok. The concert will include "Antique Dances and Airs" by Respighi, the Dances from the "Three-Cornered Hat" by DeFalla and the Suite from "Rosenkavalier" by Richard Strauss.

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York will present a concert of chamber music at Tanglewood Wednesday at 8.30 p. m. in the theater. The program will include works by Beethoven, Chausson and Schubert.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,456

JUL 23 1961

Music:

Isaac Stern Plays Beethoven Concerto

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The welcome change of perfect weather attracted 10,949 persons to Tanglewood last night for a program of widespread contrasts played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch.

Isaac Stern was soloist in Beethoven's Violin Concerto in D Major, Opus 61.

The orchestral works: Overture to "Genoveva" by Robert Schumann, and William Schuman's Symphony No. 7.

Yesterday's most interesting and absorbing event, however, was the open rehearsal in the morning, attended by 5,302. Perennial youth Pierre Monteux (in his middle 80s) worked tirelessly for nearly three hours on this afternoon's program.

The only justification for admitting the public to these Saturday morning rehearsals is to benefit the orchestra's pension fund. Admission is $1.50 for adults and 50 cents for children.

Trouble With Bartok

When Monteux wabbled on stage he was given an ovation by audience and orchestra. His new podium has an extra step and railing. The rotund old gentleman lost no time getting things under way once he got settled on his high stool.

Wailing babies, applause at the wrong time and mass murmuring didn't seem to bother Monteux as much as the orchestra and Stern, who ran into constant trouble with the Bartok Violin Rhapsody.

In De Falla's "Three-Cornered Hat" dances, Monteux dictated a rhythm in his diapason voice and that had to be applauded, too. He moistened his fingers to turn pages, covered his ears when there was too much timpani—had some phases repeated, repeated and repeated.

Everything seemed to go wrong with the Bartok rhapsody. Stern and the orchestra finally got together on style—after repeated conferences with Monteux.

Pop Goes the Weasel

Came the hectic passages at the end and a string broke on Stern's fiddle. He made a quick exchange with concertmaster Richard Burgin. When Burgin returned from backstage after repairing the damage and handed Stern his instrument, more applause.

None of which deterred Stern from giving a glowing performance of the Beethoven concerto last night under Munch's direction—equal in verve and musicianship to his playing of the same work during previous summers at the Berkshire Music Festival.

A few years ago, in an address before a music critics' symposium in Hartford, William Schuman deplored that critics don't obtain a lot of advance information from a composer before writing about his music.

Last night's program book had a vague commentary about Symphony No. 7, not by the composer, but by the Boston Symphony's music administrator.

Glowing String Material

The audience was supplied with such bonanzas as "The Seventh Symphony is a kind of choral writing for the orchestra." And later on, "The composer would perhaps not agree. . ."

Dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky, the Schuman Seventh was first played by the Boston Symphony last October. The first two movements are far too irritating to sub-title the complete symphony "much ado about nothing." Furthermore, the slow third movement presents glowing material to the strings and the finale is a shocker, designed to dispell any possible boredom.

Thy symphony opens with murky chords, deeply rooted in the bass. From this emerge solos for strings, bassoon and trumpet, instituting a mood without giving the listener very much to grasp and hold.

As with other sections of the remainder, the first movement rests its case on a succession of startling orchestral devices that provoke, rather than invite interest.

Oasis of Repose

The second movement specializes in brass ravings in the form of elaborate fanfares, abetted by percussion. By comparison, the third movement is an oasis of rest. The "scherzando brioso" is what it says — a crashing dance generated by a powerful, complex rhythm. The orchestra gave the entire work the benefit of some dazzling playing, employing every resource including a full array of percussion appurtenances with prominent roles for piano, chimes and xylophone.

Munch's interpretation of the Schumann "Genoveva" had drive. It highlighted brilliant execution by the string section and a generally purposeful plan of action by the conductor that ended in a blaze of glory.

This afternoon's program, conducted by Monteux, includes Respighi's "Old Dances and Airs for the Lute," Suite No. 1; Falla's Dances from "The suite from the opera, "Der Rosenkavalier." Stern is soloist in Viotti's Violin Concerto in A Minor, Opus 22, and Bartok's Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra.

Music

Monteaux One of Great Conductors of Our Time

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL—Pierre Monteaux continues not only to prove himself one of the great conductors of our time, but also, the first choice of concert-goers everywhere. At last week-end's program at Tanglewood, the eminent and personable director mounted the podium amid a wave of sound as though it were a multitude of curtain calls all rolled into one.

Arthur Fiedler

He was tremendously moved by the reception as the performance that followed easily showed. His work was such that the entire orchestra seemed to take on a newly found responsibility and proceeded to display their vaunted genius by providing a superb reading of the Respighi "Antique Dances and Airs."

Maestro Monteaux has long thrilled audiences with his readings of almost any score he touches, but in our case, we finally found out just what makes this man musically great. Not only has he an interpretative touch of his own, but is perfect with the basic theory of it all. He has the ability the best example of what happens when one is letter-perfect with the basic theory of it all. He has the ability to sustain both rhythm and color to the final degree in whatever pace that it is called for.

The pieces for orchestra and violin soloist, namely, the Viotti "Violin Concerto" and the Bartok "Violin Rhapsody," during which time Isaac Stern provided his usual fine performance, the conductor gained every music necessity written on the pages before him.

Needless to say, DeFall's "Three-Cornered Hat" Dances and Strauss' "Rosenkavallier" Suite went off with musical excellence.

The proper Bostonian who sees and hears Arthur Fiedler only in Boston will often ask how he occupies his time the nine months of the year when he isn't conducting in Boston.

At the moment he is in San Francisco for his 11th season of pops concerts with the San Francisco Symphony orchestra. He will come east just in time to conduct the Boston Pops at Tanglewood next Thursday evening, Aug. 3, the occasion marking the now firmly established and exciting Boston Pops at Tanglewood.

After the concert Mr. Fiedler will head for California to close the San Francisco season, but on the way he will stop off at Miami and the Red Rocks Festival in Denver. Before Christmas he will have circled the globe to fulfill engagements from Buffalo to San Diego; the Hastings Festival in England, radio and TV engagements, a London Festival hall appearance, concerts in Dublin and finally, three weeks of concerts in Tokyo.

Such a schedule is nothing new to Mr. Fiedler, he has conducted from Norway to Argentina and from Israel to Chile. In North America he has conducted the Orchestra Symphonique de Montreal and the Honolulu Symphony orchestra. In this country he has conducted from Portland, Me., to Portland, Ore.

Among his guest appearances with top orchestras have been those at Atlanta, Buffalo, Cleveland, Dallas, Houston, Minneapolis, Pittsburgh, Chicago, Seattle, and Milwaukee.

Whitestone

HEADLINERS over the weekend at Tanglewood for the first of five weekends of major concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Muic Shell were at left, Isaac Stern, violin soloist Saturday night and yesterday afternoon, and Pierre Monteux, who conducted concert Sunday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 40,709

JUL 24 1961

31,000 Hear Concerts At Tanglewood

(Special ot The American)

LENOX, MASS. — Violinist Isaac Stern, conductors Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the weatherman collaborated to make the first week end of the major Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood a series of memorable experiences for almost 31,000 listeners. An additional bonus was the singing of Adele Addison in Poulenc's "Gloria" Friday evening when she repeated her triumphs of the earlier season.

There was splendor upon splendor at these three concerts with both Munch and Monteux conducting an orchestra that gave full color and richness to everything it played. Isaac Stern performed Saturday night and again yesterday afternoon with richness and clarity of tone, giving the whole an aura of magnificence. The audiences were enthusiastic and expansive as well they might be for the musicians gave them opportunity to be so. Sunday's concert was played under such heat that for the first time in a long while the musicians of the Boston performed without jackets.

Stern's performance of the Beethoven "Violin Concerto in D Major, Op. 61" Saturday night showed such clarity and pureness of tone on a singing violin that it was followed by an explosion of applause and even whistles from an audience of 10,949. The same ovation followed his performance Sunday afternoon when he played Viotti's "Violin Concerto in A Minor, No. 22," and Bartok's "Rhapsody No. 1, for Violin and Orchestra."

Dances Featured

Monteux's Sunday afternoon concert was rich with dances and the 85-year Monteux conducted with verve and lightness that would be the envy of a conductor less than half his age. We always wonder how this venerable conductor manages to lead the Boston's musicians through the dance music with such life and color but maybe the secret is that he is only 85 years "young." If he were a painter instead of a musician one would say that Monteux conducted with a full, almost Van Gogh palette of brilliance. His brush was brilliant and his stroke certain and controlled. The musicians of the Boston seem to take special pride in responding beautifully when Monteux conducts and yesterday it seemed more than special. There were jollity and gaiety in the Respighi "Old Dance and Airs for the Lute," color in Fall's "Three Dances from the Ballet, Three-Cornered Hat," and a kaleidoscope of tones in Strauss' "Suite from der Rosenkavalier." The audience numbered 8,734 including one-month old boy whose father told the writer "his admission was paid."

Munch this season, as we have noted before, seems in excellent spirits and conducted Saturday night's concert with special animation and fullness. The program included William Schuman's "Symphony No. 7" and "Overture to Genoveve" by Robert Schumann. Friday's concert included a splendid reading of Brahms' "Symphony No. 1 in C minor." The Festival chorus of some 90 voices appeared in the Poulenc "Glor-

S.M.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 189,553

JUL 30 1961

Good Blending At Tanglewood

By RUTH TRIPP
Journal-Bulletin Music Critic

LAST WEEK-END at Tanglewood was a harmonious blending of past, present and future. The presence of Pierre Monteux as guest conductor on Sunday brought many recollections of his musical power to those who had heard him in the prime of his career. He conducted the ballet music from DeFalla's "The Three-Cornered Hat" and the Suite from Richard Strauss' "Der Rosenkavalier" with a sure hand. The look on his face when the Boston Symphony Orchestra swept along the magnificent music with its own inimitable style, was one of pride and remembered joy.

There were moments, however, for those well versed in listening, when the strain of playing under a baton commanded by an aging hand showed in the orchestra. Not only was there a sense of anxiety but also a lack of freedom in expressive interpretations in the two numbers which featured Isaac Stern as soloist. He is a superb violinist and with expert cooperation from the first deck players, both the Viotti Violin Concerto No. 22, and the Bartok Rhapsody No. 1 arrived at a safe conclusion with no mishaps. Stern had his music on a stand, which is not usual, and there were moments, sepecially in the Viotti, when it seemed a good thing. Yet when the concert was over, you found yourself with mixed emotions. Perhaps you would never have another chance to hear Monteux conduct and there should not be a word of criticism against prolonging his public appearances. But there had been such a superb performance of the Beethoven Concerto at the Saturday evening concert, when Charles Munch conducted for Isaac Stern. Which way should it be and who knows best?

Contrast Helped

Munch and the orchestra were in perfect accord with Stern and the Beethoven had been a revelation of beauty in a work which easily could have been perfunctory and dry. It is so familiar that it is easy for it to slip into a well-worn groove of just another performance. As we heard it played, it was a masterpiece.

Some of the glory of the Beethoven may have been because of its startling contrast to William Schuman's Symphony No. 7, which had the major spot in this same program before intermission. Schuman's writing in this symphony is a major intellectual achievement and he must have been delighted with the splendor of the performance which the musicians gave his work.

Those of us who went to the seminar in contemporary music on Friday afternoon had heard one of the rare treats of all season, a verbal exchange of ideas between Aaron Copland and William Schuman which eventually should be published verbatim. It was sharp, brilliant and full of the individual personalities of two men who occupy front-line positions in the composing world.

Copland, the interviewer, said he was always very sympathetic and always felt very sorry for the interviewer when he was being interviewed. Before the afternoon was over, Schuman had made him realize in a pleasant but pointed way that there were times when an interviewer did indeed need such sympathy.

Great Debate

The gist of the conversation was that Schuman could be called American trained, not having been one of the Boulanger pupils, though this fact was never stated aloud. A quick retort to the implications of this thought about foreign study was Schuman's statement that you 'could travel abroad and be a dullard or you could live all your life beside Walden Pond and be antastic. It is something inside hat matters." And so it went. The opportunity for a final statement was offered to Schuman. He took it with these words. 'Good-bye and thank you." At this the meeting broke up.

Earlier in the afternoon, we had heard members of the Fromm Players perform most professionally, the Schuman String Quartet No. 4, and a group of Berkshire Music Center students sing his Te Deum, Four Rounds on Famous Words and Carols of Death. Schuman's choral work are by far much simpler than his instrumental ones.

The Friday evening concert in the shed was highlighted by a most impressive presentation of Poulenc's Gloria which featured Adele Addison as soloist and the Festival Chorus, which had been prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson. Dr. Munch had conducted the Coriolanus Overture by Beethoven and the Brahms Symphony No. 1 in the earlier part of the program which was another tribute to his master hand.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,088
JUL 24 1961

Monteux Conducts at Tanglewood

By GEORGE W. STOWE
Special to the Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass. — Pierre Monteux, looking as cherubic as ever in a white suit, made his first appearance at Tanglewood with a program that was easily the most interesting of the season.

If the venerable conductor (he was 86 last April) chose to omit the first section of Respighi's Ancient Dances and Airs (Suite No. 1); it was an astute deletion, for the remaining Gagliarda, Vilanella, and Passo mezzo e mascherada made a well-balanced frame for the warm sonorities of the Boston orchestra.

* * *

SAMUEL MAYES' cello in the middle movement was something to write home about, conveying the intense feeling that is so much the essence of this marvelous combination of 16th and 20th Century music.

In the first of two concerti performed yesterday afternoon Isaac Stern chose the Viotti No. 22 which, from time immemorial has served as a showpiece for the advanced violin student. I can only concur with those critics who have felt that Mr. Stern's amazing virtuosity should be directed toward something more artistically rewarding.

The weather was extremely sticky for violinists and Mr. Stern's intonation suffered at times but there was no denying the miraculous ease with which he surmounts every technical hurdle. This was particularly notable in the brilliant finale.

* * *

BARTOCK'S First Violin Rhapsody was the second and more gratifying vechicle for Mr. Stern. Seldom heard in the concert hall, it may not be a major work of the composer but it is a fascinating example of his art.

With its stabbing, incisive rhythms, cimbalom effects, and Magyar flavor it has the folkloristic fascination that is so much a part of the Dance Suite and the Rumanian Dances. Mr. Stern and the orchestra gave it a brilliant performance.

* * *

ONCE AGAIN Mr. Monteux evoked the sunny Iberian peninsula in his performance of Manuel de Falla's "The Three-Cornered Hat" Dances. It is quite probable that some listeners prefer a more delicate tonal palette than the Boston Symphony offers but on his own terms this conductor achieves some remarkable effects that would not be possible with a smaller orchestra.

For the grand finale Monteux chose another of his most convincing vehicles, the Suite from Richard Strauss' inimitable "Der Rosenkavalier." Could the listener leave the concert hall with anything less than a feeling of buoyancy after a Monteux performance of these delectable waltzes?

* * *

THE FULL ORCHESTRA produced a crescendo of sound in the climaxes that beggared description and yet this conductor was able to elicit the most subtle playing in the first statement of Baron Ochs waltz and in the celebrated trio.

The official attendence figures indicated something less than 9,000 persons for the Sunday concert. The Saturday night concert with Isaac Stern playing the Beethoven Concerto attracted almost 11,000 persons.

RIVERSIDE, CALIF.
PRESS-ENTERPRISE
SUN. 54,925
AUG 13 1961

Music Box

HENRY B. CABOT, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees and Charles Munch, conductor of the orchestra, were joined by the public in an appropriate tribute lately at their summer headquarters in Lenox, Mass. (Tanglewood).

Honored on her 89th birthday was Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, at whose home in nearby Stockbridge plans for a summer festival were drawn in the mid-'30s, even before the Boston Symphony was part of the project.

It was through the vigor, foresight and generosity of Miss Robinson Smith that the marks of permanence were put on Tanglewood — first by persuading the Boston Symphony Orchestra to become a part of the enterprise, then by leading a campaign to provide a permanent shed for its use.

☆ ☆ ☆

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUL 24 1961

8,734 Brave Heat At Tanglewood

A crowd of 8,734 persons was on hand at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon despite the intense heat. This brought the total attendance for the weekend to 30,784, against the 31,192 persons who attended the same weekend last year. It was felt that the uncertain weather and the heat may have made the difference.

112

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 52,400
JUL 30 1961

Spirit Uplifted at Tanglewood

By EARL J. DIAS
Standard-Times Music Critic

There is nothing like a long weekend at the Berkshire Music Festival, Tanglewood, to bring the roses back to one's cheeks and to uplift the spirit. Great music performed in an exquisite natural setting (even with the heat and humidity at an abnormally high level) is an ideal tonic for frayed Summer nerves.

Last weekend we spent three days at Tanglewood, attending the Friday and Saturday night concerts, the Sunday afternoon program, and the open rehearsal on Saturday morning. The chief attraction of the Friday concert was the Tanglewood premiere of Francis Poulenc's "Gloria for Soprano Solo, Chorus and Orchestra." This engaging and remarkably joyous work of sacred music was commissioned by the Koussevitsky Music Foundation and was first performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Jan. 21, 1961.

For the "Gloria," Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony were in excellent form and soprano Adele Addison, the soloist, and the Festival Chorus, trained and prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, were likewise precise, deft, and musicianly in their important contribution to the performance. Miss Addison, whom New Bedford concert-goers will remember for two memorable recitals sung here at the beginning of her distinguished career, is not overtaxed by the demands of the solo part.

Accomplished Job Well

In fact, her solo work in "Gloria" requires primarily purity of tone and that sustaining of a melodic line which Miss Addison can accomplish so well. The Poulenc score has numerous rhythmical irregularities, but it is a work comparatively easy to appreciate and understand at a first hearing. The opening Gloria and the succeeding Laudamus Te are joyful paeans of praise to the goodness of the Almighty. In the third section, Domine Deus, the mood is more serene and penitent, and Miss Addison conveys this mood beautifully. The remaining sections of the work continue in their lavishly joyous strain.

One is tempted to note that this "Gloria" is not probably a great work. But it is a cameo-like piece of music—not important, perhaps, in comparison with similar works by Bach or Haydn, to name two composers who come immediately to mind—but capable of producing easy-to-take listening pleasure.

Friday's program also included a somewhat pedestrian reading by Dr. Munch and his musicians of Beethoven's Overture to "Coriolan" and then, to make up for any minor deficiencies in the Beethoven, one of the most beautiful and emotionally effective performances we have ever heard of Brahms' "Symphony No. 1 in C Minor." Dr. Munch gave us what we can call an incandescent reading, thrilling to the ear and stimulating to the mind.

Lushly Romantic

On Saturday night, the program included Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva" (which we had heard during the Boston Symphony's regular season), William Schuman's "Symphony No. 7" (Mr. Schuman was on hand to accept audience applause at the conclusionof the performance), and Beethoven's "Violin Concerto in D Major," with Isaac Stern as soloist.

The Schumann "Genoveva" is lushly romantic in style and more colorfully orchestrated than most of the composer's other work. As for the American Schuman, his "Symphony No. 7" is a driving, discordant selection, notable for the life and force of its final movement. It is not a work for which we have any particular affection, but the orchestra played it with its customary skill—the symphony was also commissioned by the Koussevitsky Foundation in celebration of the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony and first performed on Oct. 21, 1960.

Unquestionably, the high point of the Saturday concert was the performance by violinist Stern of the familiar Beethoven concerto. Mr. Stern, who has made innumerable appearances with the Boston orchestra, is one of the great technicians of our day. But in addition to his formidable digital and bowing powers, he is a sensitive interpreter. Mr. Stern's playing of the concerto was flawless as was the orchestra's accompaniment. In fact, Mr. Stern was called back to the stage for at least six bows after the concerto was concluded; the 7,000 music lovers gathered in the Shed and on the well-kept green lawns of the Tanglewood estate seemed virtually ecstatic in their appreciation of some really remarkable fiddling.

For the Sunday afternoon program, 86-year-old Pierre Monteux, always a sentimental favorite of Tanglewood audiences, was guest conductor. What Mr. Monteux does with the orchestra belies his age. A picturesque figure on the podium with his still-black hair and imposing white mustache, Monteux brings to his conducting a life-time of experience in wielding the baton before most of the great orchestras and opera companies of the world.

For his program, the venerable conductor chose Respighi's "Old Dances and Airs for the Lute," de Falla's "Three Dances From 'The Three-Cornered Hat,'" Richard Strauss' Suite from "Der Rosenkavalier," and Viotti's "Violin Concerto in A Minor" and Bartok's "Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra," with Mr. Stern again serving as capable soloist.

A Beautiful Medieval Charm

The Respighi "Old Dances and Airs for the Lute" have a beautifully Medieval charm. The lute, incidentally, was, at least by the 16th Century, far more than a merely accompanying instrument. It is interesting to note, for example, that the great violin makers of Cremona, notably Andreas Amati, put their best efforts into producing lutes of the utmost sweetness and delicacy of tone. It is this sweetness and delicacy that characterizes the airs Respighi has collected; they fall exquisitely on the ear—and Respighi has orchestrated them with meticulous attention to preserving the spirit and atmosphere of a by-gone age.

As for the three dances from the de Falla ballet, "The Three-Cornered Hat," these are contagiously rhythmical and swingingly Iberian. De Falla's orchestration is colorful (the men in the percussion section have a field day), and the entire selection evokes the best of the gayer side of Spanish life.

The wonderfully Viennese flavor of Richard Strauss' Suite from "Der Rosenkavalier," particularly the lilting waltzes, were conveyed brilliantly in Monteux's reading. On the previous morning we had watched Monteux at work in preparing this selection, and the painstaking attention to rhythm and dynamics in the rehearsal were evident in the finished performance which, like Stern's performance of the Beethoven, had the audience shouting "Bravo!" and breaking into wild applause.

Mr. Stern, the soloist of the afternoon, offered two widely contrasting works. The first, by the 18th-Century Italian composer, Viotti, is classical in form and method, refreshingly simple and melodious in its themes, and marked by a pleasing serenity. Mr. Stern achieved a warm and lush tone quality in the adagio and met the technical demands of the final agitato assai with his usual skill.

Diabolically Demanding

For his final solo selection, Mr. Stern performed Bartok's "Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra," a diabolically demanding work calling for virtuoso brilliance in multiple stops, long passages in harmonies, rough accents, tender legatos, complex cross bowings and tricky phrasings. The orchestral accompaniment, equally complex, is also challenging, and although there were one or two rough spots in the performance, this was, on the part of Stern and the orchestra, a commendable offering of an unusual show piece.

As we have indicated, this was a weekend of great music greatly performed. Certainly, the Berkshire Hills are the site of a music festival that must rank among the best and most rewarding in the world.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,783
JUL 24 1961

Music: Monteux Triumphs At Tanglewood

LENOX — Yesterday afternoon's Tanglewood concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was a trumph for 86-year-old guest concluded the third weekend of the Bershire Music Festival, with four more weeks to go.

Isaac Stern was soloist in Viotti's Violin Concerto in A Minor, No. 22, and Bela Bartok's Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra.

Yesterday's audience numbered 8,734, bringing the weekend total to 30,784. Last summer it was 32,192 for the corresponding weekend.

The orchestral program: Respighi's "Old Dances and Airs for the Lute," Suite No. 1; Manuel DeFalla's three dances from the ballet, "The Three-Cornered Hat;" and the suite from Richard Strauss' opera, "Der Rosenkavalier."

Tribute to Orchestra

Monteux' conducting was a tribute to the orchestra that has not sounded as well in this festival except in Brahms' first symphony conducted by Charles Munch on Friday night.

Without studying the situation, one might have thought that Monteux had a minor role in the wonderful musical products that were being created. He is a direct opposite of the podium exhibitionist. But when one took a closer look, it was amazing to note the number of cues that Monteux supplied relative to phrasing, shading and phrase conclusions.

His conducting of the Falla dances yesterday was baton mastery in its highest form. It was difficult to associate the conductor's calm with this cloudburst of sound.

Rhythms were so iron - clad that they compelled attention and over them floated glowing, graceful melodies. Monteux allowed no lag in activity even to placing extra emphasis on fragmentary melody, especially in woodwind. He preserved the music's constant "Hauteur." It was Spanish music of the most virile kind, in which the quietest sections had something paean-like about them.

Monteux's version of the Strauss "Rosenkavalier" suite was a marvel of interpretive acumen. It had none of the "swell-and-burst" that was heard last season on Worcester Civic Music.

Nor did the thinly instrumentated passages get spotty in tone quality. Brasses gave out a gorgeous tone. The woodwinds were not always as fortunate, and the strings made the main waltz theme soar with excitement.

Treatment from beginning to end was most flexible, impossible except with a great orchestra. Monteux removed all the excess sugary content and brought the thing to climax without crash or clatter.

Nobility earmarked the "Gagliarda," a lively dance in straightforward rhythm. Oboe, flute and cello solos were superimposed over muted strings with beautiful effect in the "Villanella." The final dance, "Passo Mezzo" was a peppy skirmish.

Stern had two successes yesterday — big and moderate. They were due, in the same order, to the Viotti and Bartok works. He played both with score, which he used sparingly.

Although Viotti was a contemporary of Beethoven's, yesterday's concerto was a pale shadow of the Beethoven that Stern played Saturday night. In the first movement, soloist and orchestra were in general accord on style, although Stern was not always on pitch, nor his tempo stable. Sentimental as the slow movement is by nature, the soloist expressed it with warmth and poise. The finale was agitated within the confines of a farily moderate tempo. It was articulate playing of elaborate passagework by soloist and orchestra.

Presumably the Bartok rhapsody looked good on the program. I. wasn't as felicitous to the ear, although marvelously performed. It gets its "raphsody" identification from the customary "Lassan" and "Friska" — emotion and bombast.

R. M.

MIDLAND, MICH.
NEWS
D, 11,578
AUG 9 1961

Works of Prize-Winning Moderns Now on Record

By L. J. Kramp

Two prize winners by modern composers have become available on records which deserve notice from classical listeners who want more than Mozart. Too often such initiative by record makers is not adequately rewarded in sales volume.

The Music Critics Circle of New York awarded prizes in April to both items — one for the best chamber music of 1960 and the other for the best choral work.

The chamber music, Elliot Carter's Second Quartet, also won the 1960 Pulitzer prize in music. The score was finished in 1959 and played first in New York in March, 1960. It now is on record, by the Juilliard String Quartet, with another prize winner, William Schuman's Third Quartet, which won a Town Hall award in 1950. Whether the appeal of Carter's work will endure remains to be seen, but as a recorded performance it is brilliant and fascinating.

The choral work is Francis Poulenc's "Gloria in G Major for Soprano, Chorus and Orchestra." The premiere recording by Angel was made in Paris in February under Poulenc's supervision, with soprano Rosanna Carteri and the French National Radio-Television Orchestra and Chorus under Georges Pretre. On the other side is Poulenc's "Concerto in G Minor for Organ," with organist Maurice Durufle. The stereo effects of the score and the recordings will attract audio enthusiasts.

The Poulenc "Gloria" won critical praise when performed in New York by the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch. Its melodies are fresh and joyful and the work should gain in favor as this fine recording makes it better known.

An American-taped release of Beethoven's "Appassionata" Sonata, both on discs and in four-track tape, by the Russian pianist, Sviatoslav Richter, is one of the top versions now available. This is a tremendous performance that stands along with his earlier disc of Brahms Second Piano Concerto as one of the season's better piano recordings. The "Funeral March" sonata is on the other side.

Two young European pianists have been recorded in distinguished fashion. Maurizio Pollini, 18, performs excitingly Chopin's First Piano Concerto with which he won a 1960 Warsaw award. The young Italian shows great promise in this disc with the Philharmonic Orchestra under Paul Kletzki. He has won acclaim in Milan since he was 14. The recording has great sound appeal.

The other disc is by Eric Heidsieck, 24, a Frenchman playing Mozart's Concertos No. 20 and 23 with Andre Vandernoot and the Conservatory Concert Orchestra. Heidsieck, a member of the champagne family, plays his own cadenzas instead of the traditional ones provided by Beethoven and Schnabel.

165 Church ...
MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
SEP 1961

LENOX, Massachusetts — At the Boston Symphony's concert on July 21 at Tanglewood a scroll and specially-made recording of the Poulenc Gloria were presented to Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith for her work in initiating and building the Berkshire festival and the music shed at Tanglewood.

112

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 52,400
JUL 30 1961

Spirit Uplifted at Tanglewood

By EARL J. DIAS
Standard-Times Music Critic

There is nothing like a long weekend at the Berkshire Music Festival, Tanglewood, to bring the roses back to one's cheeks and to uplift the spirit. Great music performed in an exquisite natural setting (even with the heat and humidity at an abnormally high level) is an ideal tonic for frayed Summer nerves.

Last weekend we spent three days at Tanglewood, attending the Friday and Saturday night concerts, the Sunday afternoon program, and the open rehearsal on Saturday morning. The chief attraction of the Friday concert was the Tanglewood premiere of Francis Poulenc's "Gloria for Soprano Solo, Chorus and Orchestra." This engaging and remarkably joyous work of sacred music was commissioned by the Koussevitsky Music Foundation and was first performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Jan. 21, 1961.

For the "Gloria," Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony were in excellent form and soprano Adele Addison, the soloist, and the Festival Chorus, trained and prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, were likewise precise, deft, and musicianly in their important contribution to the performance. Miss Addison, whom New Bedford concert-goers will remember for two memorable recitals sung here at the beginning of her distinguished career, is not overtaxed by the demands of the solo part.

Accomplished Job Well

In fact, her solo work in "Gloria" requires primarily purity of tone and that sustaining of a melodic line which Miss Addison can accomplish so well. The Poulenc score has numerous rhythmical irregularities, but it is a work comparatively easy to appreciate and understand at a first hearing. The opening Gloria and the succeeding Laudamus Te are joyful paeans of praise to the goodness of the Almighty. In the third section, Domine Deus, the mood is more serene and penitent, and Miss Addison conveys this mood beautifully. The remaining sections of the work continue in their lavishly joyous strain.

One is tempted to note that this "Gloria" is not probably a great work. But it is a cameo-like piece of music—not important, perhaps, in comparison with similar works by Bach or Haydn, to name two composers who come immediately to mind—but capable of producing easy-to-take listening pleasure.

Friday's program also included a somewhat pedestrian reading by Dr. Munch and his musicians of Beethoven's Overture to "Coriolan" and then, to make up for any minor deficiencies in the Beethoven, one of the most beautiful and emotionally effective performances we have ever heard of Brahms' "Symphony No. 1 in C Minor." Dr. Munch gave us what we can call an incandescent reading, thrilling to the ear and stimulating to the mind.

Lushly Romantic

On Saturday night, the program included Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva" (which we had heard during the Boston Symphony's regular season), William Schuman's "Symphony No. 7" (Mr. Schuman was on hand to accept audience applause at the conclusionof the performance), and Beethoven's "Violin Concerto in D Major," with Isaac Stern as soloist.

The Schumann "Genoveva" is lushly romantic in style and more colorfully orchestrated than most of the composer's other work. As for the American Schuman, his "Symphony No. 7" is a driving, discordant selection, notable for the life and force of its final movement. It is not a work for which we have any particular affection, but the orchestra played it with its customary skill—the symphony was also commissioned by the Koussevitsky Foundation in celebration of the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony and first performed on Oct. 21, 1960.

Unquestionably, the high point of the Saturday concert was the performance by violinist Stern of the familiar Beethoven concerto. Mr. Stern, who has made innumerable appearances with the Boston orchestra, is one of the great technicians of our day. But in addition to his formidable digital and bowing powers, he is a sensitive interpreter. Mr. Stern's playing of the concerto was flawless as was the orchestra's accompaniment. In fact, Mr. Stern was called back to the stage for at least six bows after the concerto was concluded; the 7,000 music lovers gathered in the Shed and on the well-kept green lawns of the Tanglewood estate seemed virtually ecstatic in their appreciation of some really remarkable fiddling.

For the Sunday afternoon program, 86-year-old Pierre Monteux, always a sentimental favorite of Tanglewood audiences, was guest conductor. What Mr. Monteux does with the orchestra belies his age. A picturesque figure on the podium with his still-black hair and imposing white mustache, Monteux brings to his conducting a life-time of experience in wielding the baton before most of the great orchestras and opera companies of the world.

For his program, the venerable conductor chose Respighi's "Old Dances and Airs for the Lute," de Falla's "Three Dances From 'The Three-Cornered Hat,'" Richard Strauss' Suite from "Der Rosenkavalier," and Viotti's "Violin Concerto in A Minor" and Bartok's "Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra," with Mr. Stern again serving as capable soloist.

A Beautiful Medieval Charm

The Respighi "Old Dances and Airs for the Lute" have a beautifully Medieval charm. The lute, incidentally, was, at least by the 16th Century, far more than a merely accompanying instrument. It is interesting to note, for example, that the great violin makers of Cremona, notably Andreas Amati, put their best efforts into producing lutes of the utmost sweetness and delicacy of tone. It is this sweetness and delicacy that characterizes the airs Respighi has collected; they fall exquisitely on the ear—and Respighi has orchestrated them with meticulous attention to preserving the spirit and atmosphere of a by-gone age.

As for the three dances from the de Falla ballet, "The Three-Cornered Hat," these are contagiously rhythmical and swingingly Iberian. De Falla's orchestration is colorful (the men in the percussion section have a field day), and the entire selection evokes the best of the gayer side of Spanish life.

The wonderfully Viennese flavor of Richard Strauss' Suite from "Der Rosenkavalier," particularly the lilting waltzes, were conveyed brilliantly in Monteux's reading. On the previous morning we had watched Monteux at work in preparing this selection, and the painstaking attention to rhythm and dynamics in the rehearsal were evident in the finished performance which, like Stern's performance of the Beethoven, had the audience shouting "Bravo!" and breaking into wild applause.

Mr. Stern, the soloist of the afternoon, offered two widely contrasting works. The first, by the 18th-Century Italian composer, Viotti, is classical in form and method, refreshingly simple and melodious in its themes, and marked by a pleasing serenity. Mr. Stern achieved a warm and lush tone quality in the adagio and met the technical demands of the final agitato assai with his usual skill.

Diabolically Demanding

For his final solo selection, Mr. Stern performed Bartok's "Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra," a diabolically demanding work calling for virtuoso brilliance in multiple stops, long passages in harmonies, rough accents, tender legatos, complex cross bowings and tricky phrasings. The orchestral accompaniment, equally complex, is also challenging, and although there were one or two rough spots in the performance, this was, on the part of Stern and the orchestra, a commendable offering of an unusual show piece.

As we have indicated, this was a weekend of great music greatly performed. Certainly, the Berkshire Hills are the site of a music festival that must rank among the best and most rewarding in the world.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,783
JUL 24 1961

Music: Monteux Triumphs At Tanglewood

LENOX — Yesterday afternoon's Tanglewood concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was a triumph for 86-year-old guest concluded the third weekend of the Berkshire Music Festival, with four more weeks to go.

Isaac Stern was soloist in Viotti's Violin Concerto in A Minor, No. 22, and Bela Bartok's Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra.

Yesterday's audience numbered 8,734, bringing the weekend total to 30,784. Last summer it was 32,182 for the corresponding weekend.

The orchestral program: Respighi's "Old Dances and Airs for the Lute," Suite No. 1; Manuel DeFalla's three dances from the ballet, "The Three-Cornered Hat;" and the suite from Richard Strauss' opera, "Der Rosenkavalier."

Tribute to Orchestra

Monteux' conducting was a tribute to the orchestra that has not sounded as well in this festival except in Brahms' first symphony conducted by Charles Munch on Friday night.

Without studying the situation, one might have thought that Monteux had a minor role in the wonderful musical products that were being created. He is a direct opposite of the podium exhibitionist. But when one took a closer look, it was amazing to note the number of cues that Monteux supplied relative to phrasing, shading and phrase conclusions.

His conducting of the Falla dances yesterday was baton mastery in its highest form. It was difficult to associate the conductor's calm with this cloudburst of sound.

Rhythms were so iron - clad that they compelled attention and over them floated glowing, graceful melodies. Monteux allowed no lag in activity even to placing extra emphasis on fragmentary melody, especially in woodwind. He preserved the music's constant "Hauteur." It was Spanish music of the most virile kind, in which the quietest sections had something paean-like about them.

Monteux's version of the Strauss' "Rosenkavalier" suite was a marvel of interpretive acumen. It had none of the "swell-and-burst" that was heard last season on Worcester Civic Music.

Nor did the thinly instrumentated passages get spotty in tone quality. Brasses gave out a gorgeous tone. The woodwinds were not always as fortunate, and the strings made the main waltz theme soar with excitement.

Treatment from beginning to end was most flexible, impossible except with a great orchestra. Monteux removed all the excess sugary content and brought the thing to climax without crash or clatter.

Nobility earmarked the "Gagliarda," a lively dance in straightforward rhythm. Oboe, flute and cello solos were superimposed over muted strings with beautiful effect in the "Villanella." The final dance, "Passo Mezzo" was a peppy skirmish.

Stern had two successes yesterday — big and moderate. They were due, in the same order, to the Viotti and Bartok works. He played both with score, which he used sparingly.

Although Viotti was a contemporary of Beethoven's, yesterday's concerto was a pale shadow of the Beethoven that Stern played Saturday night. In the first movement, soloist and orchestra were in general accord on style, although Stern was not always on pitch, nor his tempo stable. Sentimental as the slow movement is by nature, the soloist expressed it with warmth and poise. The finale was agitated within the confines of a farily moderate tempo. It was articulate playing of elaborate passagework by soloist and orchestra.

Presumably the Bartok rhapsody looked good on the program. I wasn't as felicitous to the ear, although marvelously performed. It gets its "raphsody" identification from the customary "Lassan" and "Friska" — emotion and bombast.

R. M.

165 Church ...
MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
SEP 1961

LENOX, Massachusetts — At the Boston Symphony's concert on July 21 at Tanglewood a scroll and specially-made recording of the Poulenc Gloria were presented to Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith for her work in initiating and building the Berkshire festival and the music shed at Tanglewood.

MIDLAND, MICH.
NEWS
D, 11,578
AUG 9 1961

Works of Prize-Winning Moderns Now on Record

By L. J. Kramp

Two prize winners by modern composers have become available on records which deserve notice from classical listeners who want more than Mozart. Too often such initiative by record makers is not adequately rewarded in sales volume.

The Music Critics Circle of New York awarded prizes in April to both items — one for the best chamber music of 1960 and the other for the best choral work.

The chamber music, Elliot Carter's Second Quartet, also won the 1960 Pulitzer prize in music. The score was finished in 1959 and played first in New York in March, 1960. It now is on record, by the Juilliard String Quartet, with another prize winner, William Schuman's Third Quartet, which won a Town Hall award in 1950. Whether the appeal of Carter's work will endure remains to be seen, but as a recorded performance it is brilliant and fascinating.

The choral work is Francis Poulenc's "Gloria in G Major for Soprano, Chorus and Orchestra." The premiere recording by Angel was made in Paris in February under Poulenc's supervision, with soprano Rosanna Carteri and the French National Radio-Television Orchestra and Chorus under Georges Pretre. On the other side is Poulenc's "Concerto in G Minor for Organ," with organist Maurice Duruflé. The stereo effects of the score and the recordings will attract audio enthusiasts.

The Poulenc "Gloria" won critical praise when performed in New York by the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch. Its melodies are fresh and joyful and the work should gain in favor as this fine recording makes it better known.

An American-taped release of Beethoven's "Appassionata" Sonata, both on discs and in four-track tape, by the Russian pianist, Sviatoslav Richter, is one of the top versions now available. This is a tremendous performance that stands along with his earlier disc of Brahms Second Piano Concerto as one of the season's better piano recordings. The "Funeral March" sonata is on the other side.

Two young European pianists have been recorded in distinguished fashion. Maurizio Pollini, 18, performs excitingly Chopin's First Piano Concerto with which he won a 1960 Warsaw award. The young Italian shows great promise in this disc with the Philharmonic Orchestra under Paul Kletzki. He has won acclaim in Milan since he was 14. The recording has great sound appeal.

The other disc is by Eric Heidsieck, 24, a Frenchman playing Mozart's Concertos No. 20 and 23 with Andre Vandernoot and the Conservatory Concert Orchestra. Heidsieck, a member of the champagne family, plays his own cadenzas instead of the traditional ones provided by Beethoven and Schnabel.

CORNING, N.Y.
LEADER
D. 14,460
JUL 19 1961

George E. Sokolsky

Birthdays In Tanglewood Thrill And Recall Pleasures, Problems

Up here in the Berkshires, at Tanglewood, in a couple of days, the 80th birthday of Gertrude Robinson Smith will be celebrated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and several thousand people. Gertrude Robinson Smith created Tanglewood, an altogether new concept in musical festivals. Her basic idea was that a musical festival in this country could maintain the highest standard, not compromising to bring crowds, and at no point reducing it to a bandstand in a park. On the whole, with rare exceptions, Tanglewood has been able to maintain its high quality. There is one night when all hell breaks loose and Arthur Fiedler does a Boston Pops concert but generally there has been no compromise.

Gertrude Robinson Smith will be 80 years old, which is ripe enough for these parts where the aged are numerous. However, there is very little age about Gertrude who has just flipped in from Paris and will undoubtedly spend a very busy summer entertaining and being entertained by the very many who love her and who recognize her devotion to music in its noblest forms. Tanglewood will ever be a monument to her organizational talents which age has not lessened.

Unfortunately I shall not be at her birthday party because I have promised to go to another that very night. And this one is for Lewis Rosenstiel who built the Schenley Corporation which sells whiskey and such matters. But he is perhaps more concerned with the economics of the world and the movement of gold and the perils to mankind in fiat money. Often a man's hobbies are more significant than what one does for his daily bread. And this is true of Rosenstiel although he likes to give the impression that his major concern is bottles and what goes into them.

Then next month in August I shall be celebrating the birthdays of two men whom I have come to love over the years. One is Herbert Hoover who will be 87 on August 10. I have known Herbert Hoover with some degree of intimacy for close to 30 years and during recent years I have lunched with him once a week, gathering from him such knowledge and wisdom as only such an encyclopedic mind and broad experience as his can possess.

Back in such years as 1933 and 1934, Hoover was deeply depressed. He was sensitive to the bitter and unjust attacks on him and perhaps by the fact that so many who owed their careers and perhaps fortunes to him, cut themselves off from him. However, time passed and Herbert Hoover went to work, turning out book after book, studying current conditions, traveling about the world on food problems, heading two commissions for the organization of the Executive branch of government and finally undertaking the massive research in the foreign policy of the United States sinse 1933—a task that will probably take him another year or two.

Buoyant, gay, full of the zest of life, Herbert Hoover is today a more exciting personality than he was when he was President. He has grown into a philosophic historian whose wisdom is above and beyond party. He is today the prototype of the American, born in poverty, on a farm in Iowa, working his way through college, becoming one of the country's leading engineers, and, having made his fortune and given the recognition and opportunity, devoted the rest of his life to public service.

Everyone says that it is so remarkable that Hervert Hoover has lived long enough to see the day when he is again recognized by his people as a beloved figure. But it does not matter to Herbert Hoover how long he has lived. What concerns him most is that there is so much left to do.

And then a few days later, many will recall kindly the birthday of that amazing personality, Bernard Baruch, who at 91 sits about discussing the affairs of the world in intimate detail, whose colossal memory is always a shock to younger men who remember so little. Bernard Baruch has lived long and he has served his country well.

His father, a Polish Jew, settled in Charleston, South Carolina where, as a physician, he served in the Confederate Army. Bernie's mother came of a family that had been in the United States several centuries. After the Civil War, the family moved to New York City where Dr. Baruch did the best he could to eke out a living for a large family. Bernard went to what is now the City College which made no charges. He has repaid the city a thousand-fold for his education. He became a stock broker, earned a large fortune and when opportunity came in 1917, he entered upon a career of devotion to his country.

Baruch is often called "advisor to Presidents"—a meaningless title. His true greatness is that he has served his countrymen honorably and truthfully and has given the people sound economic advice.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUL 22 1961

At Tanglewood

Boston Symphony Orchestra Offers Unheard of Returns

Boston Symphony Orchestra last night — In the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox. Charles Munch, Conductor.
Overture to "Coriolan" OP. 62 Beethoven
Symphony No. 1 in C Minor Op. 68 Brahms
Gloria, for Soprano Solo, Chorus and Orchestra Poulenc
Soloist Adele Addison
Festival Chorus prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson in Pittsfield.

By FRANK N. PATTERSON

Though one might feel that putting his music in the hands of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is as safe as putting his money into U. S. bonds there is one fillip that should be considered; the BSO brings unheard of returns.

"Coriolan" Overture

Take for instance the "Coriolan" overture, a work as old hat to the Symphony as the Fifth, or to name a work on the program, Brahms First. However, despite the hottest night of the summer (it even steamed up the glasses of the instrumentalists), the work appeared neither as battered hats nor old shoes. It was definitely more like a cool midnight dip in the lake.

Or take a new work, the Poulenc Gloria which was commissioned by the Koussevitsky Music Foundation in 1959 and first performed in Boston with Adele Addison and the Chorus Pro Music on Jan. 21 of this year. Does it too reap the same rewards of established works? I'm sure it does, but I am not sure this work will continue to do so.

The orchestra played as though the work was the best of Ravel. Adele Addison sang the difficult tessitura as though it were the crowning point of her career. The chorus of fledged musicians, though actually amateur singers and hence untrained to a sounding chorus, did an amazingly fine job. The group had but two weeks to pull itself together into a chorus and learn this new work.

Word Itself

It is the word itself, not the performers, that raises the doubt. There is an uneven flow that on one hand resembles a childlike exuberance which approaches, without ever quite reaching it, the aspect of a jazz, confident but naive teenager. Again, like the opening pronouncement of the Gloria that stirs one to fling open the doors of churches closed for summer vacations, and yet another is exemplified by the soprano soloist's ascending piano passage of Domine Deus that disappears in a pianissimo personal expression of religious sentiment.

True, in each movement a mood was created that approximately matched each of the six sections of the Gloria, but the mode or style change was so abrupt it seemed almost arbitrary and unbalanced to this listener. In another work such revitalizing of the auditor's ear might prove to be a large success, but in this instance the listener didn't know whether he would mentally stand, sit, shake or roll soon enough to do any one thing.

The chorus was most ably prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, but it would be tantamount to conflict of interest to describe how very well this was done.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
JUL 25 1961

Three Notable Figures Share Festival Honors

Laurels for the third weekend of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood were shared among three notable figures, Gertrude Robinson-Smith, Isaac Stern and Pierre Monteux. In a noteworthy three days Charles Munch and the full complement of the Boston Symphony Orchestra were the expected and inimitable projection of musical fare making these honors possible.

Friday evening's concert was dedicated to Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith proud founder of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in 1934, on the occasion of her 80th birthday. An inscribed scroll and a special recording of Poulenc's "Gloria" were presented to Miss Robinson-Smith in gratitude and "admiration for her vital interest and energy that have initiated and built the Berkshire Festival and Music Shed at Tanglewood."

Adele Addison was the soprano soloist in three moving sections of the "Gloria" in the evening's performance. It is dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitsky. In six parts with an alternating full and half chorus it is composed with a free rhythmic beat. Expansive and tellingly simple the clarity of the composer's style and texture were manifest throughout. The chorus was finely trained by Alfred Nash Pattersonn, with Dr. Munch integrating the performers with his usual searching musicianship.

Perfection in every instance seemed to mark Saturday's program. Dr. Munch chose tempi moderate enough so that every detail of the music could be savored with full enjoyment. Isaac Stern was the feature of this rare evening. With his superb Guarnerius he achieves a melting velvety tone. Knowing the Beethoven Concerto in D major, Op. 61, so well, he made it speak from profound and revelatory soundings. In many sections the unified orchestral strings could be likened to a quartet accompanying a solo violinist. A rare hearing of Schumann's "Genoveva" Overture charmed the early arrivals. The constantly changing tone color of the instrumental choirs in William Schumann's virile Seventh Symphony, at times marvelouly acrid, was always sharply defined.

A standing ovation by audience and musicians was given to Pierre Monteux, another octogenarian, and star of Sunday's concert. Changed to the near-classic position by the formidably able conductor, a reduced corps of the orchestra opened with a slightly tilted "Old Airs and Dances for the Lute" by Respighi, Suite No. 1. The lower voiced strings provided a sonorous background for the melodic line of the Gagliarda. Slow and rather melancholy was the Villanella with flute and oboe shining through the harp and string accompaniment. The conclusion of the varied tempo Passo Mezzo e Mascherada brought enthusiastic applause and Mr. Monteux' recognition of the first-desk oboe, cello and violin artists, Mr. Gomberg, Mr. Mayes and Mr. Burgin.

The soporific afternoon was not the time for Viotti's Concerto in A minor, No. 22. Mr. Stern drew as much interest from the music he was reading as the humidity permitted, with Mr. Monteux' alert orchestral direction. It is such a basic part of a violinist's learning that this fundamentally simple concerto is almost unrecognizable as an artist's vehicle. Intonation was dubious and difficult in such heat, augmented by the overhead lights. The lively dancing "Agitato assai" with its skipping rhythmic figures aroused most of the cheering listeners.

After intermission Mr. Stern again amazed and compelled with his facile virtuosity in Bartok's fascinating Rhapsody No. 1. He insisted on sharing applause with the modest Monteux.

Strauss' Rosenkavalier Suite proved a charming and familiar finish even though interpretation was studied and rather unsteady. Certainly the 104 degree heat could account for a lack of continual verve from the shirt-sleeved musicians, and the venerable conductor. There were some sun-worshippers among the lawn occupants, but most sought the shade of trees and buildings where the temperature was lower. The total attendance for Sunday was 8,734, for the weekend 30,784, with a high of 10,949 on Saturday evening.

Eugene Ormandy will conduct at Tanglewood for the first time next Saturday. The program will include Strauss' "Don Juan," Roy Harris' Third Symphony, Rousel's "Bacchus et Ariane" suite and Brahms' Second Symphony.

—M.deB.B.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
D. 66,353
JUL 24 1961

114

At the Concert

Monteux Returns--to Cheers of 9,000

ISAAC STERN

By TED STRONGIN
Knickerbocker News Staff Writer

PIERRE MONTEUX returned to an old haunt, the shed at Tanglewood, for the first time this season Sunday afternoon to conduct the Boston Symphony.

He found almost 9,000 cheering, bravo-ing wildly clapping friends on hand to greet him. For three-and-a-half solid minutes at the end of the concert, the audience gave the 86-year-old veteran a thundering ovation.

The soloist for the day was a mere lad half the conductor's age, Isaac Stern. Mr. Stern was heard in the Viotti violin Concerto No. 22 and in the Bartok Rhapsody No. 1 for violin and orchestra, the latter a Tanglewood first.

★ ★ ★

RESPIGHI'S "Old Dances and Airs for Lute" Suite No. 1; three dances from De Falla's "Three Cornered Hat" ballet and the Richard Strauss Suite from his opera, "Rosenkavalier," were tastefully interspersed around and among the two solo works, making excellently balanced fare.

As for Mr. Stern, the word "mere lad" used above certainly does not describe his playing. It's merely that the difference in ages stood out. Mr. Monteux is apparently indestructible and so is what he gets from the orchestra.

Mr. Monteux's world of music is firm, broad-based, completely comfortable and altogether secure. The Respighi sparkled. The De Falla was a palpable organism. One could see it, feel it and touch it as well as hear it.

★ ★ ★

AND THE "Rosenkavalier" brought down the house. This suite is the ultimate in waltzes, the richest flavor possible. At the hands of Monteux — who is secure enough to take all sorts of liberties with time and phrasing and still stay on course— one dives completely into the Viennese atmosphere. The "Rosenkavalier" Suite was about as luscious as it can get yesterday.

Mr. Stern, of course, is familiar at Tanglewood. His fans there know him as a violinist with fire, breadth, elegance.

These qualities were not all of them needed in the Viotti concerto. Elegance, impeccable styling, grace of line were what Mr. Stern offered most suitably.

★ ★ ★

THE VIOTTI is tuneful but tame. The player's personality stands out since the composer's isn't strong.

Bartok is the opposite of Viotti. The Rhapsody has two powerfully contrasted elements. In one, the violin is given a bravura solo part, full of grand chords and attacks, far-ranging passages, very Central European sounding.

The solo part is set awash in vibrating, shimmering, clashing orchestra textures.

★ ★ ★

BARTOK'S IDEA is splendid but to me it didn't jell. There were, however, extremely intriguing hums and murmurs and the aforementioned clashes from time to time.

All the same the Rhapsody lacked the definitive stamp with which Mr. Monteux marked everything else on the program.

Oddly enough, the Rhapsody had a minimum of the vigorous, propelling force so characteristic of Bartok.

But no matter. Taken as a whole, the concert was splendid.

★ ★ ★

AS FOR THE orchestra, it had its usual noble, powerful, rock-bottom sound when playing all together. And individual players etched out their moments with fine personality.

Among great orchestras, the Boston is the one to me that sounds the biggest and grandest, like a great, great deep gong. As in the past, Monteux and the Boston are a momentous combination. He brings out the Boston's best.

We shall hear what Ormandy does with them next Saturday night.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Citizen (e)
LACONIA, N. H.
Circ. 5,848

JUL 29 1961

Attend Concerts Honoring Gertrude Robinson Smith

Mrs. Frederick Smith of New Hampton and her sister-in-law Mrs. Robinson W. Smith of North Main St., attended concerts at Tanglewood, Mass., the past week end. Friday evening the Boston Symphony Orchsetra conducted by Charles Munch honored Gertrude Robinson Smith, a distant connection on her 80th birthday for pioneer work in establishing the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in 1934.

The Saturday evening concert conducted by Mr. Munch with the violinist, Isaac Stern as guest soloist was an unusual musical presentation.

Sunday afternoon a concert by the entire orchestra conducted by Pierre Monteux with Mr. Stern again as guest soloist proved to be one of the most outstanding of the 1961 season. In the musical shed and on surrounding lawns and under the trees a most appreciative audience was held spellbound while listening to the program of some of the world's finest music. Mr. Monteux, 86, a former conducter of the Boston Symphony, is the idol not only of the listeners but also of the orchestra members themselves. He was led back to the podium time after time by Mr. Stern to receive tumultuous ovations by musicians and all attending, estimated to be about 16,000.

The report that Mr. Munch will retire in 1962 proved to be a note of sadness. However, the fact that his successor is to be the noted conductor of the Metropolitan Opera, Eric Leinsdorf, was well received.

While in Lee, Mass., the Smiths were guests of Dr. Fred Vohr, a brother of Mrs. Frederick Smith and a practising physician in that locality.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
D. 66,353
JUL 24 1961

Soloist Stern Brilliant In Beethoven Concerto

HOW would you expect Isaac Stern and the Boston Symphony to play Beethoven's Violin Concerto in D Major?

Brilliantly? Well, that is exactly the way it was performed Saturday night at Tanglewood—to the cheers of a widely enthusiastic audience which brought the soloist and the conductor, Dr. Charles Munch, back again and again until the lights in the shed were finally turned on.

The violin concerto was the highlight of a somewhat uninspired Tanglewood evening, although the feeling persists that this was not a piece that unduly taxed Mr. Stern's remarkable ability. He did not spare the horses, though, and the result was a stunning performance.

★ ★ ★

AS THE BEETHOVEN began, a dowager type seated near me commented, "Now this is REAL music." This indicated, I feel, that she shared my disenchantment with the preceding selection, William Schuman's Symphony No. 7.

Mr. Schuman's first movement was distinguished by woodwinds on the stage and much coughing in the audience, the second was acceptable but hardly memorable and the third was terribly saccharine and unpleasantly dissonant. What's more, it sounded curiously detached and isolated from the rest of the work. In the final movement, the horns and drums gave the symphony a verve it had lacked up until then.

DR. CHARLES MUNCH

The composer, a 50-year-old native of New York City, was on hand and was warmly applauded when Dr. Munch brought him onstage after the performance.

THE PROGRAM opened with Robert Schumann's Overture to the Opera "Genoveva." The French horns, which provided a major accent, seemed a trifle slow in responding at the beginning, but this may have been attributable to the breakneck pace that Dr. Munch is known to favor on occasion. At any rate, the piece moved the conductor to more flair than he customarily displays.

Speaking of Dr. Munch, he was in fine fettle all night, and it is hard to conceive of him retiring at the end of the 1962 season, as he plans to do. He should keep conducting as long as he can hold a baton.

One final word. I regret to report that Tanglewood has lost none of its appeal for the Coney Island crowd in the too-short shorts who litter the well-manicured lawns with their beer cans and other debris. It's getting so that the customers who dress tastefully and pick up after their picnics are considered gauche, maybe even a bit eccentric.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105

JUL 24 1961

Music

Stern Soloist At Tanglewood

By ELINOR HUGHES

Clear skies and idyllic weather made for notably large crowds for the first weekend of the Shed concerts by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra, and with Charles Munch conducting Saturday night and Pierre Monteux on Sunday afternoon, and with Isaac Stern as soloist at both concerts, there was reason for general rejoicing.

Read Substance

The Saturday night concert combined the solidly classic with the present day, opening with an overture by Robert Schumann and closing with Beethoven's Violin Concerto, and including as the real substance of the first half of the program, William Schuman's Symphony No. 7, which was commissioned by the Serge Koussevitzky Music Foundation and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in celebration of the orchestra's 75th birthday and presented in Boston for the first time last Oct. 21.

Mr. Schuman was present and took several bows in response to the enthusiastic response of the big audience to this symphony, which seemed to me a work of uneven quality, beginning disappointingly yet achieving, in progressed passages of genuine interest and excitment.

Isaac Stern, serious and youthful of appearance, gave a devoted and inspiring performance of Beethoven's only violin concerto, which is a titanic and fiercely demanding work. It sounded superb throughout, as Mr. Munch maintained an admirable balance between orchestra and soloist, and it was received with thunderous delight.

Afternoon Concert

The following afternoon, there was a most interesting program, consisting of Respighi's Old Dances and Airs for the Lute, Viotti's Violin Concerto in A minor, three dances from de Falla's "Three - Cornered Hat," Bartok's Rhapsody No. 2 for Violin and Orchestra and a suite from "Der Rosenkavalier."

Pierre Monteux, vigorous, venerable and as alert as ever, conducted, seemingly not disturbed by the fierce heat which led the members of the orchestra to remove their jackets. To the Respighi work he brought a stylized grace and the feeling of the 16th century dance rhythms which had inspired the composer to adapt them into a suite.

Then the lovely Violin Concerto, dating from 1793 when the composer was only 18, was beautifully played by Isaac Stern, who can be as fine a classicist as he is a romanticist, and who later in the afternoon distinguished himself in still another field by his playing of the solo part in the high individual and exciting Bartok Rhapsody.

The whole afternoon was gay and brightly colored of mood, and Mr. Monteux and the orchestra gave fire and humor to those wonderful dances from "The Three Cornered Hat," and at the close reminded what a rich melodist and master of tonal coloring was Richard Strauss.

The outpouring of affection for Mr. Monteux was as genuine as it was moving. How rich a harvest his devotion to music has brought him.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 22 1961

Music Review

A Tanglewood Milestone

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE FIRST CONCERT of the Tanglewood season at which the entire Boston Symphony Orchestra took part had several additional factors which made it a milestone in Berkshire Festival history.

Before the resumption of the program after intermission the president of the orchestra, Henry B. Cabot, made a short speech in which he presented Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith a specially pressed recording of the feature work of the evening: Francis Poulenc's "Gloria" for soprano, chorus and orchestra. Miss Robinson Smith, long a summer resident of the Berkshires, is the founder of the Berkshire Festival, and the trustees of the orchestra took advantage of the occasion of her 80th birthday to show her a token of their esteem.

It was in 1934 that she conceived the idea of "music under the stars." The availability of Henry Hadley, the American conductor, and of the New York Philharmonic orchestra after the end of its Stadium concerts were the bricks and the mortar. "Gertie," as she is affectionately called out of her earshot but not, be it understood, in any degree of familiarity, was the architect.

* * *

THE HISTORY of Berkshire Festivals records twenty years of that alliance and then, in 1936, came the Boston Symphony and Koussevitzky. In 1938 the famous storm during the Ride of the Valkyrie played under a tent set plans in motion which matured swiftly into the construction of the famous Shed under which all subsequent concerts, as last night, took place.

Conductor Charles Munch had the services last night of the soprano who had sung it on its world premier and all succeeding American performances, Adele Addison. A chorus, finely Poulenc never came to Tanglewood personally although several of his colleagues and fellow-members of the French "six" have been here: Honegger, Ibert and Milhaud, but Poulenc appeared in Pittsfield on Feb. 4, 1950 as pianist with the French singer Pierre Bernac.

* * *

POULENC'S "GLORIA" was commissioned by the Serge Koussevitzky music foundation in the Library of Congress and dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky.

It is not a deep nor sombre work, in spite of its religious application. Indeed, the opening chorus is a jubilant effort in a major key. The whole score is full of rhythmic irregularities but nothing prevents its easy and instantaneous assimilation. The second chorus "Laudamus te" continues "lively and joyous" and the spirit only descends to comparative calm and penitence in the first solo "Domine Deus." Miss Addison sang with full throated confidence and flawless purity. The music lies well for her although it might be difficult to find any which would tax her capabilities. Except for some unusual intervals Poulenc makes modest demands of the soloist.

The following chorus resumes a "swift and joyous" spirit which he sustains by giving the orchestral accompaniment ostentatious figures over which the chorus has a more placid message. Miss Addison's second solo "Domine Deus Angus Dei" is again in the contrastingly suppliant temper and is more effective vocally.

Poulenc starts his final chorus acapella in full voice for the mezzo-sopranos and the tenors, a daring exploit which could be managed by few groups but the preparation and discipline was apparent in the attack and the tonal fidelity, justifying Poulenc's judgment and courage.

* * *

THE PROGRAM began with Beethoven's overture to "Coriolan" followed by the Brahms first symphony. The orchestra was at its superb best. Munch made the overture graphically vivid and gave the symphony a spacious, large and broadly-conceived plan.

Munch is the fourth man to lead this symphony on this same stage. It has been previously performed there by Koussevitzky, Monteux and Carl Schuricht.

In the tonally colorful performance the quiet endings of the first three movements became especially dramatic. An audience of 5,799 which braved the short showers and threatening clouds which appeared just before eight o'clock showed enthusiasm enough to make one guess that the attendance was even larger.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 92,860
JUL 24 1961

Tanglewood Swings Into High

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX—The Berkshire Festival wung into high gear this weekend, at Tanglewood, with the full 04 players of the Boston Symhony Orchestra. Saturday's atendance of 10,949 was only 50 hort of being an all-time record or this weekend, but other conerts trailed last year. Increased nterest was shown in the open ehearsal at 10 a.m. Saturday, at hich 5,302 listeners contributed ome $7,500 in gate admissions o swell the orchestra's pension und.

Charles Munch conducted the irst two concerts. Friday, the anagement honored Miss Gertude Robinson Smith, 80, a leadng spirit in establishing these oncerts in 1934. The Beethoven Coriolan" Overture and Brahms ymphony No. 1 were in strong ontrast to the modern Poulenc's Gloria," with Adele Addison, soprano, and the Festival Chorus, repared by Alfred Nash Patterson. This exciting work I had the privilege of reviewing at Boston at its premiere last January.

Saturday evening brought opposite composers of somewhat similar names, with Robert Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva," and the American William Schuman's Symphony No. 7.

Isaac Stern aroused strong enthusiasm in the Beethoven Violin Concerto in D major.

Sunday's concert offered two attractions: Stern and that remarkable personality, turned 86 in April, Pierre Monteux. The orchestra greeted Monteux with a standing ovation, and played for him with superb zeal.

The afternoon was a charming parade of colors and styles, turning gradually from older Italian forms to modern treatment of Spanish and Hungarian national materials, and the rich scoring of Richard Strauss.

Clear Tone

Utterly delightful was Respighi's Suite No. 1 of "Old Airs and Dances for the Lute." The "Gagliarda" was frank, brisk, well-accented music, alternating with lingering phrases. The "Villanella" was slow and sweet, tenderly mournful. The "Passo mezzo e mascherada" returned to an exuberant mood, its rapid phrases bringing some of the few moments of raggedness heard during the afternoon.

Stern, playing Viotti's Concerto in A minor with an orchestra of reduced size, brought not only dazzling technique but a tone which, while not the largest, was of great clarity. Some of his most eloquent messages were delivered in mezzo voice, and the elaborate ornaments were handled as a part of a gentle picture, rather than as bold feats. The closing movement was a beehive of busy accuracy.

Bartok's Rhapsody No. 1 had a wealth of opportunities for the violinist and orchestra. Its slow "lassu" assigned many colorful exclamations to the violin, and an interesting cadenza played principally against a taut piano score. Here and in the rapid "friss" the entire orchestra was displayed in interesting hues and rhythms. Monteux's ability to secure neat results without loss of verve shone as always.

The conductor roused the audience to "bravos" with his handling of three dances from Falla's ballet, "The Three-Cornered Hat." Starting in the program's established gentle mood, these dances worked up to ever more varied and explosive effects, the final one alternating the grandiose with wry phrases full of robust humor.

The Suite from Richard Strauss' "Der Rosenkavalier" was a joy throughout. It burst immediately into glittering and irresistibly flowing rhapsody, and continued as a vibrant and engrossing experience. A brilliant waltz brought amid its extravagant variations a fine solo by concert master Richard Burgin. The suite abounds in tender scenes not heard in the familiar collection of waltzes from this opera.

ADVERTISEMENT

Big Weekend at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE FIRST "big" weekend at Tanglewood drew 20,000 people to the final two concerts. Favored by the weather and with several unusual attractions on the programs, the two events played to very large audiences on both Saturday evening and yesterday afternoon.

The remarkable octogenarian, Pierre Monteux, was the guest conductor yesterday, and he chose a program, except for the Viotti violin concerto, of music all by his contemporaries: Respighi, Falla, Bartok and Richard Strauss. It was a "pops" dance program and was intoxicating in its light and luscious materials.

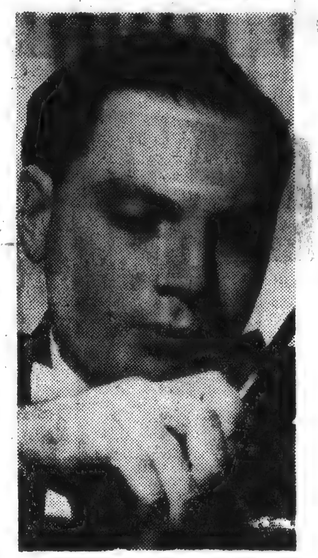
* * *

ISAAC STERN was the soloist in the Viotti concerto no. 22, in A minor and also in the Bartok rhapsody no. 1. As he had done the Beethoven on the preceding evening he accounted for half of each program, and it was interesting to see what a master artist does with music of three such different epochs.

He has played the Beethoven many times here at Tanglewood but never twice the same. He is continually searching for a deeper and truer exposition of this great concerto, and at this point he has arrived at an approach which no one but a master of his authority and competence could, or would dare, execute. He has achieved a degree of serenity through the discard of all fripperies. He uses no musical cosmetics and is intent on conveying the pristine beauty of Beethoven. Whenever there is an opportunity, he understates a theme or a decorative figure. He used stopped strings where a harmonic is indicated, he avoids slides where they might be violinistically convenient, he doesn't linger on exposed notes just to enjoy the altitude a little longer. In fine, it is a supremely mature reading. His violinistic qualfications are above discussion.

* * *

HE HAS ADOPTED another factor which in our experience is most rare: he stands quietly during the whole long introduction, and allows the whole interest to focus on the orchestra.



Isaac Stern

A contemporary of Beethoven said of Clement, the violinist for whom the concerto was written, that "his playing is indescribably graceful, dainty and elegant and not the bold robust powerful playing of the school of Viotti."

It so happens that while Stearn's playing was not at all dainty Saturday night, neither was it recklessly robust in the Viotti, which he dusted off and took from the museum shelves. Viotti was a contemporary of Mozart, but outlived him to reach the last years of Beethoven and Schubert. He was one of the species of musicians who wrote concertos for their own performances.

Monteux reduced his forces for this accompaniment, and Stern mercifully cut the long orchestral introduction and also the long first movement cadenza. The soloist's asceticism here was an anachronism, if our remembrance of things read is any guide. The embellishments both written and improvised, which soloists of that era were supposed to indulge in made show pieces of everything they touched. Stern's singing tone cannot fail to delight the least sensitive hearer.

The concerto has a place now only on a program where a contrasting exhibit accompanies it. The performance incidentally showed a minimum of rehearsal. But the Bartok rhapsody No. 1 was the counter-validating offering. The two folk dances were given a marvelous character and style by Stern. The "lassie" is a lovely, intimate grandmother's tale; the "friss," an uninhibited country dance.

* * *

SATURDAY EVENING the major offering was the seventh symphony of William Schuman. The composer was present in the audience and Munch called him to the stage to acknowledge the tremendous reception his work received. He was on the Tanglewood lot also on the preceding day when his music was sun and played by the Fromm players, after which he answered questions and discussed facets of contemporary music.

BY a strange juxtaposition, Munch prefaced the "Bill" Schuman symphony by the overture "Genoveva" of Robert Schumann. (with two "n"s). The present head of the Juilliard school, Schuman is a prolific composer, and feels that his medium is the orchestra. He would like his music to speak for itself and will not be drawn into a discussion of the meaning of his own work, as lucidly as he can speak when he so wishes.

* * *

HIS SYMPHONY is in four movements, played without pause, except for a short breather at the end of the first. The indication for the third movement is "cantabile intensamente," but many of us came away with the impression, to which, probably, Munch weightily contributed, that the whole symphony is "intensamente." It is written for a very large orchestra and every instrument seems to be playing without cease, relentlessly being demanded to give its all.

But Schuman has something to say. We felt that Munch caught the essence of Schuman's purpose. Schuman has a personal sense of sound. He writes clusters of lines for each orchestral group, and when they bow and blow at the top of their potentials, the measure of decibels is not normally exceeded. Yet many composers have have felt that the medium of their choice was inadequate and forced them to their utmost.

* * *

AT A FIRST hearing, the busy orchestration obscures quick clarification. The rhythmic involvement is facile and natural but the use of the whole harmonic spectrum simultaneously requires a moment of adjustment. There are several instances of contrasting contentment, conspicuously at the end of the first movement where a dialogue between a clarinet and a bass clarinet resolves the problem, and the slow movement has an appeal immediately engaging.

There is a consistent forward urge to this symphony, probably "a pressure" might describe it. Schuman seems to have so much to express. There is rarely a situation where a dialogue is taking place, but all the cast is talking at once. It is youthful music, or rather, music which comtemporary youth accepts and understands without any need for analysis. It's their language.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
JUL 24 1961

Berkshire Festival Meets Its Big Crowds

By Louis Chapin

Lenox, Mass.

The full complement of the Boston Symphony met with a set of ample Tanglewood audiences this weekend (about 30,000 in all) as it left Bach and Mozart behind and turned to composers of greater box office caliber. In other words, there was Beethoven, Schumann, Brahms, and Strauss to offset the public's uncertainties about Poulenc, Schuman, and, I suppose, Bartók.

Francis Poulenc's "Gloria," which filled the latter half of the Friday night program, was given its première in Boston last January.

We are apparently not yet a country of choral concert-goers. Yet, on any occasion when M. Poulenc's new work is sung by a group as technically authoritative as this Festival Chorus (prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson), supported by comparable players, its vocal-instrumental graces should convert numbers of the chorally uncommitted. They apparently did so on Friday, greatly aided by Adele Addison's well-lighted sense of the solo line.

To open this program Charles Munch provided consequential Beethoven in the Overture to "Coriolan," and a Brahms' First whose last movement almost blew its tightly sealed top as it pounded its way back to the lovely horn theme. Incidentally, if a flute can cry for joy, Doriot Anthony Dwyer's flute, as she takes over this theme in the introduction, is the one to do it.

♪ ♪ ♪

Certain high points of the weekend were provided by the presence of William Schuman, whose Seventh Symphony, following Robert Schumann's "Genoveva" overture, was the major item of interest on Saturday night's program, and who was also represented as composer and as conversationalist at the Fromm Music Foundation seminar on Friday afternoon. Mr. Schuman described himself, in a lively give-and-take with Aaron Copland, as "fascinated" with the orchestra as a medium. His symphony, another of last season's Boston premières, supports such a statement with its wealth of exquisite tonal craftsmanship.

The delights of its coloring, such as result from the placing of fine-textured strings over a bass clarinet in the first movement, bend the ear away from formal attentiveness, and I doubt if Mr. Schuman's first desire has been to produce a subject for formal analysis. His orchestra is often felt as a single voice with a multitude of components. His complications sound concerted rather than intellectually constructed.

Growing from this tendency is a difficulty, from the audience point of view, which this work shares with other contemporary symphonies. In fast closing movements, in place of the poised relating of themes in the classic rondo or sonata-allegro, there sometimes develops a more subjective kind of discussion, in which musical voices are raised rather than recapitulated. As a result, the final quantity of sound, while it may be brilliantly organized, reaches an argumentative volume which may shout at the listener rather than speak to him. Dr. Munch led his orchestra to a powerful final climax; but the impact of these brass-dominated passages could dim the memory of earlier subtleties.

♪ ♪ ♪

The large audience was given comfort by Isaac Stern's ample if uneven reading of the Beethoven Violin Concerto. Aside from one or two angry stabs at his phrase endings, Mr. Stern went along with the piece as a pleasant programmatic change of subject, an antidote for a previous insistence of current events. This hardly seems a function that Beethoven himself would have admired.

Mr. Stern reappeared on Sunday afternoon in a program, conducted by Pierre Monteux, that was for the most part a full-colored miscellany of the dance. In Bartók's Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra, for one example, the discussion seemed worth an orchestra's serious attention, and the soloist's knowing way with its Slavic phraseology showed him at his best for the weekend.

Mr. Monteux made charming use of Respighi's first suite of "Old Dances and Airs for the Lute," 16th-century music tastefully upholstered to seat the full sonority of the modern orchestra. The other items of dessert on his program were the somewhat flat-flavored Viotti A minor Violin Concerto (the first meeting of the day between Mr. Stern and his friendly audience), Falla's Dances from "The Three-Cornered Hat," and Richard Strauss's "Rosenkavalier" Suite.

♪ ♪ ♪

Though Mr. Monteux's understanding with the orchestra and soloist was not always of the most limber accuracy, it was compounded of strong mutual love and respect. His art continues to show the benign understatement of wisdom, and it was deeply touching to watch him stand, motionless, to receive an immense closing ovation.

Music: Monteux Triumphs At Tanglewood

LENOX — Yesterday afternoon's Tanglewood concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was a trumph for 86-year-old guest concluded the third weekend of the Bershire Music Festival, with four more weeks to go.

Isaac Stern was soloist in Viotti's Violin Concerto in A Minor, No. 22, and Bela Bartok's Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra.

Yesterday's audience numbered 8,734, bringing the weekend total to 30,784. Last summer it was 32,192 for the corresponding weekend.

The orchestral program: Respighi's "Old Dances and Airs for the Lute," Suite No. 1; Manuel DeFalla's three dances from the ballet, "The Three-Cornered Hat;" and the suite from Richard Strauss' opera, "Der Rosenkavalier."

Tribute to Orchestra

Monteux' conducting was a tribute to the orchestra that has not sounded as well in this festival except in Brahms' first symphony conducted by Charles Munch on Friday night.

Without studying the situation, one might have thought that Monteux had a minor role in the wonderful musical products that were being created. He is a direct opposite of the podium exhibitionist. But when one took a closer look, it was amazing to note the number of cues that Monteux supplied relative to phrasing, shading and phrase conclusions.

His conducting of the Falla dances yesterday was baton mastery in its highest form. It was difficult to associate the conductor's calm with this cloudburst of sound.

Rhythms were so iron - clad that they compelled attention and over them floated glowing, graceful melodies. Monteux allowed no lag in activity even to placing extra emphasis on fragmentary melody, especially in woodwind. He preserved the music's constant "Hauteur." It was Spanish music of the most virile kind, in which the quietest sections had something paean-like about them.

Monteux's version of the Strauss "Rosenkavalier" suite was a marvel of interpretive acumen. It had none of the "swell-and-burst" that was heard last season on Worcester Civic Music.

Nor did the thinly instrumentated passages get spotty in tone quality. Brasses gave out a gorgeous tone. The woodwinds were not always as fortunate, and the strings made the main waltz theme soar with excitement.

Treatment from beginning to end was most flexible, impossible except with a great orchestra. Monteux removed all the excess sugary content and brought the thing to climax without crash or clatter.

Nobility earmarked the "Gagliarda," a lively dance in straightforward rhythm. Oboe, flute and cello solos were superimposed over muted strings with beautiful effect in the "Villanella." The final dance, "Passo Mezzo" was a peppy skirmish.

Stern had two successes yesterday — big and moderate. They were due, in the same order, to the Viotti and Bartok works. He played both with score, which he used sparingly.

Although Viotti was a contemporary of Beethoven's, yesterday's concerto was a pale shadow of the Beethoven that Stern played Saturday night. In the first movement, soloist and orchestra were in general accord on style, although Stern was not always on pitch, nor his tempo stable. Sentimental as the slow movement is by nature, the soloist expressed it with warmth and poise. The finale was agitated within the confines of a farily moderate tempo. It was articulate playing of elaborate passagework by soloist and orchestra.

Presumably the Bartok rhapsody looked good on the program. It wasn't as felicitous to the ear, although marvelously performed. It gets its "raphsody" identification from the customary "Lassan" and "Friska" — emotion and bombast.

R. M.

Grace Notes — Music

TANGLEWOOD CONCERT
Friday, July 21
By G. G. V.

Of the three works heard in Tanglewood's Music Shed last Friday evening, the Gloria for Soprano, Chorus, and Orchestra by the contemporary French composer Francis Poulenc was perhaps the most interesting, certainly the most novel.

Although it would hardly be appropriate to church use, this Gloria is a welcome addition to the concert repertoire. The Laudamus Te is joyful in a dissinctly jazzy idiom, the Qui sedes is dramatic, and some of the melodic fragments that Poulenc has written around such words as tu solis altissimus and cum Sancto Spiritu are truly inspired. Since we were singing in the Festival Chorus, we cannot justly critize the performance. Our spies in the audience tell us that it came off with the exception of a few spots where Soprano Adele Addison was not at her best.

Also on the program were the Brahms Symphony No. 1, in C Minor and the Beethoven Coriolan Overture. After a two week diet of Bach and Mozart, Dr. Munch and the orchestra lit into the Brahms like hungry men into a rib roast, much to the dedelight of the large audience which burst into an ovation whilst the orchestra was still playing the final cadence.

LAKEVILLE, CONN JOURNAL
TANGLEWOOD CONCERT
Saturday, July 22
By E. B. H.

A capacity crowd was kept enthralled by the varied program presented by the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch on Saturday night.

The program opened with the Overture to Genoveva by Robert Schumann. This rarely heard overture to a seldom performed opera was rather perfunctorily played and causally received by the audience.

There was no question of excitement generated with playing of William Schu Symphony No. 7. It was firs formed less than a year ago work was somewhat difficu this reviewer to appraise. teresting, yes; confusing. However, a second he would help. The symphony enthusiastically received.

The Violin Concerto Major, Op. 61 by Beethove performed with Isaas Ste soloist. It was given a ma cent rendition by Mr. Stern the orchestra. All se swept up by the grandeu Beethoven's music. The formance was an electrif one to witness.

LAKEVILLE CONN. JOURNAL
TANGLEWOOD CONCERT
Sunday, July 23
By R. J. G.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Pierre Monteux served a curious mixed grill. Although lovingly prepared by master chefs, the menu unfortunately lacked the substance of a main course. Regrettably, too, not all ingredients were fully worthy of these cooks.

The hors d'oeuvres (Old Dances and Airs for the Lute, 1st Suite by Respighi) were delightfully served, especially by the incidental soloists. The brilliance of the table setting could not, however, hide the fact that Respighi overcooked his delicately flavored ingredients in an overpowering sauce of his concoction.

The fish course (Violin Concerto #22 by Viotti) was perhaps the least well prepared item. A heavy first movement was marred by some uncharacteristic faulty intonation from Isaac Stern, but this was quickly redeemed by beautifully sustained long phrases in the second movement and strong rhythmic propulsion in the third.

Arthur Fiedler To Conduct Concert

Arthur Fiedler, whose appearance at Tanglewood on Thursday, August 3, is eagerly awaited by thousands of Fiedler-Fans, ahs just announced his program for the Tanglewood concert.

The special program — to bebefit the Berkshire Music Center — will open with Elgar's Pomp and Circumstance, followed by the Overture to Mignon by Thomas, Strauss's beloved Emperor Waltzes and the suite from Offenbach's Gaite Parisienne; Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto in B-flat minor with pianist Earl Wild as soloist, and selections from the Broadway musicals West Side Story and Music Man.

Tickets for Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops at Tanglewood have been on sale at the Berkshire Festival Ticket Office Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., since Monday, July 24.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
JUL 24 1961

Berkshire Festival Meets Its Big Crowds

By Louis Chapin

Lenox, Mass.

The full complement of the Boston Symphony met with a set of ample Tanglewood audiences this weekend (about 30,000 in all) as it left Bach and Mozart behind and turned to composers of greater box office caliber. In other words, there was Beethoven, Schumann, Brahms, and Strauss to offset the public's uncertainties about Poulenc, Schuman, and, I suppose, Bartók.

Francis Poulenc's "Gloria," which filled the latter half of the Friday night program, was given its premiere in Boston last January.

We are apparently not yet a country of choral concert-goers. Yet, on any occasion when M. Poulenc's new work is sung by a group as technically authoritative as this Festival Chorus (prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson), supported by comparable players, its vocal-instrumental graces should convert numbers of the chorally uncommitted. They apparently did so on Friday, greatly aided by Adele Addison's well-lighted sense of the solo line.

To open this program Charles Munch provided consequential Beethoven in the Overture to "Coriolan," and a Brahms' First whose last movement almost blew its tightly sealed top as it pounded its way back to the lovely horn theme. Incidentally, if a flute can cry for joy, Doriot Anthony Dwyer's flute, as she takes over this theme in the introduction, is the one to do it.

* * *

Certain high points of the weekend were provided by the presence of William Schuman, whose Seventh Symphony, following Robert Schumann's "Genoveva" overture, was the major item of interest on Saturday night's program, and who was also represented as composer and as conversationalist at the Fromm Music Foundation seminar on Friday afternoon. Mr. Schuman described himself, in a lively give-and-take with Aaron Copland, as "fascinated" with the orchestra as a medium. His symphony, another of last season's Boston premières, supports such a statement with its wealth of exquisite tonal craftsmanship.

The delights of its coloring, such as result from the placing of fine-textured strings over a bass clarinet in the first movement, bend the ear away from formal attentiveness, and I doubt if Mr. Schuman's first desire has been to produce a subject for formal analysis. His orchestra is often felt as a single voice with a multitude of components. His complications sound concerted rather than intellectually constructed.

Growing from this tendency is a difficulty, from the audience point of view, which this work shares with other contemporary symphonies. In fast closing movements, in place of the poised relating of themes in the classic rondo or sonata-allegro, there sometimes develops a more subjective kind of discussion, in which musical voices are raised rather than recapitulated. As a result, the final quantity of sound, while it may be brilliantly organized, reaches an argumentative volume which may shout at the listener rather than speak to him. Dr. Munch led his orchestra to a powerful final climax; but the impact of these brass-dominated passages could dim the memory of earlier subtleties.

* * *

The large audience was given comfort by Isaac Stern's ample if uneven reading of the Beethoven Violin Concerto. Aside from one or two angry stabs at his phrase endings, Mr. Stern went along with the piece as a pleasant programmatic change of subject, an antidote for a previous insistence of current events. This hardly seems a function that Beethoven himself would have admired.

Mr. Stern reappeared on Sunday afternoon in a program, conducted by Pierre Monteux, that was for the most part a full-colored miscellany of the dance. In Bartók's Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra, for one example, the discussion seemed worth an orchestra's serious attention, and the soloist's knowing way with its Slavic phraseology showed him at his best for the weekend.

Mr. Monteux made charming use of Respighi's first suite of "Old Dances and Airs for the Lute," 16th-century music tastefully upholstered to seat the full sonority of the modern orchestra. The other items of dessert on his program were the somewhat flat-flavored Viotti A minor Violin Concerto (the first meeting of the day between Mr. Stern and his friendly audience), Falla's Dances from "The Three-Cornered Hat," and Richard Strauss's "Rosenkavalier" Suite.

* * *

Though Mr. Monteux's understanding with the orchestra and soloist was not always of the most limber accuracy, it was compounded of strong mutual love and respect. His art continues to show the benign understatement of wisdom, and it was deeply touching to watch him stand, motionless, to receive an immense closing ovation.

Music: Monteux Triumphs At Tanglewood

LENOX — Yesterday afternoon's Tanglewood concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was a triumph for 86-year-old guest conductor who concluded the third weekend of the Bershire Music Festival, with four more weeks to go.

Isaac Stern was soloist in Viotti's Violin Concerto in A Minor, No. 22, and Bela Bartok's Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra.

Yesterday's audience numbered 8,734, bringing the weekend total to 30,784. Last summer it was 32,192 for the corresponding weekend.

The orchestral program: Respighi's "Old Dances and Airs for the Lute," Suite No. 1; Manuel DeFalla's three dances from the ballet, "The Three-Cornered Hat," and the suite from Richard Strauss' opera, "Der Rosenkavalier."

Tribute to Orchestra

Monteux' conducting was a tribute to the orchestra that has not sounded as well in this festival except in Brahms' first symphony conducted by Charles Munch on Friday night.

Without studying the situation, one might have thought that Monteux had a minor role in the wonderful musical products that were being created. He is a direct opposite of the podium exhibitionist. But when one took a closer look, it was amazing to note the number of cues that Monteux supplied relative to phrasing, shading and phrase conclusions.

His conducting of the Falla dances yesterday was baton mastery in its highest form. It was difficult to associate the conductor's calm with this cloudburst of sound.

Rhythms were so iron - clad that they compelled attention and over them floated glowing, graceful melodies. Monteux allowed no lag in activity even to placing extra emphasis on fragmentary melody, especially in woodwind. He preserved the music's constant "Hauteur." It was Spanish music of the most virile kind, in which the quietest sections had something pagan-like about them.

Monteux's version of the Strauss "Rosenkavalier" suite was a marvel of interpretive acumen. It had none of the "swell-and-burst" that was heard last season on Worcester Civic Music.

Nor did the thinly instrumentated passages get spotty in tone quality. Brasses gave out a gorgeous tone. The woodwinds were not always as fortunate, and the strings made the main waltz theme soar with excitement.

Treatment from beginning to end was most flexible, impossible except with a great orchestra. Monteux removed all the excess sugary content and brought the thing to climax without crash or clatter.

Nobility earmarked the "Gagliarda," a lively dance in straightforward rhythm. Oboe, flute and cello solos were superimposed over muted strings with beautiful effect in the "Villanella." The final dance, "Passe Mezzo" was a peppy skirmish.

Stern had two successes yesterday — big and moderate. They were due, in the same order, to the Viotti and Bartok works. He played both with score, which he used sparingly.

Although Viotti was a contemporary of Beethoven's, yesterday's concerto was a pale shadow of the Beethoven that Stern played Saturday night. In the first movement, soloist and orchestra were in general accord on style, although Stern was not always on pitch, nor his tempo stable. Sentimental as the slow movement is by nature, the soloist expressed it with warmth and poise. The finale was agitated within the confines of a fairly moderate tempo. It was articulate playing of elaborate passagework by soloist and orchestra.

Presumably the Bartok rhapsody looked good on the program. It wasn't as felicitous to the ear, although marvelously performed. It gets its "raphsody" identification from the customary "Lassan" and "Friska" — emotion and bombast.

R. M.

Grace Notes — Music

TANGLEWOOD CONCERT
Friday, July 21
By G. G. V.

Of the three works heard in Tanglewood's Music Shed last Friday evening, the Gloria for Soprano, Chorus, and Orchestra by the contemporary French composer Francis Poulenc was perhaps the most interesting, certainly the most novel.

Although it would hardly be appropriate to church use, this Gloria is a welcome addition to the concert repertoire. The Laudamus Te is joyful in a dissinctly jazzy idiom, the Qui sedes is dramatic, and some of the melodic fragments that Poulenc has written around such words as tu solis altissimus and cum Sancto Spiritu are truly inspired. Since we were singing in the Festival Chorus, we cannot justly critize the performance. Our spies in the audience tell us that it came off with the exception of a few spots where Soprano Adele Addison was not at her best.

Also on the program were the Brahms Symphony No. 1, in C Minor and the Beethoven Coriolan Overture. After a two week diet of Bach and Mozart, Dr. Munch and the orchestra lit into the Brahms like hungry men into a rib roast, much to the de-delight of the large audience which burst into an ovation whilst the orchestra was still playing the final cadence.

LAKEVILLE, CONN. JOURNAL
TANGLEWOOD CONCERT
Saturday, July 22
By E. B. H.

A capacity crowd was kept enthralled by the varied program presented by the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch on Saturday night.

The program opened with the Overture to Genoveva by Robert Schumann. This rarely heard overture to a seldom performed opera was rather perfunctorily played and causally received by the audience.

There was no question of the excitement generated with the playing of William Schuman's Symphony No. 7. It was first performed less than a year ago. The work was somewhat difficult for this reviewer to appraise. Interesting, yes; confusing, very. However, a second hearing would help. The symphony was enthusiastically received.

The Violin Concerto in D Major, Op. 61 by Beethoven was performed with Isaas Stern as soloist. It was given a magnificent rendition by Mr. Stern and the orchestra. All seemed swept up by the grandeur of Beethoven's music. The performance was an electrifying one to witness.

LAKEVILLE, CONN. JOURNAL
TANGLEWOOD CONCERT
Sunday, July 23
By R. J. G.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Pierre Monteux served a curious mixed grill. Although lovingly prepared by master chefs, the menu unfortunately lacked the substance of a main course. Regrettably, too, not all ingredients were fully worthy of these cooks.

The hors d'oeuvres (Old Dances and Airs for the Lute, 1st Suite by Respighi) were delightfully served, especially by the incidental soloists. The brilliance of the table setting could not, however, hide the fact that Respighi overcooked his delicately flavored ingredients in an overpowering sauce of his concoction.

The fish course (Violin Concerto #22 by Viotti) was perhaps the least well prepared item. A heavy first movement was marred by some uncharacteristic faulty intonation from Isaac Stern, but this was quickly redeemed by beautifully sustained long phrases in the second movement and strong rhythmic propulsion in the third.

Arthur Fiedler To Conduct Concert

Arthur Fiedler, whose appearance at Tanglewood on Thursday, August 3, is eagerly awaited by thousands of Fiedler-Fans, ahs just announced his program for the Tanglewood concert.

The special program — to bebefit the Berkshire Music Center — will open with Elgar's Pomp and Circumstance, followed by the Overture to Mignon by Thomas, Strauss's beloved Emperor Waltzes and the suite from Offenbach's Gaite Parisienne; Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto in B-flat minor with pianist Earl Wild as soloist, and selections from the Broadway musicals West Side Story and Music Man.

Tickets for Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops at Tanglewood have been on sale at the Berkshire Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., since Monday, July 24.

CRITIC AND CONDUCTOR
The Telegram's Raymond Morin with Eugene Ormandy

Ormandy Lauds Berkshire Fest

By RAYMON D. MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra and a new summer resident in the Berkshires, visited Tanglewood for the first time on Saturday night.

He had been on the grounds but a few minutes when he stated to us that "the Berkshire Music Festival is the greastest summer festival in the world," and he added that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is "my second love."

Ormandy will conduct the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood for the first time on Saturday night. We have it on the authority of several BSO players that it's a case of mutual admiration.

The Ormandys have purchased an estate near Tanglewood, address-kept-secret. It reportedly belonged to violinist Zino Francescatti.

Recovering From Injuries

Mr. and Mrs. Ormandy are still recovering from a serious automobile accident two days before Christmas. He has a large scar on his head and still walks with a limp.

He went into detail about the accident and kept repeating, "I'm a fatalist."

Ormandy takes strong issue with the metropolitan press over its criticism of this summer's Berkshire Festival programs.

"There isn't a festival in Europe that can compare with the Berkshire," he stated, and went on to defend conductor Charles Munch's programming.

"To begin with," he said, "most of the Tanglewood audience hasn't heard the Boston Symphony play these programs in Boston. Those who have shouldn't object to hearing great music played again. And there's the tight rehearsal schedule . . . not enough time to learn new programs."

Ormandy's own program consists of works which he has conducted in his two appearances with the Boston Symphony during the past three years. It has been specially arranged for him to have "one rehearsal and a half" with the orchestra before Saturday night's concert.

The program will be Strauss' "Don Juan," Roy Harris' Third Symphony, Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane," and Brahms' second Symphony.

Ormandy believes that music today is in a state of "evolution." He says that he goes along with "atonalists" and the "twelvetone system," but he draws the line at Stockhausen and his "electronic music." He heard some of it in Stockhausen's studio at Colonne.

After five minutes of hearing the same tone lambasted, he asked, "how much more is there?" He was told, "about seven more minutes." He stuck it out but Mrs. Ormandy left.

We got on the timely topic of federal subsidy of the arts, including symphony orchestras. Ormandy discussed it in terms of what he called his "own view" and the "facts of life."

"Every community should support its own symphony orchestra," he believes. "Private support is becoming scarcer, but the four leading orchestras are still receiving it."

The four he named at the Boston Symphony, New York York Philharmonic, Chicago Symphony and the Philadelphia Orchestra, listed last "because of its conductor's modesty."

Expresses Concern

In connection with federal subsidy, Ormandy expressed grave concern over the possibility of political influence.

"Orchestras that need help the most should have priority claim," he said, "but as expenses go up, Class A orchestras will also need assistance."

The Ormandys intend to make a regular summer retreat of their new home in the Berkshires.

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
JUL 23 1961

WEATHER, MUSIC BOTH APPLAUDED AT TANGLEWOOD

10,949 Hail Performances of Isaac Stern, Boston Symphony

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—A beautiful night, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Isaac Stern to play the Beethoven violin concerto drew 10,949 people to Tanglewood, Saturday.

Favorite Guest

Stern is a favorite Tanglewood guest. He is highly articulate both vocally and as a violinist. Saturday night he was playing a concerto about as familiar to music lovers as any written.

With the expert collaboration of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Charles Munch, the performance was in the grand style, impeccable as to detail and filled with a vitality which communicated to the last row of seats in the shed. There was breauty of tone, phrasing which breathed with the music and the impact upon the audience was tremendous. All participants were given a rousing applause.

The concert opened with the overture to Robert Schumann's opera "Genoveva." Lacking dramatic instinct, as did many of his contemporaries, Schumann's opera was no great success. The overture remains in the repertory. Mr. Munch made as much of the overture as possible and it was played with a real radiance.

Extended Work

William Schuman's "Symphony No. 7 was commissioned by the Serge Koussevitzky Music Foundation in the Library of Congress and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in celebration of the 75th anniversary of the orchestra. The work is dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky. It was first performed on Oct. 21, 1960.

The symphony is an extended work for orchestra, tailor-made for the Boston players. Particularly noteworthy in this symphony is a kind of choral writing for orchestra. I found much of it ugly, yet it is a stunning example of the skilful use of orchestral color. The finale is a real shocker and the air all around is tense as it peals forth.

Mr. Munch gave his best efforts to the performance and the result was brilliant. He seems relaxed this season and has already done some of his best work in several seasons.

Like Old Times

It seemed like old times to see hundreds of people sitting on the lawn. Lawn-sitting has not been popular up to date due to the dampness. Saturday night, minus shoes and stockings for the most part, male and female took things as comfortably as mosquitos would allow.

In a front box was Eugene Ormandy conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Ormandy will conduct the Boston players later in the season. He was accompanied by his lovely wife and a sizable entourage. This was his first appearance at Tanglewood, we believe, and his many admirers were on hand to greet him.

CHARLOTTE, N.C.
OBSERVER
D. 161,914 S. 179,913
AUG 20 1961

SIGHTS AND SOUNDS

An Interview With A Soul

By DICK BANKS
Observer Arts Editor

So I interviewed the soul of Charles Munch . . .

Not many newspapermen can make this claim. Scores have chatted with the physical Munch.

It is the soul of this Alsatian-born genius which directs the Boston Symphony.

I sang baritone with the Boston Symphony orchestra, as one of a chorus of 60, in Poulenc's "Gloria," with Adele Addison as soprano soloist . . . under the baton of Charles Munch.

This was getting a soul-interview the hard way.

Florence Dunn put me up to it. She's assistant to G. Wallace Woodworth under whom I studied in the Listening and Analysis department at Tanglewood, Mass., where the Boston Symphony has its summer music festival.

★ ★ ★

GETTING THE "INTERVIEW" entailed preliminary labor. And I do mean labor.

During my 17 days at Tanglewood I rehearsed the contemporary Poulenc "Gloria" with the Festival Chorus.

Alfred Nash Patterson, an outstanding Boston choral conductor, drummed the "Gloria" into us before Munch took over final rehearsals.

Never had I sung in a chorus. My last experience with the bass cleff had been 27 years ago, trombone in James Christian Pfohl's Davidson College orchestra.

It took the ear of Alfred Nash Patterson less than two minutes to hear the inexperience in my voice in the third (back) row of the baritones.

He's a youthful, forceful man, with considerable patience — as long as we kept learning — and a sense of humor that burst out in erudite bits of musical whimsicality.

★ ★ ★

I WAS ON A SPOT. Learning that "Gloria" drained energy like a hundred-yard dash.

Patterson warmed us up with scales, shouted, joked, put the piece together phrase by phrase, scolded the dreamy sopranos, petted the altos, demanded crisp vigor from baritones and basses.

It was not unusual to find Patterson directing with one foot on top his stool, the other on the second rung, flouting the laws of gravity, making progress with the "Gloria."

My system was to sit to the right of the truest baritone voice I could find and take my cues from him.

★ ★ ★

OUT OF THE MIST of nearly three decades the bass cleff came back. Rests, notes, intervals, cues for pitch, even some of what I used to know about key signatures.

I began to enjoy belting out the less difficult portions of the "Gloria."

Patterson gave us an American, rather jazzy, interpretation of the "Gloria."

★ ★ ★

THEN MUNCH showed up, said "bravo" with childlike gentleness, and changed the whole thing.

Changes in Latin diction, changes in emphasis, a loud phrase where we had been singing soft, and a feeling of worship we hadn't experienced before.

Above all was the magic of the Munch tempo.

You need three eyes, one for the music and two to read the expressive face of Charles Munch and to keep with his baton as it shifts its beat from rehearsal to rehearsal with his moods.

Most rewarding is his smile when your music pleases Munch.

★ ★ ★

IT WAS FUN to rehearse in the 6,000-seat music shed within a few feet of the Boston Symphony.

Munch lectured his violins, He scolded his trombone: "Not DA-de-da-da! Da-da-de-DA!" He treated the chorus with courtesy. But he insisted on getting the "Gloria" that was singing in his mind.

Charles Munch

Once I tried singing with the basses. The low G I couldn't quite make. Through that 104-piece orchestra and the 59 other singers, Munch heard that one sharp note.

"Two bars before seexty-eight, the basses, once more," he said. This time I soundlessly mouthed the note and let the real basses have it.

"Gut," said Munch.

★ ★ ★

WITH ADELE ADDISON singing the poignant solos, we felt the tension of singing under Munch.

There seemed a blending of moods between Addison and Munch. From the conductor's podium we got a new message, a softer, gentler, more lyrical, more spiritual "Gloria." We sang it well.

It's true in music that one can be lifted above oneself.

After it was over, Munch dropped his baton, smiled his sad smile, and said, "Bravo." Each of us felt he'd been handed a brand-new hundred dollar bill!

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 22 1961

118

Mitchell

HONORED on her 80th birthday and in recognition of her pioneer work in establishing the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in 1934, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of Stockbridge, acknowledges with a brief "thank you," the gift of a specially cut recording of Poulenc's "Gloria," last night in the Music Shed at Tanglewood as 6,000 music lovers shared in the ovation. Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, standing joined in the tribute to her paid by Henry B. Cabot, to her left, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. She also received from the BSO a scroll signed by Mr. Cabot and Charles Munch.

Tanglewood Pays Tribute To Miss Smith

TANGLEWOOD — An overflow crowd last night joined Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in paying tribute to 80-year-old Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of Stockbridge, founder of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, in recognition of her birthday and her pioneer work in establishing the Festival 27 years ago.

The honor was bestowed upon her at intermission of the first of five weekend concerts by Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees of the BSO.

She was escorted to the stage from her box by her grandnephew, Charles Beecher Stowe, 12-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. David Stowe of New Canaan, Conn., who came here with his parents for the occasion and to celebrate his birthday with his aunt.

Early Days Recalled

Mr. Cabot, recalling the early days of the Festival, told his audience that after developing the idea of a Festival here, "Miss Robinson Smith had another idea to invite the Boston Symphony Orchestra up here."

He reviewed the growth of the Miss Smith . . .

Continued on Page 18

Festival since the BSO came on the scene in 1936, "from a field, into a tent and finally into a Shed."

"The acorn you planted," said Mr. Cabot in addressing Miss Robinson Smith," has grown to a great oak in 27 years."

He then presented to her a scroll and a specially made recording of the "Gloria" by Francis Poulenc, which Dr. Munch and the BSO performed in her honor last night.

'Testament of Gratitude'

The inscription on the scroll reads:

Gertrude Robinson Smith with admiration for her vital interest and energy that have initiated and built the Berkshire Festival and the Music Shed at Tanglewood. The Boston Symphony Orchestra offers this testament of gratitude on the occasion of her 80th birthday.

The scroll was signed by Mr. Cabot and Mr. Munch.

In acknowledging the gift, Miss Robinson Smith made a brief talk, auding the conductor and members of the BSO for their contribution to the success of Tanglewood, oncluding that "at the age of 80, have learned to obey orders and y simply, thank you."

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955
JUL 22 1961

Berkshire Festival Opens With Tribute To Gertrude Robinson

The big concerts of the Berkshire Festival started Friday night at Tanglewood with a program that had all the earmarks of a special occasion. It was Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith's 80th birthday and she was presented with a special recording of Poulenc's "Gloria" by Henry Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Miss Smith more than any one person was responsible for the great Music Shed and for the backing that the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzky got for the great development of the Berkshire Festival.

Dr. Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra seemed to be in an exalted mood, judging from the verve and warmth of their performance. The program opened with Beethoven's Overture to "Coriolan." Then came a truly splendid presentation of the First Symphony of Brahms.

One may hear this symphony scores of times, but to hear it as Dr. Munch conducted it last night was to hear it new. The great soaring melodies were kept strong and dry, the rhythms handled with keen sensitivity, and the lyric climaxes were magnificent. The audience was swept up in an emotional experience There was prolonged applause.

When a masterpiece can b brought to life with such finesse all arguments about program variety melt away. There can b nothing musically superior to performance of this kind, whe a peerless orchestra plays great symphony under inspire direction. Dr. Munch was a the peak of his artistry.

The Poulenc "Gloria" wa sung by the Berkshire Festiva chorus, with Adele Addison, so prano soloist who came original ly from Springfield, and the or chestra. This is a modern work in six parts, full of interesting harmonic and rhythmic effects, with contrasts of mood and tempo. It was sung beautifully, with moving effect, by Miss Addison. The Festival chorus, trained by Alfred Nash Patterson, was also excellent.

Choral programs are apt not to be as popular as those devoted entirely to orchestral works, but the Festival chorus is gradually winning a reputation as one of the finest, and its contribution to Berkshire Festival programs is at last getting proper recognition. The Poulenc "Gloria" was quite exciting, and we should think a birthday gift that Gertrude Robinson Smith will treasure.

ABM

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
JUL 23 1961

Founder Honored as Full Concert Series Opens

By ELINOR HUGHES

TANGLEWOOD—The third week of the Berkshire Festival's 27th season opened Friday night with the first concert in the Shed by the complete Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch.

This was something of a special event for the concert was dedicated to Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, founder of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival on the occasion of her 80th birthday.

The big audience rose to its feet and applauded warmly as Miss Smith, alert, vigorous and handsome, was escorted to the front of the stage by Dr. Munch at the beginning of the second half of the program.

Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees, introduced Miss Smith and presented her with a special album recording the first performance of Poulenc's "Gloria," made at Symphony Hall in Boston last January and with a scroll inscribed with the following tribute:

"Gertrude Robinson Smith, with admiration for her vital interest and energy that have initiated and built the Berkshire Festival and the Music Shed at Tanglewood. The Boston Symphony offers this testimony of gratitude on the occasion of her 80th birthday."

Miss Smith, saying she had always obeyed orders and had been told not to make a speech, thanked everyone for their kindness, expressed her delight in the album and voiced the hope that the audience present would be on hand for all the festival concerts in the future.

It was a happy evening for everyone and the capricious Berkshire weather responded by providing a perfect moonlit night.

SEVEN WEEKS

This is the first year that the Berkshire Festival has been extended to seven weeks: two weeks of Bach and Mozart concert with chamber orchestra, and five weeks of concerts with the full orchestra, conducted mainly by Dr. Munch, but with guest appearances by Pierre Monteux (he will conduct tonight and again on August 4 and 19), Leonard Bernstein (August 12), Eugene Ormandy (Saturday night), and Richard Burgin (August 11).

No mention of guest conductors should overlook the uniquely successful affair on July 13 when Danny Kaye conducted a sold out concert in the Shed for the Pension Fund and the box office recorded gross receipts of $35,000.

Attendance so far this year, that is for the Bach and Mozart weekends, has been very satisfactory as the lovers of chamber music are discovering the pleasures of hearing chamber music in the commodius Shed, rather than the charming but considerably smaller Theater. The Bach weekend, for example, drew attendance of 13,429 this season as against 11,949 last year.

The Mozart weekend, hampered by disastrously bad weather, drew 13,500 this year as against 16,180 last year.

This weekend warm and sunny, promises ideal conditions and large crowds.

FOR NEXT YEAR

Included in the information in the new program is the schedule of next summer's concerts at Tanglewood. The response to this year's seven week-season has prompted a further extension for next season, this time to eight weeks. The 1962 Berkshire Festival, under the direction of Dr. Munch, will open July 6 and continue through August 27

This means, according to the program, that there will be only three weeks of Esplanade concerts in Boston, for the usual fourth week in August will have to be omitted due to the orchestra's presence in Tanglewood.

SECOND HEARING

The Friday night program by the orchestra consisted of the "Coriolan Overture" by Beethoven,, Brahms' Symphony No. 1 and Francis Poulenc's "Gloria" with Adele Addison as soloist and the Festival Chorus, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson.

A second hearing of the "Gloria" renewed for me the delight of the first performance I heard six months ago in Symphony Hall.

The great expanse and fine acoustics of the Shed provided a superb setting for the work, which was performed in a spirit of dedicated joy by Miss Addison, the chorus and the orchestra.

The music for the soloist, particularly the ascending phrase of "Domine Deus" is truly demanding, and must be a great technical challenge as well as an interpretive one.

Miss Addison seems to have found her way to the very heart of the score and she sings it as though it were the climax of her life's work.

Beautifully trained by Mr. Patterson, the Festival Chorus brought fresh tone, clean attack and disciplined intelligence to their work, and Dr. Munch and the orchestra made possible the rare privilege of hearing a notable modern composition—I almost said a modern classic—performed as it deserved to be.

The other glory of the evening was the performance of Brahm's C Minor Symphony, a work which has such richness of feeling and heights of inspiration that it seems strange to think it was once described, when first played by the Harvard Musical Association, elaborately fying tion ches shar

Th cell "Co play

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 52,400
JUL 30 1961

A Look At the Arts

By E.J.D.

On Page 19 in today's Sunday Standard-Times we report on the three concerts we attended at the Berkshire Music Festival, Tanglewood, last week. However, we should like also to recount a couple of human interest stories that came our way during our stay in the Berkshires.

Actually, the two stars of last week's Tanglewood programs were a couple of senior citizens—80-year-old Gertrude Robinson Smith and the 86-year-old conductor, Pierre Monteux, who led the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Sunday afternoon concert.

We suspect that many of our readers may never have heard of Miss Robinson Smith. But at intermission during the Friday night concert, on the occasion of her 80th birthday, she was praised in a charming speech by Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's board of trustees. Miss Robinson Smith deserved this tribute because it was she who back in May, 1934, invited a group of friends to her Berkshire Summer home to listen to an idea suggested by Dr. Henry Hadley, then conductor of the New York Philharmonic, who believed it would be pleasant to conduct an outdoor symphony concert in the Berkshires.

EARL J. DIAS

Miss Robinson Smith agreed fervently with Dr. Hadley's plan, and it was largely through her gargantuan efforts that an Aug. 23, 1934, the first concert was performed on the grounds of the Hanna Farm. In 1936, Miss Robinson Smith persuaded the late Dr. Serge Koussevitsky that he and his Boston Symphony would be welcome permanent performers at the Berkshire Festival. Musical history was made on Aug. 13, 1936, when the Boston Symphony performed its first concert in the Berkshires.

In 1937, Mrs. Gorham Brooks offered Dr. Koussevitsky the picturesque Tanglewood estate as a permanent home for the festival. A tent was erected on the Tanglewood grounds. Then, on the night of Aug. 12, 1937, occurred the most famous storm in Berkshire musical history. When the Boston Symphony started to play Wagner's "Ride of the Valkyries," the heavens opened up, lightning streaked through the sky, thunder clapped overhead, and heavy rains bombarded the roof of the tent. The roar the storm created in the shelter completely drowned out the music coming from the stage.

Just as the concert ended, Miss Robinson Smith strode to the stage and observed to the audience, "The storm has proved conclusively the need for a shed. We must raise the necessary $100,000 to build it."

And raise the money is just what the indefatigable Miss Robinson Smith did.

The great Music Shed was dedicated on Aug. 4, 1938, and, appropriately enough, Miss Robinson Smith delivered the dedicatory speech.

Thus, at the recent Friday night concert, Mr. Cabot spoke with obvious sincerity as he paid tribute to this dedicated woman and presented her with a scroll signed by himself and Dr. Charles Munch. The scroll reads: "Gertrude Robinson Smith, with admiration for her vital interest and energy that have initiated and built the Berkshire Festival and the Music Shed at Tanglewood. The Boston Symphony Orchestra offers this testament of gratitude on the occasion of her 80th birthday."

As for Pierre Monteux, his conducting of the Sunday afternoon concert was, as always, sure and sensitive. We had the opportunity to watch Monteux rehearse the orchestra on Saturday morning for this concert. We might note that a guest conductor at Tanglewood labors under some difficulty, since he is allowed only one rehearsal with the orchestra.

Monteux when he walks to the podium looks somewhat feeble, but when he lifts his baton and begins to conduct, he seems ageless. We noted that his chief concern during the rehearsal was rhythm and dynamics. He stopped the orchestra numerous times. "Come on now," he would say. "It must go like this. Ta Ta, Ta Ta. With a nice pianissimo at the end." He was particularly meticulous about the modulations and dynamics of the Strauss "Rosenkavalier" Suite.

Monteux experienced most difficulty with Bartok's "Rhapsody for Violin and Orchestra," with Isaac Stern as soloist. A complex work, it sounded at times in rehearsal as though it would never get off the ground. But Monteux's patience and perseverence gradually whipped the orchestra and Mr. Stern into shape.

Certainly, Monteux, who has conducted most of the world's great orchestras, is one of the marvels of the music world. We wish we knew his secret of eternal youth.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
JUL 22 1961

TANGLEWOOD BENEFACTOR IS HONORED

Miss Smith Is Cited as Full Symphony Begins Festival Series

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — With the 104 man Boston Symphony Orchestra on stage and Charles Munch on podium, the Berkshire Music Festival here at Tanglewood really got underway Friday. Opening night is something very special. Mme. Serge Koussevitzky occupies her usual box and next to it is the box of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith. The press occupies its usual seats and everyone seems to know everyone else.

Made Shed Possible

This opening concert was designated by Mr. Munch as dedicated to Miss Smith on the occasion of her 80th birthday. Miss Smith was presented with a special recording of Poulenc's "Gloria" and a citation.

It was largely through the enthusiasm and administrative genius of Miss Smith that the huge music shed came into being. In fact, Miss Smith may be credited with having made the Berkshire Music Festival possible. Henry Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees, made the presentation.

The "Gloria" by Francis Poulenc was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation in the Library of Congress and is dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky. It was first performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Adele Addison, Jan. 21, 1961.

Superb Performance

The work is reminescent of Vivaldi, it does not have a kyrie, so it is not a mass in the strict sense. This setting of the "Gloria" is in six parts with an alternation of full chorus and a chorus reduced by half. The soprano solo comes between the second and fifth parts and in a smaller way in the sixth part. There is a splendid variation of moods throughout.

This is the kind of music which Miss Addison seems to be most closely allied to. She gave a superb performance, technically and expressively. She was admirably aided by the fine festival chorus which had been prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson.

The program opened with an energetic, tense performance of the overture to "Corilan" by Beethoven. It was a broad and spacious reading, but those were characteristics which were found during the entire evening. There was magnificent playing by all sections of the orchestra.

Work of Brahms

Charles Munch provided a reading that was worthy of the First Symphony of Brahms. It was a reading wonderfully detailed, clear and communicative. It was one of those performances which causes an audience to start its applause almost before the final movement ended.

Mr. Munch was called back many times and the orchestra men shared in the applause.

Mr. Munch made the most of every climax, yet brought to the delicate, wonderfuly melodic passages an aura of sublimity. We have never heard him conduct with such expressivity. This was a concert to be remembered long after the season closes. Tonight Mr. Munch will conduct and violinist Isaac Stern will be heard in the Beethoven Violin Concerto. The concert will open with Schumann's overture to "Genoveva." William Schuman's First Symphony will also be on the program.

, JULY 22, 1961

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE,

Monteux, Stern Play To 8,734

By D. E. RITZ
Gazette Music Editor

Pierre Monteux, conductor, with Isaac Stern as guest artist and the Boston Symphony Orchestra drew an audienec of 8,734 to Tanglewood yesterday afternoon for a program of Respighi, Viotti, de-Falla, Bartok and Strauss.

* * *

THE SUN was scorching hot even at Tanglewood and though there was a breeze it did little to cool matters either inside or outside the shed.

The Bostonians shed their coats for the performance and all of the musicians seemed to be made of stern stuff for there was no indication from their playing that the weather was not ideal.

We are great admirers of the conducting of Monteux and the violinistic ability of Stern and had attended primarily to hear the Vioti "Violin Concerto in A minor, number 22" and the Bartok "Rhapsody number 1 for violin and orchestra."

* * *

VIOTTI, WHO has been called "the father of modern violin playing" and Bartok, whose music sparkles with the national idioms of Hungary form a strange program contrast. We wonder just what Viotti would have thought of the Bartok had he heard it?

The Viotti concerto is a masterpiece of form with brilliant cadenzas, a deceptively simple sounding slow movement and a puckish finale. One of our neighbors called it "old fashioned fiddling"—maybe it is but we like it.

* * *

WE ALSO LIKE the Bartok with its rugged themes and the opening bag-pipe effect in the accompaniment. Rough accents contrast with tender legato passages and complex bowings and phrasings add spice to a work that is a major contribution to the literature of the solo violin. Dedicated to Joseph Szigeti it was first performed by him in Budapest in 1929.

The program opened with the Respighi "Old Dances and Airs for the Lute, suite number I," composed in 1918. The work is a fascinating presentation of music of an older era in a modern setting.

The "The Dances from the ballet, 'The Three-Cornered Hat,'" by de Falla has caught the fire of Spain and its dance rhythms as music seldom does.

* * *

THE PROGRAM concluded with the Strauss "Suite from Der Rosenkavalier" with its familiar passages and delightful explorations in the field of Viennese waltz. We counted no less than four differing tempos in the waltz under the baton of Monteux and thrilled to concertmaster Richard Burgin's solo presentation.

A sustained ovation for conductor and orchestra concluded the program as we left the warmth of Tanglewood for an even warmer ride back to a much warmer city.

Audiences at the shed concerts this past weekend included 5,799 on Friday night and 10,949 on Saturday night with 5,302 attending the Saturday morning rehearsal. Total attendance for the weekend was 30,784.

720

Fourth Week - July 24 - 30

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 47,136
JUL 25 1961

Ormandy to Make Bow At Tanglewood Saturday

Eugene Ormandy, famed conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra for the past 25 years, will make his first appearance at the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood Saturday at 8:30 p.m. The engagement is the one summer engagement which Ormandy has accepted.

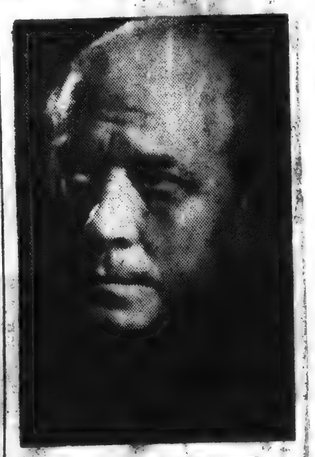
THE SATURDAY program will include the Strauss' tone poem, "Don Juan," the third symphony by the contemporary American composer Roy Harris, Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane" suite and the Symphony number two by Brahms.

Born in Budapest Nov. 18, 1899, Ormandy entered the Royal Academy of Music in that city at the age of 5 and at 9 became a pupil of the great violinist Jeno Hubay. He soon began making public appearances and one performance was before Emperor Franz Josef and others were given before the royal family.

At 17, he received his professor's diploma at the Royal Academy and was given degrees in violin playing, composing and counterpoint.

Invited on a concert tour of the United States in 1921 he ran into difficulties through an inexperienced manager, but by determination he became radio's most important conductor. He directed his first concerts with the Philadelphia Orchestra and the New York Philharmonic in 1930.

In 1931 he scored an overnight sensation replacing Toscanini as a guest performer with the Philadelphia Orchestra and was signed as guest conductor and later conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony. Ormandy held the post until 1936 when he was invited to return to Philadelphia. He celebrated his 25th anniversary as conductor and music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra this past season.



EUGENE ORMANDY
Longtime Maestro

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
JUL 28 1961

Lotte Meitner-Graf

Byron Janis will be piano soloist with the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Independent
AGAWAM, Mass.
Weekly Independent
JUL 27 1961

TANGLEWOOD

Charles Munch Invites Eugene Ormandy And Aaron Copland To Conduct Boston Symphony Orchestra At Tanglewood This Week
Friends Of The Berkshire Music Center To One-Act Operas

Charles Munch has invited Eugene Ormandy, Aaron Copland and Byron Janis to be his guests at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tanglewood concerts this week.

Eugene Ormandy, Music Director of the Philadelphia Orchestra and a summer resident of the Berkshires, will make his first Tanglewood appearance Saturday evening (July 29, 8:30), when he conducts the Orchestra in a program to include "Don Juan" by Richard Strauss, the Third Symphony by Roy Harris, Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane" and the Symphony No. 2 by Brahms.

Aaron Copland, chairman of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center and one of Charles Munch's guest conductors during the Orchestra's 1960 tour of the Far East, will conduct two of his own compositions as the opening works at the Friday evening (July 28, 8:30) concert: the "Preamble for a Solemn Occasion" and his ballet, "Appalachian Spring." Charles Munch will conduct Ravel's "Daph-is et Chloe," with the Festival horus (prepared by Hugh Ross nd Willis Beckett), as the clos-g work at this concert.

AARON COPLAND

At the Sunday afternoon con-rt (July 30, 2:30) Doctor Munch as invited Byron Janis to per-rm two piano concerti by Franz iszt—No. 1 in E-flat major and o. 2 in A major. Walter Piston's hree New England Sketches" nd Beethoven's Symphony No. 4 ill also be heard.

The Berkshire Music Center era department, under the di-tion of Boris Goldovsky, will esent scenes from well-known eras for the Friends of the rkshire Music Center Sunday ening, July 30, at 8:30 in the eatre. Friends of the Berkshire usic Center are also invited to e following this week:

Berkshire Music Center Orches-a, Thursday, July 27, 8:30 p.m., usic Shed; Seminar in Contem-rary music, Friday, July 28, 3:15 m.; and Berkshire Music Center amber music Sunday morning, ly 30, 10:00 a.m. in the Chamber usic Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Courier
GT. BARRINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,564
JUL 27 1961

Ormandy, Copland to Conduct Symphony

Former Will Be Conductor Saturday Evening

To Lead Boston Orchestra In Program Including "Don Juan" and Brahms Symphony No. 2.—Chairman of Faculty of Music Center Will Lead Two of His Own Compositions.

Charles Munch has invited Eugene Ormandy, Aaron Copland and Byron Janis to be his guests at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tanglewood concerts this week.

Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra and a summer resident of the Berkshires, will make his first Tanglewood appearance Saturday evening, July 29, at 8:30, when he conducts the orchestra in a program to include "Don Juan" by Richard Strauss, the Third Symphony by Roy Harris, Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane" and the Symphony No. 2 by Brahms.

Aaron Copland, chairman of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center and one of Dr. Munch's guest conductors during the orchestra's 1960 tour of the Far East, will conduct two of his own compositions as the opening works at the Friday evening concert at 8:30; the "Preamble for a Solemn Occasion" and his ballet, "Appalachian Spring." Dr. Munch will conduct Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," with the Festival Chorus, prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett, as the closing work at this concert.

At the Sunday afternoon concert at 2:30 Dr. Munch has invited Byron Janis to perform two piano concerti by Franz Liszt—No. 1 in E-flat major and No. 2 in A major. Walter Piston's "Three New England Sketches" and Beethoven's Symphony No. 4 will also be heard.

At the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert at Tanglewood last Friday night, Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees, presented a scroll and a specially-made recording of the "Gloria" by Francis Poulenc to Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith.

The inscription on the scroll reads: "Gertrude Robinson Smith with admiration for her vital interest and energy that have initiated and built the Berkshire Festival and the Music Shed at Tanglewood. The Boston Symphony Orchestra offers this Testament of Gratitude on the occasion of her 80th birthday."

The scroll is signed by Mr. Cabot and by Charles Munch.

The special recording of the "Gloria"—which was performed at Friday night's concert—was made from the first performance of the work which had its world premiere, under the direction of Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Adele Addison and the Chorus [illegible] Musica, in Boston Jan. 21

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUL 22 1961

Ormandy to Conduct BSO in His Only Summer Offering

Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra for the past 25 years, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood next Saturday evening in his only summer engagement.

Mr. Ormandy had refused all requests for his services this summer so that he and Mrs. Ormandy could enjoy an extended vacation at their Berkshire estate, but he consented to an invitation by Charles Munch to make an appearance at the Berkshire Festival.

Mr. Ormandy has conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra several times in Boston but the July 29 concert will mark his first appearance at Tanglewood.

For his Tanglewood program he has scheduled Strauss' "Don Juan," The Third Symphony by the contemporary American composer Roy Harris, Roussel's "Bauchus et Ariadne" suite and the Symphony No. 2 by Brahms.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 165,763
JUL 24 1961

Ormandy to Conduct Tanglewood Concert

Eugene Ormandy, famed conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra for the past 25 years and inveterate world traveler, has refused many requests for his services this summer in order to have an extended vacation with Mrs. Ormandy at their Berkshire County estate.

Ormandy has accepted only one summer engagement and that is to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Saturday evening.

SELECTED PROGRAM

Charles Munch has invited Ormandy to conduct at the Berkshire Festival not only because of his international fame but because of the personal admiration which exists between the two gentlemen; Ormandy has made exception to his decision of no summer concerts in order to accept his friend's invitation.

In the past Ormandy has conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra several times in Boston—and Dr. Munch has been guest conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra in Philadelphia—but the Tanglewood concert on Saturday will mark Ormandy's first appearance at the Berkshire Festival.

For his Tanglewood program Eugene Ormandy has scheduled Strauss' romantic tone poem, "Don Juan," the Third Symphony by the contemporary American composer Roy Harris, Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane" suite and the Symphony No. 2 by Brahms.

PROFESSOR AT 17

From his birth in Budapest, Nov. 18, 1899, Eugene Ormandy was destined to become a musician. He entered the Royal Academy of Music in Budapest when he was five years old. At nine he became a pupil of the great violinist Jeno Hubay (after whom he was named, since Eugene is translated into Jeno in Hungarian) and soon began making public appearances. One such auspicious performance was before the Emperor Francis Josef, others took place before the Royal family.

At 17 he received his professor's diploma at the Royal Academy and was given degrees in violin playing, composing and counterpoint. Concert tours and teaching at the State Conservatory in Budapest followed. In 1921, he came to this country to make a concert tour of the United States which turned out to be a parade of glittering promises by an inexperienced manager.

But in 1930 he was directing his first concerts with the Philadelphia Orchestra and the New York Philharmonic. The turning point in his career came the following year when Toscanini, slated for a guest performance with the Philadelphia Orchestra, was suddenly taken ill and Ormandy was invited as a replacement.

Despite his manager's warnings about pinch-hitting for Toscanini and following Stokowski, Ormandy elected to take the gamble and scored an overnight sensation.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
BULLETIN
D. 705,599 S. 994,768
JUL 23 1961

Around and About . . .

Philadelphia Orchestra manager Roger Hall is due back tomorrow from a vacation visit to the island of Cyprus. Soon after he returns, Roger will be on-the-go again. He has appointments in Washington and New York. Then he drives up to the Berkshires to hear Maestro Eugene Ormandy conduct Saturday at Tanglewood. This will be Mr. Ormandy's only summer '61 concert appearance. The Ormandys have a home in the Berkshires, not far from Tanglewood.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
JUL 29 1961

BYRON JANIS, pianist, who will play two Liszt concertos tomorrow afternoon with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood. Lenox.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 1 1961

Among Notables Seen Last Weekend at Tanglewood

NOTED COMPOSER Walter Piston, at right, shakes hands with Boston Symphony Orchestra concertmaster Richard Burgin after a performance of Mr. Piston's "Three New England Sketches" Sunday at Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

GUEST CONDUCTOR Eugene Ormandy, musical director of the Philadelphia Symphony, chats with Ralph Berkowitz, dean of Berkshire Music Center, and Mrs. Thomas D. Perry Jr., whose husband is manager of the Boston Symphony.

Photos by Whitestone

BSO MUSIC DIRECTOR Charles Munch hears Saturday evening's concert from his box, accompanied by his niece, Mlle. Marianne Kaltenbach of Paris, who is visiting him for the summer, and Dean Robert Brooks of Williams College in front row; and, in rear, Mrs. John L. Senior of Lenox, John Turner, Montreal lawyer, and Pierre Beique, manager of the Societe Philharmonique de Montreal. Concert was Mr. Ormandy's first Tanglewood appearance.

CAMDEN, N.J.
COURIER-POST
D. 79,898 SAT. 74,434
JUL 20 1961

Ormandy to Conduct At Berkshire Festival

Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, is scheduled to make his first appearance at the Berkshire Festival, Lenox, Mass., on Saturday, July 29. The last time Ormandy guest conducted the Boston Symphony was in 1959 when he and Charles Munch traded podiums for two concerts during the season.

For his Berkshire debut, Ormandy has programmed the Richard Strauss tone poem, "Don Juan," the Third Symphony of Roy Harris, Albert Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane" and the Brahms Second Symphony.

The July 29 concert marks Ormandy's only guest conducting appearance this summer. Originally, he was slated for an extensive tour, conducting throughout Europe and Israel. As a result of an automobile accident last December, however, he was obliged to cancel these plans and confine himself to the single Berkshire Festival appearance.

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M.
JOUR. L.
D 46,/4 S. 66,066
SEP 3 1961

CIVIC SYMPHONY MANAGER Ralph Berkowitz, right, is shown with Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, who visited Berkowitz this summer at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony's Berkshire Festival. Berkowitz completed his 15th year as dean of the Berkshire Festival before returning to Albuquerque last week to resume management of the Albuquerque Civic Symphony and his private teaching. The fall membership campaign of the Civic Symphony will open Wednesday with Mrs. James W. Esenwein as chairman. Mrs. Thomas Cook Jr. is tickets chairman, with Mrs. Fred Eichert as co-chairman. Mrs. Dan Burrows and Mrs. Howard T. Stump Jr. are serving as co-chairmen of the campaign with Mrs. Esenwein.

122

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

JUL 24 1961

Pianist, Conductor, Composer Appear With BSO This Week

Byron Janis Eugene Ormandy Aaron Copland

TANGLEWOOD—Charles Munch has invited Eugene Ormandy, Aaron Copland and Byron Janis to be his guests at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts this week.

Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra and a summer resident of the Berkshires, will make his first Tanglewood appearance Saturday evening at 8:30, when he conducts the orchestra in a program to include "Don Juan" by Richard Strauss, the Third Symphony by Roy Harris, Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane" and the Symphony No. 2 by Brahms.

Aaron Copland, chairman of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center and one of Charles Munch's guest conductors during the orchestra's 1960 tour of the Far East, will conduct two of his own compositions as the opening works at the Friday evening (at 8:30) concert: the "Preamble for a Solemn Occasion" and his ballet, "Appalachian Spring." Dr. Munch will conduct Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," with the festival chorus, prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett, as the closing work at this concert.

At the Sunday afternoon concert, July 30 at 2:30, Dr. Munch has invited Byron Janis to perform two piano concerti by Franz Liszt—No. 1 in E-flat major and No. 2 in A major. Walter Piston's "Three New England Sketches" and Beethoven's Symphony No. 4 will also be heard.

The fourth concert of the chamber music series will be given by the New York Pro Musica in the Tanglewood Theater Wednesday at 8:30. Directed by Noah Greenberg with 10 vocalists and instrumentalists, the program will consist of vocal and instrumental compositions by the early Renaissance masters Heinrich Isaac, Ludwig Senfl and Orlando Lassus, and the Glogauer Liederbuch.

The Berkshire Music Center opera department, under the direction of Boris Goldovsky, will present scenes from well-known operas for the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center tomorrow evening at 8:30 and Sunday evening at 8:30 in the theater-concert hall. Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are also invited to the following this week: Composer's forum tonight at 8:30, Chamber Music Hall; Berkshire Music Center orchestra Thursday, 8:30 p.m., Music Shed; seminar in contemporary music, Friday at 3:15; and Berkshire Music Center chamber music Sunday morning at 10 in the Chamber Music Hall.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

CAIRO HERALD
Thursday, July 27, 1961

EUGENE ORMANDY, celebrated conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, is to make his first appearance at the Berkshire Festival, Saturday, July 29, at 8:30. Mr. Ormandy will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony [illegible] at the invitation of Charles Munch, Music Director. For his program, Mr. Ormandy has chosen works of Strauss, Harris, Roussel and Brahms.

Worcester Daily Telegram Mon., July 24, 1961 3

CRITIC AND CONDUCTOR
The Telegram's Raymond Morin with Eugene Ormandy

Ormandy Lauds Berkshire Fest

By RAYMON D. MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra and a new summer resident in the Berkshires, visited Tanglewood for the first time on Saturday night.

He had been on the grounds but a few minutes when he stated to us that "the Berkshire Music Festival is the greastest summer festival in the world," and he added that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is "my second love."

Ormandy will conduct the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood for the first time on Saturday night. We have it on the authority of several BSO players that it's a case of mutual admiration.

The Ormandys have purchased an estate near Tanglewood, address-kept-secret. It reportedly belonged to violinist Zino Francescatti.

Recovering From Injuries

Mr. and Mrs. Ormandy are still recovering from a serious automobile accident two days before Christmas. He has a large scar on his head and still walks with a limp.

He went into detail about the accident and kept repeating, "I'm a fatalist."

Ormandy takes strong issue with the metropolitan press over its criticism of this summer's Berkshire Festival programs.

"There isn't a festival in Europe that can compare with the Berkshire," he stated, and went on to defend conductor Charles Munch's programming.

"To begin with," he said, "most of the Tanglewood audience hasn't heard the Boston Symphony play these programs in Boston. Those who have shouldn't object to hearing great music played again. And there's the tight rehearsal schedule . . . not enough time to learn new programs."

Ormandy's own program consists of works which he has conducted in his two appearances with the Boston Symphony during the past three years. It has been specially arranged for him to have "one rehearsal and a half" with the orchestra before Saturday night's concert.

The program will be Strauss' "Don Juan," Roy Harris' Third Symphony, Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane," and Brahms' second Symphony.

Ormandy believes that music today is in a state of "evolution." He says that he goes along with "atonalists" and the "twelvetone system," but he draws the line at Stockhausen and his "electronic music." He heard some of it in Stockhausen's studio at Colonne.

After five minutes of hearing the same tone lambasted, he asked, "how much more is there?" He was told, "about seven more minutes." He stuck it out but Mrs. Ormandy left.

We got on the timely topic of federal subsidy of the arts, including symphony orchestras. Ormandy discussed it in terms of what he called his "own view" and the "facts of life."

"Every community should support its own symphony orchestra," he believes. "Private support is becoming scarcer, but the four leading orchestras are still receiving it."

The four he named at the Boston Symphony, New York York Philharmonic, Chicago Symphony and the Philadelphia Orchestra, listed last "because of its conductor's modesty."

Expresses Concern

In connection with federal subsidy, Ormandy expressed grave concern over the possibility of political influence.

"Orchestras that need help the most should have priority claim," he said, "but as expenses go up, Class A orchestras will also need assistance."

The Ormandys intend to make a regular summer retreat of their new home in the Berkshires.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

AUG 8 1961

THERE'S nothing simple about being a guest orchestra conductor. The visitor doesn't just drop in and start conducting. When Eugene Ormandy recently led the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, he provided the players with orchestrations from his own Philadelphia Symphony, even though the BSO had the same music in its library. However, this is not a conductor's whimsy at all. It is common practice. A conductor's own orchestrations bear his characteristic variations and interpretations.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 40,709

JUL 24 1961

Noted Concert Directors At Tanglewood

Charles Munch has invited Eugene Ormandy, Aaron Copland and Byron Janis to be his guests at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tanglewood Concerts this week.

Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra and a summer resident of the Berkshires, will make his first Tanglewood appearance Saturday evening at 8:30, when he conducts the orchestra in a program to include "Don Juan" by Richard Strauss, the "Third Symphony" by Roy Harris, Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane" and the symphony No. 2 by Brahms.

Copland, chairman of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center and one of Charles Munch's guest conductors during the orchestra's 1960 tour of the Far East, will conduct two of his own compositions as the opening works at the Friday evening concert at 8:30: The "Preamble for a Solemn Occasion" and his ballet, "Appalachian Spring." Charles Munch will conduct Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," with the Festival Chorus (prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett), as the closing work at this concert.

At the Sunday afternoon concert, July 30 at 2:30, Dr. Munch has invited Janis to perform two piano concerti by Franz Liszt — No. 1 in E-flat major and No. 2 in A major. Walter Piston's "Three New England Sketches" and Beethoven's No. 4 Symphony will also be heard.

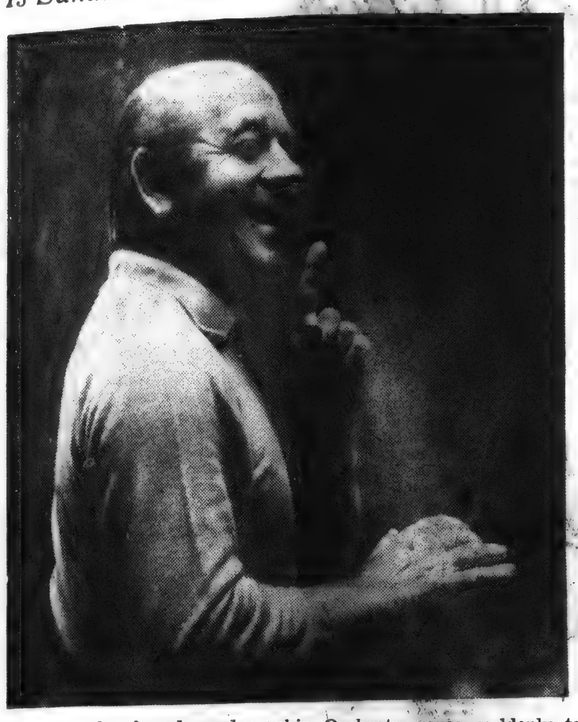
The fourth concert of the chamber music series will be given by the New York Pro Musica in the Tanglewood Theater Wednesday at 8:30 p. m. Directed by Noah Greenberg, with 10 vocalists and instrumentalists, the program will consist of vocal and instrumental compositions by the early Renaissance masters Heinrich Isaac, Ludwig Senfl and Orlando Lassus, and the Glogauer Liederbuch.

The Berkshire Music Center opera department under the direction of Boris Goldovsky will present scenes from well-known operas for the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center Tuesday evening at 8:30 and Sunday evening, in the theater.

Friends of Berkshire Music Center are also invited to the following this week: Composer's Forum Monday, 8:30 p. m. Chamber Music Hall; Berkshire Music Center Orchestra Thursday, 8:30 p. m. music shed. Seminar in Contemporary Music Friday, 3:15 and Berkshire Music Center chamber music Sunday, July 30, 10 a. m. in the Chamber Music Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Courier
GT. BARRINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,564
JUL 27 1961

Eugene Ormandy, Symphony Guest Conductor Is Summer Resident of Southern Berkshire



Eugene Ormandy, famed conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra for the past 25 years and inveterate world traveler, has refused many requests for his services this summer in order to have an extended vacation with Mrs. Ormandy at their Berkshire County estate. Mr. Ormandy has accepted only one summer engagement and that is to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Saturday evening, July 29.

Mr. Ormandy doesn't want the location of his estate identified. It is in Southern Berkshire, high on a hilltop. He purchased it several years ago from his close friend Zino Francescatti, the noted violinist. The latter appropriately named it "Fiddletop," but since this hardly is in keeping with Mr. Ormandy's profession of conductor, although he began his musical career as a violinist, he renamed the estate Belvedere.

Charles Munch has invited Mr. Ormondy to conduct at the Berkshire Festival not only because of Mr. Ormandy's international fame but because of the personal admiration which exists between the two gentlemen; Mr. Ormandy has made exception to his decision of no summer concerts in order to accept his friend's invitation. In the past Mr. Ormandy has conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra several times in Boston—and Dr. Munch has been guest conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra in Philadelphia—but the Tanglewood concert on July 29 will mark Mr. Ormandy's first appearance at the Berkshire Festival.

For his Tanglewood program Eugene Ormandy has scheduled Strauss' romantic tone poem, "Don Juan," the Third Symphony by the contemporary American composer Roy Harris, Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane" suite and the Symphony No. 2 by Brahms.

From his birth in Budapest, November 18, 1899, Eugene Ormandy was destined to become a musician. He entered the Royal Academy of Music in Budapest when he was five years old. At nine he became a pupil of the great violinist, Jeno Hubay, (after whom he was named, since Eugene is translated into Jeno in Hungarian) and soon began making public appearances. One such auspicious performance was before Emperor Francis Josef, others took place before the royal family.

At 17 he received his professor's diploma at the Royal Academy and was given degrees in violin playing, composing and counterpoint. Between extensive concert tours as a virtuoso, he taught in Budapest at the State Conservatory. In 1921 a long-cherished ambition was fulfilled when he was invited to make a concert tour of the United States.

The tour turned out to be only a parade of glittering promises by an inexperienced manager. The young artist soon found himself alone in a strange country without funds or friends. By dint of genuine musical talent and determined effort, Ormandy became in short time radio's first important conductor. In 1930 he directed his first concerts with the Philadelphia Orchestra and the New York Philharmonic.

The turning point in Eugene Ormandy's career came the following year when Toscanini, slated for a guest performance with the Philadelphia Orchestra, was suddenly taken ill. Ormandy was invited as a replacement. Despite his manager's warnings about pinch hitting for Toscanini and following Sokowski, Ormandy elected to take the gamble and scored an overnight sensation.

In the audience was a representative from the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra scouting for a successor to ailing conductor Henri Verbrugge. He immediately signed Ormandy as guest conductor and later conductor. Ormandy held the post until 1936 proving himself a master orchestra builder, when he was invited to return to Philadelphia. This past season Eugene Ormandy celebrated his 25th anniversary as conductor and music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 29 1961

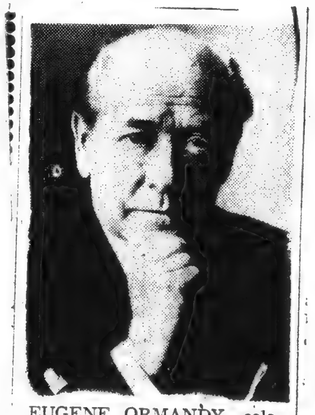
Whitestone

EUGENE ORMANDY, conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, learns from Dr. Charles Munch, left, conductor of the BSO, how to reach the stage of the Music Shed from the conductor's room when he showed up at Tanglewood yesterday to rehearse with the orchestra in preparation for tonight's concert which he will conduct at 8:30. Mr. Ormandy is a summer resident of the Berkshires. The BSO also will rehearse other weekend programs in the Music Shed this morning at 10:30, open to the public for the benefit of the pension fund.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
JUL 25 1961

AT TANGLEWOOD — Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra Saturday.

Mercury (e)
MEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 7,207
JUL 25 1961



EUGENE ORMANDY, celebrated conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will make his first appearance at the Berkshire Festival Saturday in Tanglewood He will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and has chosen works by Strauss, Harris, Roussel and Brahms.

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
JUL 27 1961

Copland Conducts, Janis Performs Liszt, at Lenox

Charles Munch has invited Eugene Ormandy, Aaron Copland and Byron Janis to be his guests at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tanglewood concerts this week.

AARON COPLAND

Eugene Ormandy, Music Director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will make his first Tanglewood appearance Saturday evening, July 29, 8:30, when he conducts the Orchestra in a program to include "Don Juan" by Richard Strauss, the Third Symphony by Roy Harris, Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane" and the Symphony No. 2 by Brahms.

Aaron Copland, chairman of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, will conduct two of his own compositions as the opening works at the Friday evening, July 28, 8:30 concert: the "Preamble for a Solemn Occasion" and his ballet, "Appalachian Spring." Mr. Munch will conduct Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," with the Festival Chorus, as the closing work at this concert.

At the Sunday afternoon concert, (July 30, 2:30) Byron Janis will perform two piano concerti by Franz Liszt. Walter Piston's "Three New England Sketches" and Beethoven's Symphony No. 4 will also be heard.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 26 1961

Berkshire Natives Get Restless Too

At Tanglewood the other night, two couples disputing possession of two unreserved seats were heard engaged in a curious dialogue.

"We happen to live in the Berkshires," observed one lady bitingly, "so I guess we know the rules."

"Oh, is that so? Well, I'm sure you're not natives!" was the reply.

"No, we're not. But you're not natives, either!" cried the first disputant—quite as though the question of nativeship had some relevance to the altercation.

Natives know better. Persons born in the Berkshires or persons who have sunk tap roots here (over the course of, say, 20 to 30 years) realize that they have no claim to special treatment. The fact that they reside here entitles them to no more consideration in the county's public entertainments than is granted the latest arrival in town. Although a visitor may suspect that the year-rounder gets all the tickets he wants (and at cut-rate prices), he really has no advantage in the struggle except prior seasoning and his own inherent cunning.

If anyone is the loser in the county's tourist season, in fact, it is the Berkshire "borner" or longtime resident who sees his restaurants crowded, streets hideous with traffic, and unfamiliar faces everywhere. If he is not intensely interested in the arts, nor in the dollars circulated by vacationers, he is in an especially unhappy plight. Then he cannot even rationalize his discomfort by seeing it is the price he has to pay for Beethoven or bigger sales.

His way of living is changed for two months every year, to no discernible purpose, as the army of occupation moves into territory he once considered his. And over it all he has slight control. Whatever the visitors may think, there is many a Berkshire native who pays the full tab and geats seated behind the post.

124

'Tchaikovsky Needs a Rest'

Berkshire Eagle, July 22, 1961

Interview With Eugene Ormandy

Berkshirites are so accustomed to considering their county the summer preserve of the Boston Symphony that it may come as a surprise to them to learn that Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, has also selected this area for his summer vacation. He and his wife live in a large house in South Berkshire, and because they hope to remain uninterrupted in their not-so-rustic retreat, they asked Berkshire Week to reveal its location. We promptly agreed.

The Ormandys bought their house and land in 1959 from their good friend, violinist Zino Francescatti, who sold it because he couldn't spend enough time in the house. Long before the Ormandys ever saw it, however, they were quite familiar with it: Francescatti was always showing them photographs of the house and grounds.

* * *

"But," says Mr. Ormandy, "until I actually saw the house, I didn't believe how beautiful it was. I walked in, took one look at that view"—pointing to the skyline across the valley—"and said, 'Zino, how do you want me to pay for it?'"

The Ormandys have renamed the house, which Francescatti called "Fiddletop"; it is now "Belvedere." Mr. Ormandy says that a name someone else gave to a house wouldn't fit his personality, although "Fiddletop" does not seem an inappropriate name for Mr. Ormandy's estate, since he was a European violin prodigy at the age of three and a half and the youngest pupil of the Royal State Academy of Music in Budapest at five and a half.

A natural question for a world-famous musician living in the immediate area of Tanglewood was, "What do you think of the summer music festival here?"

With a smile, Mr. Ormandy replied that he had never been to Tanglewood. He hastened to explain that he was greatly looking forward to his first visit on Saturday, and to his first "business" engagement there as guest conductor, the following week.

* * *

Naturally, however, he has heard a lot about the festival, and is enthusiastic about it. "From all I read about Tanglewood, I think that Koussevitzky's dream has come true, primarily through the efforts of the people in the area who have given their whole-hearted support. And with one of the greatest symphonies in the world in residence, Tanglewood has to be a success."

Mr. Ormandy is coming to Tanglewood on the personal invitation of Charles Munch, a close friend whom he greatly admires. Actually, the two men set up an exchange agreement. Mr. Munch will be guest conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra after he retires from the Boston Symphony at the close of the Boston season.

* * *

Mr. Ormandy, who is still recovering from the effects of an automobile accident last winter, is in strict training for his appearance here. It takes him about two and a half weeks to prepare for a concert. It is hard work, and he would not do it for any other orchestra. "This is the only invitation I would never have turned down," he says.

Middlebrook

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Ormandy relax at Belvedere, somewhere in Berkshire.

As a conductor, Mr. Ormandy not only trains hard himself, but also drills his musicians very carefully. The usual single rehearsal granted a guest conductor with the Boston Symphony was not enough for him. He felt he needed more time to work with such a fine group of musicians, and so Dr. Munch gave him another half rehearsal. "Even so," Mr. Ormandy says, "I have to count heavily on the friendship of this great orchestra if we are to give our best performance."

His program for July 29 includes Harris' Third Symphony. "We've played it before," he observes, "and while I don't expect the orchestra to remember it, I do hope we can learn it sooner than a fresh work."

Since Harris is a modern American composer, Mr. Ormandy began to talk of his preferences in music. "I believe in the new," he said. "For example, I have not played Tchaikovsky in New York for 30 years. I think he needs a good rest."

Copland, he says, is one of the great American composers. "We are doing the 'Tender Land' next year in Philadelphia. I just memorized it yesterday afternoon."

Copland has also been commissioned to write a major new work for the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Among his other favorites are Piston, whose Seventh Symphony won the Pulitzer Prize and was written for the Philadelphia Orchestra, Samuel Barber, and Roger Sessions.

Eugene Ormandy may well be in the Berkshires to conduct the Boston Symphony in two weeks, but he is also here to relax. As the hot afternoon wore on, he began to look outside more and more often. When I left him, I think he was heading for the swimming pool.

—Jonathan Middlebrook

Ridgefield Press
RIDGEFIELD, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,127

JUL 20 1961

AARON COPLAND will conduct two of his own works at the opening Boston Symphony concert of the fourth week of the Berkshire Festival. On Friday evening (July 28, 8:30) Mr. Copland will conduct his "Preamble" and "Appalachian Spring."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 81,815

JUL 29 1961

COPLAND LEADS OWN WORKS AT LENOX CONCERT

Tanglewood Program Also Offers Ballet Score by Ravel

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—It was almost an American program which the Boston Symphony Orchestra offered 6072 people in the music shed Friday night. Aaron Copland opened proceedings by conducting two of his own compositions, "Preamble for a Solemn Occasion" and "Appalachian Spring."

Profits by Tour

Copland appeared to belong to the angular school conducting, a school known for its lack of grace. However, he profited by his conducting of the orchestra on the Far East tour last year and the orchestra played well for him.

The "Preamble for a Solemn Occasion" was written on commission for the first anniversary of the adoption of the declaration of human rights by the United Nations, truly a solemn occasion. The occasion must have affected the composer deeply for he has written music in the grand style, something less than melodious, but containing grand passages. The texture is often thick, but the over all impression one got was that of sincerity.

"Appalachian Spring" finds the composer in a lighter mood. Copland is an expert with folk tunes and rhythms and the result gives the idea of American impressionism. I found many passages extremely listenable. The orchestra provided an illuminating performance, rich in tone and with finely differentiated moods. The audience, which was strangely small for a music shed concert, was lavish with its praise for "Appalashian Spring" and something less for the "Preamble."

Admires Direction

Charles Munch was on hand to conduct the only other piece on the program, Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," a one-act ballet. Munch has offered this creation several times at Berkshire music festivals and it always goes over. There is much to admire in the French conductor's reading of the score.

The orchestral tone was ravishing and the fresh voices of the festival chorus quite filled the shed with good sound. The chorus had been prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Becket. In fact, the performance was a happy occasion for participants and audience. As for this listener, he does not remember a Munch - directed performance where the integration of voices and instruments sounded so well. The singing of syllables is not material for impressive effects. But when sung to the glowing music of Ravel, it fits in the picture.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955
JUL 25 1961

Famed Conductor Of Philadelphia Orchestra To Make His First Appearance At Tanglewood

Eugene Ormandy, famed conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra for the past 25 years and inveterate world traveler, has refused many requests for his services this summer in order to have an extended vacation with Mrs. Ormandy at their Berkshire County estate. Mr. Ormandy has accepted only one summer engagement and that is to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Saturday evening, July 29.

Charles Munch has invited Mr. Ormandy to conduct at the Berkshire Festival not only because of Mr. Ormandy's international fame but because of the personal admiration which exists between the two gentlemen; Mr. Ormandy has made exception to his decision of no summer concerts in order to accept his friend's invitation. In the past Mr. Ormandy has conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra several times in Boston—and Doctor Munch has been guest conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra in Philadelphia — but the Tanglewood concert on July 29 will mark Mr. Ormandy s first appearance at the Berkshire Festival.

For his Tanglewood program Eugene Ormandy has scheduled Strauss' romantic tone poem, "Don Juan", the Third Symphony by the contemporary American composer Roy Harris, Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane" suite and the Symphony No. 2 by Brahms.

From his birth in Budapest, Nov. 18, 1899, Eugene Ormandy was destined to become a musician. He entered the Royal Academy of Music in Budapest when he was five years old. At nine he became a pupil of the great violinist Jeno Hubay (after whom he was named, since Eugene is translated into Jeno in Hungarian) and soon began making public appearances. One such auspicious performance was before the Emperor Francis Josef; others took place before the Royal family.

At 17 he received his professor's diploma at the Royal Academy and was given degrees in violin playing, composing and counterpoint. Between extensive concert tours as a virtuoso, he taught in Budapest at the State Conservatory. In 1921 a long-cherished ambition was fulfilled when he was invited to make a concert tour of the United States.

The tour turned out to be only a parade of glittering promises by an inexperienced manager. The young artist soon found himself alone in a strange country without funds or friends. By dint of genuine musical tanent and determined effort, Ormandy became in short time radio's first important conductor. In 1930 he directed his first concerts with the Philadelphia Orchestra and the New York Philharmonic.

The turning point in Eugene Ormandy's career came the following year when Toscanini, slated for a guest performance with the Philadelphia Orchestra, was suddenly taken ill. Ormandy was invited as a replacement. Despite his manager's warnings about pinch hitting for Toscanini and following Stokowski, Ormandy elected to take the gamble and scored an overnight sensation. In the audience was a representative from the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra scouting for a successor to ailing conductor Henri Verbruggen. He immediately signed Ormandy as guest conductor and later conductor. Ormandy held the post until 1936, proving himself a master orchestra builder, when he was invited to return to Philadelphia. This past season Eugene Ormandy celebrated his 25th anniversary as conductor and music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 26 1961

Ormandy's Appearance Saturday Is Favor to His Friend, Munch

TANGLEWOOD — Eugene Ormandy, famed conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra for the past 25 years and inveterate world traveler, has refused many requests for his services this summer in order to have an extended vacation with Mrs. Ormandy at their Berkshire County estate. Mr. Ormandy has accepted only one summer engagement and that is to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Saturday evening.

Charles Munch has invited Mr. Ormandy to conduct at the Berkshire Festival not only because of Mr. Ormandy's international fame but because of the personal admiration which exists between the two gentlemen; Mr. Ormandy has made exeeption to his decision of no summer concerts in order to accept his friend's invitation. In the past Mr. Ormandy has conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra several times in Boston—and Dr. Munch has been guest conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra in Philadelphia—but the Tanglewood concert on Saturday will mark Mr. Ormandy's first appearance at the Berkshire Festival.

For his Tanglewood program Mr. Ormandy has scheduled Strauss' romantic tone poem, "Don Juan," the Third Symphony by the contemporary American composer Roy Harris, Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane" suite and the Symphony No. 2 by Brahms.

From his birth in Budapest, November 18, 1899, Eugene Ormandy was destined to become a musician. He entered the Royal Academy of Music in Budapest when he was five years old. At nine he became a pupil of the great violinist Jeno Hubay (after whom he was named, since Eugene is translated into Jeno in Hungarian) and soon began making public appearances. One such auspicious performance was before the Emperor Francis Josef; others took place before the royal family.

At 17 he received his professor's diploma at the Royal Academy and was given degrees in violin playing, composing and counterpoint. Between extensive concert tours as a virtuoso, he taught in Budapest at the State Conservatory. In 1921 a long-cherished ambition was fulfilled when he was invited to make a concert tour of the United States.

Disappointing Tour

The tour turned out to be only a parade of glittering promises by an inexperienced manager. The young artist soon found himself alone in a strange country without funds or friends. By dint of genuine musical talent and determined effort, Ormandy became in short time radio's first important conductor. In 1930 he directed his first concerts with the Philadelphia Orchestra and the New York Philharmonic.

The turning point in Eugene Ormandy's career came the following year when Toscanini, slated for a guest performance with the Philadelphia Orchestra, was suddenly taken ill. Ormandy was invited as a replacement. Despite his manager's warnings about pinch hitting for Toscanini and following Stokowski, Ormandy elected to take the gamble and scored an overnight sensation. In the audience was a representative from the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra scouting for a successor to ailing conductor Henri Verbruggen. He immediately signed Ormandy as guest conductor and later conductor. Ormandy held the post until 1936, proving himself a master orchestra builder, when he was invited to return to Philadelphia. This past season Eugene Ormandy celebrated his 25th anniversary as conductor and music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 28 1961

Fourth BSO Series of Concerts Opens Tonight in Music Shed

TANGLEWOOD — The four Berkshire Festival weekends coming up will be packed with a variety of composers, conductors, soloists, two benefits, chamber music performances on Wednesday evenings and nearly a score of events open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center—morning, afternoon and night.

Copland To Conduct

Tonight the fourth series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open in the Music Shed when Dr. Charles Munch, musical director of the BSO, has invited composer Aaron Copland to conduct his own works in the first half of the program.

Tomorrow night, Dr. Munch's close friend, Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, and a summer resident of the Berkshires, will make his debut at Tanglewood conducting the BSO in a program featuring the works of Strass, Harris, Roussel and Brahms.

Sunday afternoon, Dr. Munch will return to the podium to conduct the BSO in a program, featuring Byron Janis as soloist in two piano concertos by Liszt.

The fifth concert of the Berkshire Festival's chamber music series will be performed by the Boston Fine Arts Quartet with Joseph de Pasquale in the theater-concert hall Wednesday evening. The quartet, consisting of four members of the BSO, Joseph Silverstein, Harry Dickson, Eugene Lehner and Richard Kapuscinski and Mr. de Pasquale, will perform the Quintets in C minor (K.406), D major (K.593), and E-flat major (K.614) by Mozart.

Boston Pops Thursday

The Boston Pops, with Arthur Fiedler, will make their annual appearance at Tanglewood Thursday night, Aug. 3, for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center. Until last year, this benefit had been known as Tanglewood on Parade, but is now called the Boston Pops at Tanglewood. Earl Wild will be Mr. Fiedler's guest as piano soloist at this special concert. The program includes Tchaikovsky's piano concerto in B-flat minor plus Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance," the Overture to "Mignon" by Thomas, Strauss's "Emperor" waltzes and compositions by Offenbach, Bernstein and Meredith Willson.

Next weekend Pierre Monteux will return to the Music Shed to share the conducting duties with the BSO and the following weekend Dr. Munch has invited Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the BSO, and Leonard Bernstein, conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, to conduct.

ADVERTISEMENT

126

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL SCHEDULES BUSIEST WEEK

World Famous Pianist to Be Soloist Today With Boston Symphony Orchestra

Charles Munch Invites Noted Byron Janis for Performance in Music Shed

LENOX—Byron Janis, internationally famous pianist, will be the soloist this afternoon at Tanglewood when he joins the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Charles Munch in Liszt's Piano Concerto No. 1 and No. 2 for a concert at 2.30 in the Music Shed. The full orchestra will be heard in Walter Piston's "Three New England Sketches" and Beethoven's Symphony No. 4. Among the many high lights of the week at the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be Thursday's annual Boston Pops at Tanglewood, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, with pianist Earl Wild as soloist. Orchestra manager Thomas D. Perry, Jr., has scheduled at least one event each day this week, starting at 10 a. m. today.

Two Soloists

Dr. Munch has invited two members of his orchestra to be soloists at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tanglewood concerts next week end.

At the Saturday evening concert at 8.30, in the Music Shed violinist Joseph Silverstein—replacing the indisposed Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer—will be soloist in the Violin Concerto No. 2 by Prokofiev; at this concert Dr. Munch will also conduct Brahms' Variations On a Theme by Haydn and the Symphony by Franck.

Joseph de Pasquale will be heard at the concert next Sunday afternoon at 2.30 in a performance of Bartok's Viola Concerto. The balance of this program will consist of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and "The Pines of Rome," by Respighi.

Pierre Monteux makes his second appearance at the 1961 Berkshire Festival to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday evening at 8.30 in the Music Hall when pianist Eugene Istomin will be his guest. The program will include Beethoven's Overture to "Fidelio," Schumann's Piano Concerto, the Dance from "Salome" by Richard Strauss and the Symphony No. 2 by Sibelius.

Benefit Concert

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will make their annual appearance at Tanglewood Thursday evening at 8.30 to give a benefit concert for the Berkshire Music Center. The program includes Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto in B-Flat minor plus Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance," the Overture to "Mignon" by Thomas, Strauss's "Emperor" Waltzes and compositions by Offenbach, Bernstein and Willson.

The fifth concert of the Berkshire Music Festival's chamber music series will be performed by the Boston Fine Arts Quartet with Joseph de Pasquale in the Tanglewood Theater Wednesday evening at 8.30. The quartet—consisting of four members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra: Joseph Silverstein, Harry Dickson, Eugen Lehner and Richard Kapuscinski—and Mr. de Pasquale will perform the Quintets in C minor (K. 406), D major (K. 593), and E-flat major (K. 614) by Mozart.

Members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to the following events at Tanglewood this week: Monday, 8.30 p. m., Chamber Music Hall, Composer's Forum; Tuesday, 8.30 p. m., Theater, Tanglewood Choir; Friday, 3.15 p. m., Chamber Music Hall, Seminar in Contemporary Music; Saturday, 3 p. m., Music Shed, Berkshire Music Center Orchestra; and next Sunday, 10 a. m., Chamber Music Hall, Berkshire Music Center Chamber Music.

Pops at Tanglewood

LENOX—Arthur Fiedler, who will conduct the Springfield Symphony Orchestra in a pop concert in Springfield in January, returns to the Berkshire Music Festival Thursday evening at 8.30 to direct the Boston Pops in a diversified program in the Music Shed.

Wild Is Guest

Mr. Fiedler has invited pianist Earl Wild to be soloist for a return engagement. Mr. Wild will play the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto in B Flat minor. Thursday's program will open with "Pomp and Circumstance," to be followed by the overture from "Mignon," Emperor Waltzes by Strauss, Offenbach's "Gaite Parisienne," selections from Leonard Bernstein's "West Side Story," and end with "76 Trombones" from "The Music Man" by Meredith Willson.

The famous conductor will arrive at Tanglewood in time for Thursday's benefit concert, and immediately return to San Francisco where he is presently conducting the San Francisco Symphony's 11th pop concert season. The Tanglewood concert is for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

Each year, Mr. Fiedler spends about three months as conductor of the Boston Symphony Tour Orchestra. The other nine months find him conducting major orchestras throughout the world. His return trip to California will be made via Miami and the Red Rocks Festival in Denver.

Circle Globe

Before Christmas Mr. Fiedler will have circled the globe to fulfill engagements from Buffalo to San Diego in this country; and to conduct at the Hastings Festival in England, radio and television engagements, plus a Festival Hall appearance in London; concerts in Dublin, and three weeks in Tokyo.

Such a schedule is nothing

EARL WILD

new to Arthur Fiedler. He has conducted from Norway to Argentina and from Israel to Chile. In North America, he has conducted the Orchestre Symphonique de Montreal and the Honolulu Symphony Orchestra. In the United States, he has conducted from Portland, Me., to Portland, Ore.

Not only has Arthur Fiedler conducted such orchestras as the Atlanta, Buffalo, Cleveland, Dallas, Houston, Minneapolis and Pittsburgh—or the Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia and San Francisco orchestras within nine days—but he has conducted 18 concerts for the Milwaukee Park Commission, he has conducted 15 concerts with the Seattle Symphony Orchestra, six concerts with the Philharmonic Orchestra of Buenos Aires, five with the Toronto Symphony Orchestra.

In his first 10 years in San Francisco, he conducted 96 concerts (which included 63 different concerti!) with members of the San Francisco orchestra.

Summer Festivals

The summer festivals also claim Arthur Fiedler. He has conducted a concert to benefit the Berkshire Music Center annually since 1954 at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, he has conducted the Chicago Symphony at Ravinia and at Grant Park. He has conducted at Hollywood Bowl, Empire State Music Festival, French Lick Festival, Newport Carnival of Music, and at Philadelphia's Robin Hood Dell.

Television and radio broadcasts also take up much of Arthur Fiedler's time. He has conducted 20 Standard Hour broadcast concerts in San Francisco, six U. S. Steel broadcasts on NBC, the televised Voice of Firestone and "Music for a Spring Night." This season, for the second year, Mr. Fiedler will conduct four television concerts with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra on their "Great Music from Chicago" series. And in October, 1960, he began his own weekly radio program on CBS in New York.

Hectic Schedule

As an example of his activity since 1953 with the Boston Pops Tour Orchestra: 1953, 65 concerts in 68 days in 60 cities in 26 states; 1954, 47 concerts, 52 days, 43 cities, 16 states; 1955, 58 concerts, 53 days, 56 cities, 26 states; 1956, 81 concerts, 83 days, 79 cities, 22 states and Canada; 1957, 71 concerts, 70 days, 67 cities, 24 states and Canada; 1959, 60 concerts, 62 days, 58 cities, 22 states; for a total of—six years, 382 concerts, 388 days, 363 cities, 136 states and Canada.

Saturday Soloist

Violinist Joseph Silverstein will be soloist with Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra Saturday evening at Tanglewood.

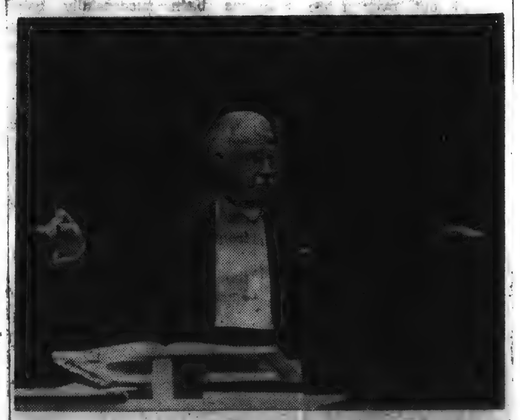
Boston Quartet

The Boston Fine Arts Quartet with assisting artist Joseph de Pasquale will be heard at Tanglewood Wednesday evening in a chamber music program.

Sign Scroll

Dr. Charles Munch, left, and Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees, presented a scroll and a special recording to Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith recently. Miss Smith, who celebrated her 80th birthday on the 21st, initiated the Berkshire Festival and Music Shed at Tanglewood in 1934.

Fiedler Conducts



Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Boston Pop Orchestra on Thursday evening at Tanglewood.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,456
JUL 30

Music

Asian Artists To Perform Here

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

During the forthcoming season, Worcester will be fortunate in reaping the benefit of the newly-formed Asia Society Performing Arts Program.

It's an experiment in international exchange, which will bring leading Asian artists and companies to the United States. Leading concert managements were reluctant to undertake the manifold problems (and costs) of bringing artists from a distant continent since there were no ready-made centers of prepared interest in the U.S. — hence no regular outlets for engagements.

The advisory committee (a long list of celebrities) is headed by Isadora Bennett, theatrical manager and long-time participant in the international exchange of actors, dancers, artists and musicians.

Two Here

Worcester will be host to two of the society's most famous attractions.

On Oct. 1, Ravi Shankar will give a concert at the Art Museum. He's India's great satirist and composer who performed for the international broadcast celebrating the tenth anniversary of the United Nations. His fellow-performers were Pablo Casals, Ernest Ansermet and David Oistrakh.

Shankar will be assisted by a tabla player and a tambouraplayer — in Western terms, a chamber ensemble.

Indrani and her Indian Dancers will perform on the Fine Arts Course of Clark University on Nov. 9th. She is said to be the evponent of more styles of classical and regional dance than any other Indian dancer who has appeared in this country. Her company consists of three musicians and three dancers.

Composer Winner

A young Massachusetts composer was among eight students who shared $5,000 in the ninth annual student composers awards, sponsored by Broadcast Music, Inc.

He's Mark Bernard DeVoto, age 21, of Cambridge, a student at Harvard University. His entries were "Planh" for mixed chorus and five instruments, and "Toccata Tripartita for Piano."

Two summers ago, DeVoto studied with Lukas Foss at Tanglewood, and last year with Randall Thompson and Walter Piston at Harvard.

Brubeck Talking

If there's anyone who takes himself more seriously than a jazz celebrity, it's another jazz celebrity.

Last April, "Points on Jazz" was premiered in New York City. It's a ballet choreographed by Dania Krupska, with a musical score by Dave Brubeck.

Whatever success it had caused such an impact on Brubeck that he expressed himself thus: "If more jazz-oriented works by Points on Jazz can gain enough recogaition an exposure they will influence the arts in general to such an extent that America, with its great jazz heritage, could take the lead away from Europe."

For a list of the European composers with whom Americans will compete, we refer you to Baker's Autobiographical Dictionary of Musicians. It doesn't necessarily have to be the 1961 edition.

Composer Relaxes

Now that Walter Piston has won his second Pulitzer Prize (1961) with his Symphony No. 7, he considers himself to be a gentleman of leisure. His new role is that of full-time composer after 33 years as a music teacher at Harvard University, and elsewhere.

"I had been carrying my students' problems around with me," he commented. "Every morning I had to solve their problems before solving my own. Now, for the first time in 36 years, the burden is lifted."

Incilentally, Piston's "Three New England Sketches" will be played this afternoon at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch. It was written by commission for the 100th anniversary of the Worcester Music Festival.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
JUL 23 1961

Visitors to Tanglewood will hear unfamiliar music Wednesday night when the New York Pro Musica's members will sing and play work by early Renaissance composers, under Noah Greenberg's direction.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 26 1961

Lenox Quartet Concert Open To the Public

TANGLEWOOD — The Lenox Quartet will present a special concert of contemporary music here Saturday afternoon at 3. This concert will be open to the public. The Lenox Quartet was brought together three years ago as the string contingent of the Fromm Players at Tanglewood. Aaron Copland, head of the department of composition at the Berkshire Music Center, described the group as "one of the leading groups in the profession."

Members of the Lenox Quartet are: Peter Marsh and Theodora Mantz, violins; Paul Hersh, viola; Donald McCall, violoncello.

Their program will include the Quartet No. 1 (1949) by Leon Kirchner, who was composer in residence during the 1959 and 1960 sessions of the Berkshire Music Center. Also to be heard is Arnold Schoenberg's String Trio Op. 45, and following intermission the concert will close with Elliot Carter's 'Quartet No. 2 (1959).

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
JUL 28 1961

At Tanglewood

The Lenox String Quartet will give a free concert of contemporary music at 3 p. m. tomorrow at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The program will include Leon Kirchner's Quartet No. 1.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 29 1961

THE LENOX QUARTET, made up of former students at the Berkshire Music Center will present a concert of contemporary music in the theater at Tanglewood this afternoon at 3. From left to right, Donald McCall, violoncello; Theodora Mantz, violin; Paul Hersh, viola, and Peter Marsh, violin.

128

Theatre - Concert Hall — Tanglewood

SEVEN CONCERTS OF CHAMBER MUSIC

Wednesday Evenings at 8:30

July 26

The New York Pro Musica

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
CHARLES MUNCH
Music Director

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL 1961

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUL 26 1961

Pro Musica Group At Tanglewood For Concert Tonight

Noah Greenberg and his New York Pro Musica return to Tanglewood tonight to give a program of early Renaissance music for vocal and instrumental ensembles as the fourth concert of the 1961 Berkshire Festival's chamber music series.

For their Tanglewood concert the New York Pro Musica — consisting of six vocalists and four instrumentalists — will perform works by Heinrich Isaac, Ludwig Senfl and Orlando Lassus, and from the Glogauer Liederbuch.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 26 1961

N.Y. Pro Musica Concert Tonight At Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD — Noah Greenberg and his New York Pro Musica return here tonight to give a program of early Renaissance music for vocal and instrumental ensembles as the fourth concert of the 1961 Berkshire Festival's chamber music series.

On a spring evening in 1953, a New York audience of habitual concertgoers — for whom it was no new experience to hear musical masterpieces interpreted by the foremost artists and orchestras of the present day — found itself on its feet, receiving with an ovation a new group of artists who had brought to life the long-forgotten music of the most creative era in history. The group called itself the New York Pro Musica.

For their Tanglewood concert tonight at 8:30 the New York Pro Musica — consisting of six vocalists and four instrumentalists — will perform works by Heinrich Isaac, Ludwig Senfl and Orlando Lassus and from the Glogauer Liederbuch.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 4,856
JUL 25 1961

N.Y. 'Pro Musica' Group To Perform at Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass. — Noah Greenberg and his New York Pro Musica return to Tanglewood Wednesday, July 26, to give a program of early Renaissance music for vocal and instrumental ensembles as the fourth concert of the 1961 Berkshire's Festival's chamber music series.

On a spring evening in 1953, a New York audience of habitual concert-goers found itself on its feet, giving an ovation to a new group of artists who had brought to life the long-forgotten music of the most creative era in history. The group called itself the New York Pro Musica.

The music the New York Pro Musica presented under the direction of Noah Greenberg at this concert covered five centuries — 1200 to 1700. It was performed by a vocal ensemble and a group of instrumentalists. The latter drew astonishing and beautiful sounds from a variety of rare instruments including, among others, a harpsichord, a viola da gamba and a series of recorders.

Opened the Public Ear

Since that evening the New York Pro Musica has performed to soldout houses in New York City, throughout the country and in many of Europe's musical centers.

These distinctions have been won by the difficult process of opening the tightly - closed public ear to the beauties of old music—the masterpieces created during the ages in which Dante wrote poetry, Da Vinci painted and Shakespeare saw his plays performed.

The New York Pro Musica, founded in 1952 by Noah Greenberg, set for itself the objective of reversing the general belief that the composers of the Renaissance and pre-Renaissance — in fact, anyone who wrote music before Bach — had produced scores suitable only for performance on the most solemn or religious occasions, and in an incomprehensible and certainly unentertaining manner.

Built Up Library

From the start, the Pro Musica undertook to build a library of available scholarship editions, microfilm, books dealing with every aspect of medieval and renaissance music. It also started its collection of early instruments for use by the performers in the ensemble. A group of qualified musicians and vocalists were recruited who would be able to accomplish the specialized task of interpreting the music of a period when nothing was written down on the scores save the notes. Since early composers usually rehearsed and conducted their own works, they had little need of indicating tempi, dynamics or even instrumentation.

For their Tanglewood concert the New York Pro Musica, consisting of six vocalists and four instrumentalists, will perform works by Heinrich Isaac, Ludwig Senfl and Orlando Lassus, and from the Glogauer Liederbuch.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 81,815
JUL 27 1961

TANGLEWOOD CROWD HAILS PRO MUSICA

Works of 15th, 16th Centuries Performed By Ensemble

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—The fourth concert of the seven-concert chamber music series held each Wednesday night in the Tanglewood Theater Concert Hall drew a large, attentive and critical audience. There is always an audience for a concert by the New York Pro Musica. It is the finest to be heard in the country.

Difficult, Melodic

The ensemble is made up of 10 people. Vocalists and instrumentalists. The instrumentation consists of a protative organ, harpsichord, recorders, flute and viola da gamba. The vocal ensemble consists of two sopranos, tenor, counter tenor, baritone and bass.

The music, sung and played, was by such eminent composers of 15th and 16th centuries as Heinrich Isaac, Gogauer Liederbuch, Ludwig Senel, Orlandus Lassus and others.

The music these men wrote was difficult, melodic, imaginative and, when performed as it was Wednesday night, crystal clear and four square. Every line was projected with taste and profound understanding. A carefully prepared program had been printed but after the artists came on stage the lights were dimmed and the program became a souvenir.

Interesting Pieces

We found two of the most interesting pieces were Isaac's "Ode on the Death of Lorenzo de Medici" and a Florentine carnival song. The male quartet was excellent, although we missed the incomparable Oberlin of a season or so ago. The instrumental ensemble was heard in several numbers and the sound produced was pleasant to the ear, particularly Isaac's "In Meinen Sinn" and "J'si Pris Amours."

While this music seems to us suited to a limited audience, there is no doubt that its popularity is growing. People seem to turn to it as a respite from the music evolutions which strike the ears these days. Its classicism, purity of line and its melody make one forget for a while the cacophony around us.

125

Theatre - Concert Hall — Tanglewood

SEVEN CONCERTS OF CHAMBER MUSIC

Wednesday Evenings at 8:30

July 26

The New York Pro Musica

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
CHARLES MUNCH
Music Director

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL 1961

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUL 26 1961

Pro Musica Group At Tanglewood For Concert Tonight

Noah Greenberg and his New York Pro Musica returns to Tanglewood tonight to give a program of early Renaissance music for vocal and instrumental ensembles as the fourth concert of the 1961 Berkshire Festival's chamber music series.

For their Tanglewood concert the New York Pro Musica — consisting of six vocalists and four instrumentalists — will perform works by Heinrich Isaac, Ludwig Senfl and Orlando Lassus, and from the Glogauer Liederbuch.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 26 1961

N.Y. Pro Musica Concert Tonight At Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD — Noah Greenberg and his New York Pro Musica return here tonight to give a program of early Renaissance music for vocal and instrumental ensembles as the fourth concert of the 1961 Berkshire Festival's chamber music series.

On a spring evening in 1953, a New York audience of habitual concertgoers — for whom it was no new experience to hear musical masterpieces interpreted by the foremost artists and orchestras of the present day — found itself on its feet, receiving with an ovation a new group of artists who had brought to life the long-forgotten music of the most creative era in history. The group called itself the New York Pro Musica.

For their Tanglewood concert tonight at 8:30 the New York Pro Musica — consisting of six vocalists and four instrumentalists — will perform works by Heinrich Isaac, Ludwig Senfl and Orlando Lassus, and from the Glogauer Lieder-

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 4,856
JUL 25 1961

N.Y. 'Pro Musica' Group To Perform at Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass. — Noah Greenberg and his New York Pro Musica return to Tanglewood Wednesday, July 26, to give a program of early Renaissance music for vocal and instrumental ensembles as the fourth concert of the 1961 Berkshire's Festival's chamber music series.

On a spring evening in 1953, a New York audience of habitual concert-goers found itself on its feet, giving an ovation to a new group of artists who had brought to life the long-forgotten music of the most creative era in history. The group called itself the New York Pro Musica.

The music the New York Pro Musica presented under the direction of Noah Greenberg at this concert covered five centuries — 1200 to 1700. It was performed by a vocal ensemble and a group of instrumentalists. The latter drew astonishing and beautiful sounds from a variety of rare instruments including, among others, a harpsichord, a viola da gamba and a series of recorders.

Opened the Public Ear

Since that evening the New York Pro Musica has performed to soldout houses in New York City, throughout the country and in many of Europe's musical centers.

These distinctions have been won by the difficult process of opening the tightly - closed public ear to the beauties of old music — the masterpieces created during the ages in which Dante wrote poetry, Da Vinci painted and Shakespeare saw his plays performed.

The New York Pro Musica, founded in 1952 by Noah Greenberg, set for itself the objective of reversing the general belief that the composers of the Renaissance and pre-Renaissance — in fact, anyone who wrote music before Bach — had produced scores suitable only for performance on the most solemn or religious occasions, and in an incomprehensible and certainly unentertaining manner.

Built Up Library

From the start, the Pro Musica undertook to build a library of available scholarship editions, microfilm, books dealing with every aspect of medieval and renaissance music. It also started its collection of early instruments for use by the performers in the ensemble. A group of qualified musicians and vocalists were recruited who would be able to accomplish the specialized task of interpreting the music of a period when nothing was written down on the scores save the notes. Since early composers usually rehearsed and conducted their own works, they had little need of indicating tempi, dynamics or even instrumentation.

For their Tanglewood concert the New York Pro Musica, consisting of six vocalists and four instrumentalists, will perform works by Heinrich Isaac, Ludwig Senfl and Orlando Lassus, and from the Glogauer Liederbuch.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 81,815
JUL 27 1961

TANGLEWOOD CROWD HAILS PRO MUSICA

Works of 15th, 16th Centuries Performed By Ensemble

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—The fourth concert of the seven-concert chamber music series held each Wednesday night in the Tanglewood Theater Concert Hall drew a large, attentive and critical audience. There is always an audience for a concert by the New York Pro Musica. It is the finest to be heard in the country.

Difficult, Melodic

The ensemble is made up of 10 people. Vocalists and instrumentalists. The instrumentation consists of a protative organ, harpsichord, recorders, flute and viola da gamba. The vocal ensemble consists of two sopranos, tenor, counter tenor, baritone and bass.

The music, sung and played, was by such eminent composers of 15th and 16th centuries as Heinrich Isaac, Gogauer Liederbuch, Ludwig Senel, Orlandus Lassus and others.

The music these men wrote was difficult, melodic, imaginative and when performed as it was Wednesday night, crystal clear and four square. Every line was projected with taste and profound understanding. A carefully prepared program had been printed but after the artists came on stage, lights were dimmed and the program became a souvenir.

Interesting Pieces

We found two of the most interesting pieces were Isaac's "Ode on the Death of Lorenzo de Medici" and a Florentine carnival song. The male quartet was excellent, although we missed the incomparable Oberlin of a season or so ago. The instrumental ensemble was heard in several numbers and the sound produced was pleasant to the ear, particularly Isaac's "In Meinen Sinn" and "J'si Pris Amours."

While this music seems to us suited to a limited audience, there is no doubt that its popularity is growing. People seem to turn to it as a respite from the music evolutions which strike the ears these days. Its classicism, purity of line and its melody make one forget for a while the cacophony around us.

HEINRICH ISAAC

Zwischen Berg und tiefem Tal: Between mountain and deep valley there runs a free highroad, whoever does not wish to keep his love, must let him go.

Quis dabit capiti meo aquam?: O that my head were waters, and my eyes a fount of tears, that I might weep by day and weep by night . . .

Donna di Dentro: Lady, in your house grow roses, violets, and blooms . . . Fortune was mine for a long time, O my beautiful lady . . .

From the welter of Flemish master musicians who flourished around 1500, a few figures stand out clearly. Josquin des Prez has slightly obscured the name of Isaac, a man whose originality and distinctiveness are apparent on even slight acquaintance with his music. Isaac is the very model of the migrating Fleming whose life in Italy, Germany, and Austria anticipates the cosmopolitan type exemplified in Orlandus Lassus and George Frederic Handel. The most talented heads of state keep him at their courts, men like Lorenzo "the Magnificent" at Florence and Emperor Maximillian I at Vienna. Every national style interests him and provokes masterly compositions.

The major musical forms of the Renaissance were the Mass and the motet; Isaac has left us twenty-three settings of the ordinary of the Mass plus the Choralis Constantinus, a cycle of settings of the Offices for the entire liturgical year. The Missa De Martyribus like several other Isaac Masses, alternates between traditional plainsong and sections of polyphony based on the chant.

Isaac's secular music is the perfect reflection of the courtly humanism of his time. These compositions, whether grave or gay, are written with a skill that is rarely matched in any period, but the craft does not obtrude. His chansons, represented by the instrumental pieces on this program, are models of compactness in which not a phrase is wasted or misused. The lament on the death of Lorenzo, a setting of Politian's poem mourning the great patron's passing in 1492, is a tragic ode incomparable in the poise and control of its passions.

THE GLOGAUER LIEDERBUCH

Else, el se mundo: God hath now revealed himself to the world, the true being. Giving himself willingly . . .

Elslein, liebstes Elselein: Ah Elsie, dearest Elsie mine, were I only at your side . . .

Salve virgo: Hail, Virgin, pleasing to God, appointed through eternity, be thou our advocate . . .

Ich bins erfreut: My joy hangs on your red lips, most beloved mine . . .

This important Renaissance musical document consists of a set of three part-books written between the years 1477 and 1488. It was found in the

FOURTH CONCERT OF THE CHAMBER MUSIC SERIES

The New York Pro Musica

NOAH GREENBERG, Director

SHEILA SCHONBRUN: Soprano
CAROLYN BACKUS: Soprano
ROBERT WHITE: Countertenor
CHARLES BRESSLER: Tenor
GORDON MYERS: Baritone
BRAYTON LEWIS: Bass
LANOUE DAVENPORT: Recorders, cromorne
SHELLEY GRUSKIN: Flute, recorders, cromorne
BARBARA MUESER: Viola da gamba
PAUL MAYNARD: Harpsichord, portative organ

Instrumental consort rehearsed under the direction of LaNoue Davenport

PROGRAM

Early Renaissance Masters

I

HEINRICH ISAAC (c. 1450-1517)	Missa Martyribus Kyrie Agnus	Ensemble

II

GLOGAUER LIEDERBUCH (c. 1480)	Else, el se mundo	Ensemble
	Elslein, liebstes Elselein	Brayton Lewis and instruments
	Salve virgo	Sheila Schonbrun, Carolyn Backus, and instruments
	Ich bins erfreut	Charles Bressler and instruments

III

HEINRICH ISAAC	La mi la sol En l'ombre	Instruments Instruments
	Zwischen Berg und tiefem Tal	Robert White and instruments
	J'ay pris amours	Instruments
	In meinem Sinn	Instruments

IV

HEINRICH ISAAC	Quis dabit capiti meo aquam? (Ode on the death of Lorenzo de' Medici)	Men's voices
	Donna di dentro (Florentine carnival song)	Ensemble

INTERMISSION

V

LUDWIG SENFL (c. 1490-1543)	Ich weiss nit	Charles Bressler, Robert White, and instruments
	Gross Weh ich leid'	Gordon Myers and instruments
ORLANDUS LASSUS (1532-1594)	Suzanne un jour	Harpsichord solo

VI

LUDWIG SENFL	Missa Paschalis Kyrie Gloria Sanctus Agnus	Ensemble

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 4,856
JUL 25 1961

N.Y. 'Pro Musica' Group To Perform at Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass. — Noah Greenberg and his New York Pro Musica return to Tanglewood Wednesday, July 26, to give a program of early Renaissance music for vocal and instrumental ensembles as the fourth concert of the 1961 Berkshire's Festival's chamber music series.

On a spring evening in 1953, a New York audience of habitual concert-goers found itself on its feet, giving an ovation to a new group of artists who had brought to life the long-forgotten music of the most creative era in history. The group called itself the New York Pro Musica.

The music the New York Pro Musica presented under the direction of Noah Greenberg at this concert covered five centuries — 1200 to 1700. It was performed by a vocal ensemble and a group of instrumentalists. The latter drew astonishing and beautiful sounds from a variety of rare instruments including, among others, a harpsichord, a viola da gamba and a series of recorders.

Opened the Public Ear

Since that evening the New York Pro Musica has performed to soldout houses in New York City, throughout the country and in many of Europe's musical centers.

These distinctions have been won by the difficult process of opening the tightly - closed public ear to the beauties of old music— the masterpieces created during the ages in which Dante wrote poetry, Da Vinci painted and Shakespeare saw his plays performed.

The New York Pro Musica, founded in 1952 by Noah Greenberg, set for itself the objective of reversing the general belief that the composers of the Renaissance and pre-Renaissance — in fact, anyone who wrote music before Bach — had produced scores suitable only for performance on the most solemn or religious occasions, and in an incomprehensible and certainly unentertaining manner.

Built Up Library

From the start, the Pro Musica undertook to build a library of available scholarship editions, microfilm, books dealing with every aspect of medieval and renaissance music. It also started its collection of early instruments for use by the performers in the ensemble. A group of qualified musicians and vocalists were recruited who would be able to accomplish the specialized task of interpreting the music of a period when nothing was written down on the scores save the notes. Since early composers usually rehearsed and conducted their own works, they had little need of indicating tempi, dynamics or even instrumentation.

For their Tanglewood concert the New York Pro Musica, consisting of six vocalists and four instrumentalists, will perform works by Heinrich Isaac, Ludwig Senfl and Orlando Lassus, and from the Glogauer Liederbuch.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 81,815
JUL 27 1961

TANGLEWOOD CROWD HAILS PRO MUSICA

Works of 15th, 16th Centuries Performed By Ensemble

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—The fourth concert of the seven-concert chamber music series held each Wednesday night in the Tanglewood Theater Concert Hall drew a large, attentive and critical audience. There is always an audience for a concert by the New York Pro Musica. It is the finest to be heard in the country.

Difficult, Melodic

The ensemble is made up of 10 people. Vocalists and instrumentalists. The instrumentation consists of a protative organ, harpsichord, recorders, flute and viola da gamba. The vocal ensemble consists of two sopranos, tenor, counter tenor, baritone and bass.

The music, sung and played, was by such eminent composers of 15th and 16th centuries as Heinrich Isaac, Gogauer Liederbuch, Ludwig Senel, Orlandus Lassus and others.

The music these men wrote was difficult, melodic, imaginative and, when performed as it was Wednesday night, crystal clear and four square. Every line was projected with taste and profound understanding. A carefully prepared program had been printed but after the artists came on stage, lights were dimmed and the program became a souvenir.

Interesting Pieces

We found two of the most interesting pieces were Isaac's "Ode on the Death of Lorenzo de' Medici" and a Florentine carnival song. The male quartet was excellent, although we missed the incomparable Oberlin of a season or so ago. The instrumental ensemble was heard in several numbers and the sound produced was pleasant to the ear, particularly Isaac's "In Meinen Sinn" and "J'si Pris Amours."

While this music seems to us suited to a limited audience, there is no doubt that its popularity is growing. People seem to turn to it as a respite from the music evolutions which strike the ears these days. Its classicism, purity of line and its melody make one forget for a while the cacophony around us.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUL 26 1961

Pro Musica Group At Tanglewood For Concert Tonight

Noah Greenberg and his New York Pro Musica return to Tanglewood tonight to give a program of early Renaissance music for vocal and instrumental ensembles as the fourth concert of the 1961 Berkshire Festival's chamber music series.

For their Tanglewood concert the New York Pro Musica — consisting of six vocalists and four instrumentalists — will perform works by Heinrich Isaac, Ludwig Senfl and Orlando Lassus, and from the Glogauer Liederbuch.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 26 1961

N.Y. Pro Musica Concert Tonight At Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD — Noah Greenberg and his New York Pro Musica return here tonight to give a program of early Renaissance music for vocal and instrumental ensembles as the fourth concert of the 1961 Berkshire Festival's chamber music series.

On a spring evening in 1953, a New York audience of habitual concertgoers — for whom it was no new experience to hear musical masterpieces interpreted by the foremost artists and orchestras of the present day — found itself on its feet, receiving with an ovation a new group of artists who had brought to life the long-forgotten music of the most creative era in history. The group called itself the New York Pro Musica.

For their Tanglewood concert tonight at 8:30 the New York Pro Musica — consisting of six vocalists and four instrumentalists — will perform works by Heinrich Isaac, Ludwig Senfl and Orlando Lassus and from the Glogauer Lie[derbuch].

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 4,856

JUL 28 1961

129

From 15th Century to Bach

Variety in Vocal Music at Marlboro, Tanglewood

By LISA TATE

All men, barring physical deficiency, have the capacity to utter intelligible sounds in the form of words; all equally have the capacity to sing, to make the voice produce resonantly within a range of sound.

Is it not amazing that man should be endowed with this natural capacity which is in no way necessary to his survival? Yet life would be less rich without the expression of emotion in song, and society would be less rich without the singing that has for many centuries accompanied its symbolic rites.

Song is essential, however, to the survival of music. Without this biological (yet still mysterious) possibility, how could man instinctively respond to the music in nature, then refine upon what he is able to hear and sing by composing music of infinite intricacy, then retain music to the point of being able to repeat it, whether audibly in singing or inaudibly through the powers of an inner ear that must be able to hear an inner voice?

An Unlimited Variety

The history of music shows an unlimited variety of vocal expression, and several concerts I have heard recently, plus several soon to come, will go a long way to prove this point.

A group of 10 musicians known as the "Pro Musica Antiqua" sang and played a concert of early Renaissance music the night before last as part of the Wednesday evening chamber music series at Tanglewoood.

The fact that such a group could perform a program of music by essentially unknown composers and still have potential audience turned away (to sit on the lawn, rather than in the full chamber music hall) is evidence that listeners are realizing centuries afterwards that this is a vital and vibrant music within its limited context.

Enthusiasm Restored

The Pro Musica Antiqua group, under the direction of Noah Greenberg, rightfully claims a large part of the responsibility for reviving this music in performance and for restoring "popular" enthusiasm for it when audiences as well as performers for some time seemed to indicate by their tastes that there could have been no music before Bach.

I cannot help but insert here a musically important and locally interesting note. Paul Boepple of the Bennington College faculty was conducting the Dessoff Choirs of New York in performances of little-known Renaissance music as far back as the 1930's. Greenbergs group has been in existence for just nine years now. In any case, music-lovers owe much to both men for their musical pioneering into the past.

The music of Wednesday night's concert was composed by Heinrich Isaac and his pupil, Ludwig Senfl in the late 15th and early 16th century, mostly in Germany.

Subdued Level

The voices of the Pro Musica artists were restained to the subdued level of the unusual Renaissance instruments used, pure in pitch and projection (without vibrato), hewing to a polyphonic (non-melodic, non-chordal) line that had neither extremes of range nor of harmonic color. Nor did the text stand in the way of their essentially "instrumental" use of the voice, for whole lines of this music are sung on the single syllable of a word. This was especially true in the two masses on the program.

The religious music of Isaac and Senfl gives a first impression of simple serenity, probably due to the lack of chromatic color to which our ears have grown so accustomed. Yet as the listener is drawn into the music, and as the music grows in complexity from the plain lines of Gregorian chan with which each section of the mass starts, one begins to hea the embellishments built into i in the form of broken lines, synco pated rhythms, and delicate inter weaving of voices and instru ments. This was also true in th moving Salve Virgo for two so pranos which comes from an an onymous collection of Germa songs known as the Glocauer Liec erbuch.

The secular songs from thi book, plus several by Senfl and Is aac, are more robust and colorfu in expression, but still within th harmonic and dynamic limits o the time in which they were com posed. As the program notes point ed out, their linear quality is rem iniscent of the German woodcut and etchings of the same period

Limits Expanded

The limits of vocal expressio began to expand in the late Ren aissance, when the Italians parti cularly began to exploit the pos sibilities of vocal expression as an end unto itself, not merely as another instrument among instruments, resulting finally in the birth of opera early in the 17th century.

The cause of vocal music, and of all music for that matter, was further enhanced by the work of the now-famous cantor of St. Thomas Lutheran Church in Leipzig, namely one Johann Sebastian Bach.

The musicians at the Marlboro Music Festival are devoting three Friday evenings to a few of his several hundred church cantatas. I had the chance to hear the first of this series last Friday evening.

Opera-like Quality

Bach's cantatas, based on religious texts, seem almost florid by contrast to the ascetic pursuit of each individual line by each individual voice in the earlier religious music. There is dramatic richness in the harmonic blending of voices and an opera-like quality to the solo recitatives and arias. There is distinct contrast, too, in the animated alternations of sections written for instruments and for full chorus, as in the hymn-like chorales that mark the end of each cantata.

The chorus at Marlboro is obviously a put-together one that nevertheless sings with instinctive musicianship under the spirited direction of Blanche Moyse. James Wainer sang the tenor solos last Friday night in the Cantata No. 55 (Ich Armer Mensch, Ich Sundernknecht) with musical precision and clear enunciation but with a hint of harshness in the quality of his voice that was not appropriate to the dispairing fear of man aware of his sin as he faces his God. On the other hand, Benita Valente sang her solo aria in the Cantata No. 1 (Wie Schon Leuchet der Morgenstern— How Brightly Burns the Morning Star) with a madonna - likt gentleness, accompanied by a haunting line played by the English horn.

Boon to Bach Lovers

Tonight's program will feature Cantatas 32 and 132 (Prepare Ye The Way and Jesus, My Desire), and the third concert of the series a week from tonight will also be devoted primarily to the cantatas, with Florence Kopleff, Miss Valente and Ara Berberian as soloists. These concerts are a boon to Bach-lovers.but even those with uninitiated ears will surely find that it is music of eloquence.

Next week's presentation of Verdi's "Rigoletto" at the Southern Vermont Art Center in Manchester will be again another totally different kind of experience in listening to vocal music.

Highly melodic, highly dramatic, with the soloists as powerful musical protagonists inn full stage setting, opera might well be termed the climax to which the humble Gregorian chant was bound to lead as music itself evolved through experimentation with old forms and as formal singing was gradually emancipated from strict service to the Church.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,185
AUG 5 1961

Music

Byron Janis Scores As Tanglewood Soloist

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL—Byron Janis, pianist, was the week-end soloist with the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood. His program included the Concerto 1 and 2.

Byron Janis

Dr. Charles Munch conducted and for the orchestral portions of the concert included the Beethoven Symphony No. 4 and "Three New England Sketches" by Walter Piston.

Needless to say, the appearance of Byron Janis was the highlight of the afternoon, but he was introduced to his audience by a worthy performance of Beethoven, a real big piece of work for an opening selection. And again, what can one add to either a performance by this unchallenged ensemble and the wave of approval that followed the playing of the Symphony?

Gyron Janis who needs little, if any introduction to audiences anywhere in the musical world, was in form for the important engagement. His group was one of monumental structure and one that not only demands a god day from a pianist, but a little something more. This little more is best summed up as technical excellence and a far flung imagination and flair.

Mr. Janis has these latter qualities—especially for Liszt. Apparently he was in a good mood for his performance and he straightaway went to work and in such a manner that his entire audience followed every passage and note with complete attention.

THIS EVENING DR. Munch will bring as his soloist another excellent pianist, Henriot-Schweitzer, who will be heard in the Prokofiev Concerto No. 2. The rest of the program will include the Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn and the Symphony by Franck.

Tomorrow afternoon, Dr. Munch will provide a program that will comprise the following: Symphony No. 7 (Beethoven); Viola Concerto—with De Pasquale as soloist (Bartok); and The Pines o Rome (Respighi). Next week's concerts will be presented as a tribute to the late Serge Koussevitzky.

Monday evening will be highlighted by a program by the BMC Opera department; Tuesday, another opera production; Wednesday, a program by the Kroll Quartet in selections by Beethoven, Diamond and Schumann; Wednesday, the BMC orchestra; Friday, Richard Burgin will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra at 8:30 in the evening, in a regular program.

To the average concert-goer the Berkshire Festival offers all the glamour, excitement and the opportunity of hearing the finest of music, and at its performed best. However, to the countless students who have attended the classes at Tanglewood, as well as those presently on the student roster, the summer months offer an opportunity that is possibly unequalled anywhere.

IT SEEMS that the average student looks forward to the experience of attending classes at the festival as something providing a means of learning music while also enjoying the finest of vacations. True, this all comes to pass, but what is even more important is the factor of living in a world of music.

For many years people have wondered as to why most European-trained musicians are sounder and more rounded in their musical knowledge. The Festival at Lenox provides the answer. From experience, we can say that following a stay with this giant medium of art the student leaves with an inner-felt and inner-possessed knowledge that mere study could not provide in a lifetime of searching.

To sum it up: Symphony and basic studies for breakfast, a break whereby you may enjoy the fabulous countryside that makes up Lenox; concerts every evening; the opportunity of meeting and studying with the finest minds in the world, and finally, people all-round you that literally eat and sleep music.

130

ORMANDY GIVEN WARM WELCOME AT TANGLEWOOD

Philadelphian Conducts Boston Orchestra as 8213 Listen

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — Once again there was an air of electrical anticipation among the audience of 8213 people who attended the concert in the music shed here at Tanglewood Saturday night.

First Appearance

The reason for this anticipation was the first appearance of Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra at Tanglewood. He had been invited to conduct by Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Aside from Arthur Fiedler and his Boston Pops Orchestra, it is doubtful if any conductor is better known to the American public than Ormandy and the Philadelphians. This has come about, we believe, through the thousands of recordings by both conductors.

Ormandy engendered the excitement which has been lacking at concerts since the death of Serge Koussevitzky. The short, muscular figure with its aura of auburn hair strode on stage to what amounted to an ovation. Then he went to work, starting with the Richard Strauss tone poem, "Don Juan." Many composers have used the tale of Don Jaun, putting the strange, gallant solder into many perspectivs. Ormandy made of him a grandiose figure painted in dazzling colors, heaped one atop the other; colors which were enhanced by the magnificence of the Boston players. The audience reaction was a stunning revelation of the magic of Strauss and Ormandy.

Singularly Significant

In our opinion, Roy Harris has been a singularly significant figure in the field of American music. The first performance of his third symphony was played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Feb. 24, 1939. The symphony is in one movement divided into five sections. What the symphony lacks in length, it is of 16 minutes duration, it makes up for in variety. For example, the first section is tragic, making use of low string sonorities. Section 2 is lyric, using the services of strings, horns and woodwinds; Section 3, a pastoral, emphasizes woodwind color; Section 4 is a fugue of some proportions with brass and percussion predominating; Section 5, again tragic, reverts to the restatement of the violin theme of Section 1.

The result is a tight, compact work which uses the resources of all sections of the orchestra in skillful manner. The work was tailormade for the Boston players and they and Ormandy made the most of it. In fact, the Harris and Strauss works found the Boston players working harder than we have ever seen them. Ormandy's tempi were fast and his demands for fortissimi ferocious.

Roussel's Second Suite

Following hard upon the Harris symphony came Roussel's second suite from the ballet "Bacchus et Ariane." Like the music before it, Roussel uses the orchestra roughly. Ormandy offered a spacious, highly detailed reading, one which was perhaps a bit more powerful than the composer intended, but which was tremendously efective. As we write, the audience is still applauding.

Intermission was wonderful, following the tensions of the first portion of the program. Then came a tour de force, Ormandy's reading of the "Symphony No. 2 in D Minor" by Brahms. It is perhaps his happiest, carefree symphony, rich in melody, color and poetry.

Ormandy conducted deftly, making clear every line, embuing every phrase with its exact color and moulding the symphony into an eloquent expression of beauty and making fallacious the idea that Brahms' music was "obscure," "intellectual," to be comprehended by only the chosen few. Today Brahm's music speaks for itself, its message crystal clear if one will but listen and even clearer when brought to one by so perceptive a mind as Eugene Ormandy.

SPRINGFIELD (REPUBLICAN) JULY 30, 1961

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,498
AUG 3 1961

Grace Notes: Summertime Reviews Of This Week

July 28
By G. G. V.

Friday night was ballet night at Tanglewood, ballet, that is, without benefit of dancers, The conrectgoer might justly question the programming of two major works in this form in one evening, even if they are as dissimilar as Aaron Copland's "Appalachian Spring" and Maurice Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe." That things came off as well as they did is a tribute to the conducting of Dr. Charles Munch as well to the talents of the aforementioned composers.

Aaron Copland conducted his own works (his Preamble for a Solemn Occasion was the curtain raiser) and the Boston Symphony obliged him with a sympathetic performance. Musically, "Applachian Spring" is a lovely collation of American Folk materials, sometime sprightly, sometime languid.

"Daphnis et Chloe" is a virtuoso piece scored for everything but the kitchen sink. The horns bleat like livestock, the wind machine whirs and whines, and the chorus incants and pants its way to a distinctly orgiastic climax. Interspersed are some beautifully shimmering string passages and a flute cadenza that could prove the undoing of a lesser artist than Doriot Anthony Dwyer. Both Dr. Munch and the audience seemed to enjoy this tour de force immensely.

SATURDAY. JULY 29
By R. E. and A. H.

Saturday night at Tanglewood marked the debut there as conductor of Eugene Ormandy, the famous Maestro of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra responded with obvious relish to the Philadelphian's spirited readings and rendered a remarkably brilliant performance. There was a seamless perfection to the music; a new precision and flawless control which added special distinction to this concert.

Opening with Richard Strauss' vivid tone poem, Don Juan, the program continued with Roy Harris' 3rd Symphony. Introduced twenty years ago by this same orchestra, the Harris work performed as a single movement has achieved a deserved place in orchestral repertoire.

The evening reached its high point in sheer brilliance and musical excitement with Roussel's second suite from the ballet music for Bacchus and Ariane. This contemporary French composition provided Mr. Ormandy and the orchestra with opportunity for some very impressive fireworks.

Brahms beloved 2nd Symphony, was given a superb reading. A fitting conclusion to a fine concert.

Sunday, July 30
By S. R.

Byron Janis' performance of Liszt's first and second piano concertos, at Tanglewood, on Sunday afternoon, July 30 thrilled an audience of over 10,000 people. It was one of those unforgettable occasions when phenomenal technical skill and profound musicality fuse into a perfect whole. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra provided Mr. Janis with a sensitive accompaniment.

The program opened with Beethoven's 4th Symphony, which was followed by the Liszt Concerto No. 2 in A major Walter Piston's Three New England Sketches, played after the intermission gave the audience a chance to catch its breath between Janis' two hair-raising performances. Mr. Piston was on hand to acknowledge the gracious reception accorded him by the audience.

The concert commemorated the one-hundred fiftieth anniversary of the birth of Franz Liszt. Much has been written about the fabled technique of the master but it is difficult to believe that even he could have turned in a more [illegible]ive performance.

MUSIC MOUNT
By J. V.

The Berkshire Qua[illegible] fifth Sunday concert wa[illegible] ther feast for the ears. Th[illegible] section of the program c[illegible]ed of music by Purcell, [illegible] and Rameau; the final sele[illegible], the Schubert Quartet in [illegible]major, Opus 161, provided co[illegible]rable contrast to the rest of [illegible] program.

The Chacony in G [illegible]or for Strings, by Purcell ma[illegible] good use of the resonance o[illegible]e instruments to vary to[illegible] color. It was admirably performed by the Berkshire Quartet, and is reviewed here briefly only in an attempt to do some justice to the guest artist, Irma Rogell, harpsichordist.

Mrs. Rogell played the Bach Concerto in G Minor with the Berkshire Quartet, as well as three Rameau pieces for harpsichord. I say "played" because, in addition to her scrupulous and scholarly respect for the music, Mrs. Rogell finds— and communicates — real joy in her instrument and in the music.

The intimate character of the harpsichord still permits wide variation in the quality of the sound, and Mrs. Rogell's sensitive and intelligent use of the resources of the instrument is a credit both to her and to her excellent training. The Quartet played precisely and well, and only rarely overshadowed the harpsichord; this was another difficult task very well done.

The Rameau pieces, Les Tourbillons, L'Entretien des Muses, and Les Sauvages, were performed with delicacy and strength, and for an encore Mrs. Rogell played a delightful Sicilian Tarantella in her own arrangement.

Air Conditioned

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,088
JUL 31

Byron Janis Soloist at Lenox

By GEORGE W. STOWE
Special to the Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass.—Byron Janis, provided the instrumental bravura while Charles Munch offered symphonic solidity to the concert by the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon.

Mr. Janis repeated his pianistic tour de force of playing both of the Liszt concerti on one program, a feat which he performed in Hartford last Winter. In superb technical form, he drew a deserved ovation from an audience of some 9,000 persons.

In the A major Concerto, which is the most diffuse of the two, he managed to ameliorate its episodic character by some ravishing cantabile playing and brilliant handling of its rhythmical transformations, Byron Janis is a performer of enkindling temperament; a quality all too rarely encountered.

* * *

THE PIANIST was in even more impressive form in the E flat Concerto, which shows off the virtuoso pianist to better effect. The antiphonal octaves in answer to the orchestra's opening theme were beautifully handled and the accelerando tempo of the finale was taken at a whirlwind pace. In fact, there were times when Mr. Janis, rather than the conductor, set the pace for this exciting performance.

To my mind, there is only one weakness in the pianist's equipment and that is his seeming inability, at times, to produce a genuinely sonorous tone, one that will stand up to the massed sound of the Boston Orchestra.

* * *

BEETHOVEN'S least familiar symphony, his Fourth in B-flat, was given an extremely genial and ingratiating performance by Mr. Munch and the orchestra. This conductor is perfectly willing to accept Schumann's thesis that the Fourth is a "Greek maiden between two Norse giants." The dynamism inherent to the Third and Fifth Symphonies was happily missing in Munch's concept and the orchestra's performance.

For the afternoon's novelty, the conductor chose Walter Piston's "Three New England Sketches," which, surprisingly enough, have programmatic titles.

* * *

MR. PISTON has long disavowed any programmatic intent in his music, usually being content to be called a kind of stern and rock-bound neo-classicist. This recent work (1959) seemed to partake more of impressionism, particularly in the first two movements, than of neo-classicism, although the finale had a ringing, brassy climax.

The composer, now in his 66th year, was on hand to receive the plaudits of the crowd.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 81,815
JUL 31 1961

BYRON JANIS BRILLIANT AT TANGLEWOOD

8747 Hear Performances Of Liszt Concertos With Symphony

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—Sparks flew in all directions in the Tanglewood Music Shed Sunday afternoon as pianist Byron Janis, Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra collaborated in two concerts for piano and orchestra by Franz Liszt. That was the excitement which drew 8747 to the shed and lawns to bring the total for the week end to 26,914.

Opens With Beethoven

The concert opened with a drawn-out, rather lugubrious performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 4 in B Flat Major. This was one of the more quiet of Beethoven's symphonies—a warm, highly polished creation whose parts fit together perfectly. One heard a smooth performance, finely integrated and luscious in sound.

In our opinion, Byron Janis stands at the head of the list of colleagues in his age class. He is a formidable technician, capable of enunciating sublime poetry and intelligent enough to understand a great variety of musical styles and idioms.

The Concerto in A Major, No. 2, played first, has a deal more poetry or schmaltz, as some anti-Lisztians choose to call it, than the Concerto in E Flat Major, No. 1. Janis brought to the A major concerto his technical brilliance, flair for the grandiose and his own particular charm. Ornamentations were taken at a dazzling pace and tossed off with real brilliance and in the lyrical sections the tone was projected so that the slightest whisper was easily heard. Nor could the full orchestra drown him out.

Byron Janis

Continued From Page 1

Piston Work Played

The characteristics of his playing were carried over into the Concerto in E Flat Major, No. 1 with results that drew from the audience a tremendous ovation with recall after recall. If there were more concerts with artists of the Janis caliber during the season, audiences might be larger, whatever the weather.

The other work on the program was composed of three "New England Sketches" by Walter Piston, who knows his New England and writes impressively of its seaside, summer evening and mountains. The work was composed for the 100th Worcester festival. Piston has written, "The sketches are not intended as descriptive or representational tone painting, and any chance impressions of realism or specific reference come as incidents in the act of composition This act may be described prosaically as controlled expansion and development of two or three short motives."

Perhaps the composer sounds too modest. Whether or not so intended there is the vitality of realism in these sketches through which the listener can form his own impressions, pictorially or through physical memories. Mr. Munch, long an admirer of Walter Piston, provided a finely wraught performance, rich in detail and beautifully textured.

NEW YOR
JOURNAL-
D. 818,802
JUL 3 1

130

SPRINGFIELD REPUBLICAN
JULY 30, 1961

...DY GIVEN WARM WELCOME AT TANGLEWOOD

Philadelphian Conducts Boston Orchestra as 8213 Listen

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — Once again, there was an air of electrical anticipation among the audience of 8213 people who attended the concert in the Music Shed here at Tanglewood Saturday night.

First Appearance

The reason for this anticipation was the first appearance of Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, at Tanglewood. He had been invited to conduct by Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Aside from Arthur Fiedler and his Boston Pops Orchestra, it is doubtful if any conductor is better known to the American public than Ormandy and the Philadelphians. This has come about, we believe, through the thousands of recordings by both conductors.

Ormandy engendered the excitement which has been lacking at concerts since the death of Serge Koussevitzky. The short, muscular figure with its aura of auburn hair strode on stage to what amounted to an ovation. Then he went to work, starting with the Richard Strauss tone poem, "Don Juan." Many composers have used the tale of Don Jaun, putting the strange, gallant soldier into many perspectives. Ormandy made of him a grandiose figure painted in dazzling colors, heaped one atop the other; colors which were enhanced by the magnificence of the Boston players. The audience reaction was a stunning revelation of the magic of Strauss and Ormandy.

Singularly Significant

In our opinion, Roy Harris has been a singularly significant figure in the field of American music. The first performance of his third symphony was played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Feb. 24, 1939. The symphony is in one movement divided into five sections. What the symphony lacks in length, it is of 15 minutes duration, it makes up for in variety. For example, the first section is tragic, making use of low string sonorities. Section 2 is lyric, using the services of strings, horns and woodwinds; Section 3, a pastoral, emphasizes woodwind color; Section 4 is a fugue of some proportions with brass and percussion predominating; Section 5, again tragic, reverts to the restatement of the violin theme of Section 1.

The result is a tight, compact work which uses the resources of all sections of the orchestra in skillful manner. The work was tailormade for the Boston players and they and Ormandy made the most of it. In fact, the Harris and Strauss works found the Boston players working harder than we have ever seen them. Ormandy's tempi were fast and his demands for fortissimi ferocious.

Roussel's Second Suite

Following hard upon the Harris symphony came Roussel's second suite from the ballet "Bacchus et Ariane." Like the music before it, Roussel uses the orchestra roughly. Ormandy offered a spacious, highly detailed reading, one which was perhaps a bit more powerful than the composer intended, but which was tremendously effective. As we write, the audience is still applauding.

Intermission was wonderful following the tensions of the first portion of the program. Then came a tour de force, Ormandy's reading of the "Symphony No. 2 in D Minor" by Brahms. It is perhaps his happiest, carefree symphony, rich in melody, color and poetry.

Ormandy conducted deftly making clear every line, embuing every phrase with its exact color and moulding the symphony into an eloquent expression of beauty and making fallacious the idea that Brahms' music was "obscure," "intellectual," to be comprehended by only the chosen few. Today Brahm's music speaks for itself, its message crystal clear if one will but listen and even clearer when brought to one by so perceptive a mind as Eugene Ormandy.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,498
AUG 3 1961

Grace Notes: Summertime

July 28
By G. G. V.

Friday night was ballet night at Tanglewood, ballet, that is, without benefit of dancers, The conrectgoer might justly question the programming of two major works in this form in one evening, even if they are as dissimilar as Aaron Copland's "Appalachian Spring" and Maurice Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe." That things came off as well as they did is a tribute to the conducting of Dr. Charles Munch as well to the talents of the aforementioned composers.

Aaron Copland conducted his own works (his Preamble for a Solemn Occasion was the curtain raiser) and the Boston Symphony obliged him with a sympathetic performance. Musically, "Applachian Spring" is a lovely collation of American Folk materials, sometime sprightly, sometime languid.

"Daphnis et Chloe" is a virtuoso piece scored for everything but the kitchen sink. The horns bleat like livestock, the wind machine whirs and whines, and the chorus incants and pants its way to a distinctly orgiastic climax. Interspersed are some beautifully shimmering string passages and a flute cadenza that could prove the undoing of a lesser artist than Doriot Anthony Dwyer. Both Dr. Munch and the audience seemed to enjoy this tour de force immensely.

SATURDAY, JULY 29
By R. E. and A. H.

Saturday night at Tanglewood marked the debut there as conductor of Eugene Ormandy, the famous Maestro of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra responded with obvious relish to the Philadelphian's spirited readings and rendered a remarkably brilliant performance. There was a seamless perfection to the music; a new precision and flawless control which added special distinction to this concert.

Opening with Richard Strauss' vivid tone poem, Don Juan, the program continued with Roy Harris' 3rd Symphony. Introduced twenty years ago by this same orchestra, the Harris work performed as a single movement has achieved a deserved place in orchestral repertoire.

The evening reached its high point in sheer brilliance and musical excitement with Roussel's second suite from the ballet music for Bacchus and Ariane. This contemporary French composition provided Mr. Ormandy and the orchestra with opportunity for some very impressive fireworks.

Brahms beloved 2nd Symphony, was given a superb reading. A fitting conclusion to a fine concert.

Sunday, July 30
By S. R.

Byron Janis' performance of Liszt's first and second piano concertos, at Tanglewood, on Sunday afternoon, July 30 thrilled an audience of over 10,000 people. It was one of those unforgettable occasions when phenomenal technical skill and profound musicality fuse into a perfect whole. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra provided Mr. Janis with a sensitive accompaniment.

The program opened with Beethoven's 4th Symphony, which was followed by the Liszt Concerto No. 2 in A major Walter Piston's Three New England Sketches, played after the intermission gave the audience a chance to catch its breath between Janis' two hair-raising performances. Mr. Piston was on hand to acknowledge the gracious reception accorded him by the audience.

The concert commemorated the one-hundred fiftieth anniversary of the birth of Franz Liszt. Much has been written about the fabled technique of the master but it is difficult to believe that even he could have turned in a more su...ative performance.

MUSIC MOUNTAIN
By J. V.

The Berkshire Quartet's fifth Sunday concert was another feast for the ears. The first section of the program consisted of music by Purcell, Bach, and Rameau; the final selection, the Schubert Quartet in G Major, Opus 161, provided considerable contrast to the rest of the program.

The Chacony in G Minor for Strings by Purcell makes good use of the resonance of the instruments to vary tone color. It was admirably performed by the Berkshire Quartet, and is reviewed here briefly only in an attempt to do some justice to the guest artist, Irma Rogell, harpsichordist.

Mrs. Rogell played the Bach Concerto in G Minor with the Berkshire Quartet, as well as three Rameau pieces for harpsichord. I say "played" because, in addition to her scrupulous and scholarly respect for the music, Mrs. Rogell finds— and communicates — real joy in her instrument and in the music.

The intimate character of the harpsichord still permits wide variation in the quality of the sound, and Mrs. Rogell's sensitive and intelligent use of the resources of the instrument is a credit both to her and to her excellent training. The Quartet played precisely and well, and only rarely overshadowed the harpsichord; this was another difficult task very well done.

The Rameau pieces, Les Tourbillons, L'Entretien des Muses, and Les Sauvages, were performed with delicacy and strength, and for an encore Mrs. Rogell played a delightful Sicilian Tarantella in her own arrangement.

Air Conditioned

Reviews Of This Week's

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,088
AUG 3 1961

Byron Janis Soloist at Lenox

By GEORGE W. STOWE
Special to the Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass.—Byron Janis, provided the instrumental bravura while Charles Munch offered symphonic solidity to the concert by the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon.

Mr. Janis repeated his pianistic tour de force of playing both of the Liszt concerti on one program, a feat which he performed in Hartford last Winter. In superb technical form, he drew a deserved ovation from an audience of some 9,000 persons.

In the A major Concerto, which is the most diffuse of the two, he managed to ameliorate its episodic character by some ravishing cantabile playing and brilliant handling of its rhythmical transformations. Byron Janis is a performer of enkindling temperament, a quality all too rarely encountered.

• • •

THE PIANIST was in even more impressive form in the E flat Concerto, which shows off the virtuoso pianist to better effect. The antiphonal octaves in answer to the orchestra's opening theme were beautifully handled and the accelerando tempo of the finale was taken at a whirlwind pace. In fact, there were times when Mr. Janis, rather than the conductor, set the pace for this exciting performance.

To my mind, there is only one weakness in the pianist's equipment and that is his seeming inability, at times, to produce a genuinely sonorous tone, one that will stand up to the massed sound of the Boston Orchestra.

• • •

BEETHOVEN'S least familiar symphony, his Fourth in B-flat, was given an extremely genial and ingratiating performance by Mr. Munch and the orchestra. This conductor is perfectly willing to accept Schumann's thesis that the Fourth is a "Greek maiden between two Norse giants." The dynamism inherent to the Third and Fifth Symphonies was happily missing in Munch's concept and the orchestra's performance.

For the afternoon's novelty, the conductor chose Walter Piston's "Three New England Sketches," which, surprisingly enough, have programmatic titles.

• • •

MR. PISTON has long disavowed any programmatic intent in his music, usually being content to be called a kind of stern and rock-bound neo-classicist. This recent work (1959) seemed to partake more of impressionism, particularly in the first two movements, than of neo-classicism, although the finale had a ringing, brassy climax.

The composer, now in his 66th year, was on hand to receive the plaudits of the crowd.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 81,815
JUL 31 1961

BYRON JANIS BRILLIANT AT TANGLEWOOD

8747 Hear Performances Of Liszt Concertos With Symphony

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—Sparks flew in all directions in the Tanglewood Music Shed Sunday afternoon as pianist Byron Janis, Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra collaborated in two concerts for piano and orchestra by Franz Liszt. That was the excitement which drew 8747 to the shed and lawns to bring the total for the week end to 26,914.

Opens With Beethoven

The concert opened with a drawn-out, rather lugubrious performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 4 in B Flat Major. This was one of the more quiet of Beethoven's symphonies—a warm, highly polished creation whose parts fit together perfectly. One heard a smooth performance, finely integrated and luscious in sound.

In our opinion, Byron Janis stands at the head of the list of colleagues in his age class. He is a formidable technician, capable of enunciating sublime poetry and intelligent enough to understand a great variety of musical styles and idioms.

The Concerto in A Major, No. 2, played first, has a deal more poetry or schmaltz, as some anti-Lisztians choose to call it, than the Concerto in E Flat Major, No. 1. Janis brought to the A major concerto his technical brilliance, flair for the grandiose and his own particular charm. Ornamentations were taken at a dazzling pace and tossed off with real brilliance and in the lyrical sections the tone was projected so that the slightest whisper was easily heard. Nor could the full orchestra drown him out.

Piston Work Played

The characteristics of his playing were carried over into the Concerto in E Flat Major, No. 1 with results that drew from the audience a tremendous ovation with recall after recall. If there were more concerts with artists of the Janis caliber during the season, audiences might be larger, whatever the weather.

The other work on the program was composed of three "New England Sketches" by Walter Piston, who knows his New England and writes impressively of its seaside, summer evening and mountains. The work was composed for the 100th Worcester festival. Piston has written, "The sketches are not intended as descriptive or representational tone painting, and any chance impressions of realism or specific reference come as incidents in the act of composition. This act may be described prosaically as controlled expansion and development of two or three short motives."

Perhaps the composer sounds too modest. Whether or not so intended there is the vitality of realism in these sketches through which the listener can form his own impressions, pictorially or through physical memories. Mr. Munch, long an admirer of Walter Piston, provided a finely wraught performance, rich in detail and beautifully textured.

Byron Janis

Continued From Page 1

131

Sunday Tele[gram]
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,456
JUL 30 1961

Music: Ormandy on Podium At Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Eugene Ormandy made an auspicious debut last night, conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time in Tanglewood.

This was the second concert of the Berkshire Music Festival's fourth weekend. Last night's concert was attended by 8,213.

The program: Richard Strauss' symphonic poem, "Don Juan," Roy Harris; Symphony No. 3 in one movement, Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane," Balley Opus 43, Suite No. 2, and Brahms' Second Symphony in D Major, Opus 73.

Important Assignment

Several things influenced the selection of this program. All are works in which Ormandy conducted the Boston Symphony within the past three years. By compressing the orchestra's tight summer schedule, Ormandy was given the favor of "one rehearsal and a half."

It goes without saying that this assignment was important to the conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra. It was arranged through a personal invitation of Ormandy's close friend, Charles Munch, regular conductor for the Boston Symphony.

Several players in the Boston Symphony are former Philadelphia Orchestra members. Ormandy, a new summer resident of the Berkshires, still is convalescing from an automobile accident last December.

High Voltage in Shed

All things considered, there was a high voltage in the Music Shed and surrounding grounds at Tanglewood last night. Ormandy received a cordial welcome when he came on stage.

The orchestra didn't rise as they do for Pierre Monteux, but several string players contributed to the applause by rapping the backs of their instruments with bows.

Tanglewood has known many conductors with an equal number of styles — Koussevitzky, Munch, Monteux, Bernstein, Victor de Sabata, Richter, Carvalol, Burgin—to name but a few.

Ormandy brought something new to the Tanglewood podium last night—an almost militant efficiency, poise with considerable visual effort, detail without superfluity of movement, and clear communication to the orchestra.

It must be admitted that all these made for an orchestra that sounded suspiciously like the Philadelphians.

Things of real importance happened with the opening bars of "Don Juan." This score jumps into the thick of it at once. Tone was big and speed vivacious. The Don theme had marvelous expansiveness. Strings and harp brought in the first theme of intrigue with finesse and luxurious sound.

Ormandy gave full liberty to the work's chief characters—sentimental oboe solo by Ralph Gomberg (Ormandy later called him to stage front for a bow), the muted strings for the "Woman of Refinement," and cellos and horns for the Don's dialogues with his women.

Ormandy didn't stomp on the work's two big climaxes—the "carnival scene" and the Don's murder. The playing was extremely energetic, but under complete command of the podium—one might almost say domination. And fortunately, Ormandy prevented applause (he raised his arms with a gesture that would have stopped all traffic at Times Square) for the long silence before the epilogue.

Contrasted Moods

Harris' Third Symphony was a different matter. The Strauss is easy enough to make compact because of the story with which it's associated. Harris' symphony is not descriptive music, but he did assemble a succession of clear, contrasted moods into what he hoped would be a united, abstract drama.

Ormandy brought forward every minescule of its folkish excitement—wild rhythms, Indian-like drummings, and western-style melodies that cavort through the rich mixture.

The Roussel ballet music is one of the most coherent, exciting scores in contemporary literature. Conductor and orchestra shared alike in what amounted to a virtuosic performance, filled with bursting vitality and resplendent compositions of sound.

At this afternoon's concert, Byron Janis will be soloist in Liszt's two piano concertos. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's Fourth Symphony, and Walter Piston's "Three New England Sketches," commissioned by the Worcester Festival for its 100th anniversary.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 618,802 S. 812,836
JUL 31 1961

THE BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Ormandy a Smash

By MILES KASTENDIECK

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 31. — Eugene Ormandy enjoyed conspicuous success on his first Berkshire Festival appearance Saturday night.

The conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra was making his "debut" one year after he had become a summer resident of the Berkshires. Needless to say, the occasion became the big news of this year's festival.

He beamed at the responsiveness of the Bostonians to his direction, and the audience gave him a big reception. It was a brilliant evening. The virtuosity of both conductor and orchestra shone, while the impact of the performances exhilarated the 8,213 in the audience.

What emerged from such a sure-fire program as Strauss' "Don Juan," Harris' Third Symphony, Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane," and Brahms' Second Symphony was a constant floor of orchestral brightness. Whether or not Ormandy had judged the acoustical shell correctly, he allowed a maximum of loud playing to surge through the music shed. It had its overwhelming effect.

Serves Style

Even before the concert started, he had put his impress on the orchestra by re-arranging the strings so that the cellos instead of the violas were on his right. Before "Don Juan" had run his course, it was evident that Ormandy had also imparted that heaviness of sound noted consistently in performances of the Philadelphians. Evidently this is how he wants an orchestra to sound. The Bostonians obliged and fell in with the bravura technique also sought.

Hearing Ormandy with a different orchestra proved enlightening. It showed his forcefulness as a conductor, highlighted his virtuoso approach, and revealed him more of a showman musically. He achieved his effects unquestionably. That he paced much of the program faster than usual could be attributed to strangeness and novelty of the occasion.

That the Harris, for instance, conveyed little American flavor or had little "atmosphere" raised the question of his getting to the heart of the music. Even the "cowboy" element sounded un-American. Then, suddenly, when the drum organ point began in the final measures, the performance began to come into focus. What caused the change?

No Comparison

With the Roussel Ormandy dared to play a Munch warhorse. To discuss the performance might make comparisons odious as the saying goes. Once again the question of atmosphere arose, for there are sections of this work which call for it strategically and which this listener did not hear. The Brahms sounded good in the massiveness of its sound, but it left reservations for just that reason.

Yesterday's program duplicated a concert in New York during the season: Beethoven's Fourth Symphony, the[re] Liszt piano con[certos], Piston's "Three N[ew England] Sketches." Charles Munch conducted and Byron Janis played. Since both of them were brimful of virtuosity, they literally went to town on Liszt. The orchestra galloped along smoothly.

Janis can toss off the Liszt brilliantly. The fact that the A Major is a much more poetic work did not register in this performance. He knows what a pianistic feat is and produces accordingly. The audience was properly wowed.

Good Finale

Munch conducted a most sympathetic performance of the Beethoven. The finale was particularly communicative, while the phrased lyricism of the adagio brought forth some beautiful playing. Piston was on hand to hear his pieces to which he gives names but says the names are not necessarily to be construed as programmatic. Of the three, "Mountains" conveys some idea of its name just the same and turns out to be the most interesting after all.

The concert attracted 8,747 persons on a beautiful Berkshire afternoon. The attendance for the weekend totaled 26,914, just a bit more than the total of a year ago.

Hartford Gazette July 31, 1961

Ormandy Keeps Orchestra On Its Toes at Tanglewood

By D. E. RITZ
Gazette Reporter

Eugene Ormandy, musical director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, made his Tanglewood debut Saturday evening with a program of Strauss, Harris, Roussel and Brahms.

* * *

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY Orchestra, a magnificent organization, sounds as different as different can be under the various guest conductors whom Dr. Munch invites during the season. Each guest brings a strikingly different temperament, background and approach to music.

Even seating is different under the various conductors and with Ormandy on the podium the cellos rate front of the orchestra seating—under Dr. Munch the violas have the spot and under Pierre Monteux it is the second violins. It all makes for variety and for difference in orchestral tone quality.

Ormandy with his dynamic personality keeps the orchestra on its toes every minute and the result is a scintillating performance.

* * *

THE "DON JUAN" music sparkled and throbbed and the orchestra attained a fine lyricism.

The Roy Harris "Symphony No. 3" (in one movement) has various episodes—an extended cello section with viola and violin interjections is a feature of the opening section; the second part (which Harris terms "lyric") is a nice arrangement of sounds of strings, horns and woodwinds of no particular meaning—at least for us; then came a pastoral emphasizing woodwind. But for us the most interesting portion was the percussion combined with brass and the explosive finale.

* * *

THE ROUSSEL "Bacchus et Ariane" ballet, second suite, opus 43, is vivid music by a master of orchestration and received a vivid presentation. The "Bacchanale," which concludes it, is a masterpiece and one wondered at the brilliance of the performance. We don't believe that we've ever heard music that was more exciting.

The second half of the program featured the Brahms "Symphony No. 2 in D major, opus 73" — a solid, enduring music which stands on its own merits.

* * *

THE AUDIENCE of 8,213, not large by Tangewood standards, was wildly enthusiastic and recalled Ormandy again and again to share the applause with the men of the orchestra. It was a wonderful evening, cool without being chilly and with that wonderful aid that only the mountains can give.

The Friday evening concert drew 6,072 persons and the Saturday morning open rehearsal brought 3,882 to enjoy the music of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

132

ELLIOT NORTON WRITES:

B.S.O.'s Great Weekend At Berkshire Festival

BOSTON DAILY RECORD TUES., AUG. 1, 1961

At the Berkshire Festival, in Lenox, the 24th season is obviously one of the best. Over the weekend, in the imposing Music Shed at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra played beautifully, even triumphantly, for audiences that numbered about 25,000 people for three concerts.

The oldest and most prestigious of all American festivals is smoothly run, combining good business with great artistry. The thousands of cars and the trundling buses, which bring as many as 10,000 to a single concert are moved onto the grounds and off without delays.

Elliot Norton

Everyone gets in quickly, if he has a ticket. Or he can get one without a long wait. Inside, he can buy a box lunch, if he likes; or he may bring his own. There are acres of beautiful grounds at Tanglewood, surrounding the huge shed. You can sit comfortably almost anywhere to eat, or rest or listen.

SOMETHING DOING

There is always something doing at Tanglewood, which supports almost continuous musical activity. But the concerts of the complete orchestra are most momentous and it is these that brings enthusiasts of music to Tanglewood from all over the world.

There used to be only four weekends of the big orchestra, though there were—and still are—lots of smaller concerts by chamber groups. This year the number of weekends has been increased to seven, of which the last was second on the list.

The last weekend, at concerts of Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoon, presented works of eminent composers, living and dead. One of the live ones, Aaron Copland, conducted two of his own compositions. Another, Walter Piston, was invited from the wings, Sunday, after the orchestra had played his "Three New England Sketches" to share the applause.

Mr. Copland conducted Friday dayevening. Tall and imposing, slightly bent, he led the orchestra vigiorously through "Preamble for a Solemn Occasion" and "Appalachian Spring," both of which pleased the people. Eight thousand listeners, for an estimate, watched and listened closely and, in the end, made it obvious that they admire him and his music. At Tanglewood, they endorse the artists they like with noisy enthusiasm.

Charles Munch conducted the other Friday evening concert and took over the podium in his reserved way for the entire concert of Sunday.

Saturday evening's program had Eugene Ormandy as guest conductor. The leader of the Philadelphia Orchestra, whose supporters have the ridiculous notion that their musicians are fractionally superior to ours, was electrifiying. So was the Boston Symphony Orchestra under his leadership.

IN COMMAND

Mr. Ormandy is amiable rather than impressive when he first walks on stage. But, he commands the musicians from the first beat. In any case, he did so on Saturday evening.

Although they played beautifully for Dr. Munch, particularly in Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe," with the huge Festival Chorus assisting they were inspired with Ormandy.

Somebody suggested that leader and the orchestra were both at peak form as a matter of pride. As conductor of their greatest rival, he had to demonstrate his excellence to them and their supporters. As the Boston Symphony Orchestra, they must make him realize why they are admired all over the world.

It could have been that, or it may have been the program, or a combination of many factors. In any case, Mr. Ormandy and the B.S.O. went through Strauss' "Don Juan," the No. 3 Symphony of Roy Harris, Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane" and the Second Brahms Symphony magnificently; there is no other word.

The balding, athletic conductor led them from memory, without a score, with care and perception and with passionale feeling for the music.

The musicians matched his technical brilliance, which was apparent even to the layman, especially in the difficult "Don Juan." They were moved to demonstrate something close to their utmost skill and their deepest feeling.

The enormous audience in the Shed and outside on the lawn paid them the compliment of absolute attention and, afterward, made it obvious that they knew they had seen and heard something extraordinary.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 40,709
JUL 31 1961

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 29 1961

Music Review

Ballet Music at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE CONCERT in the great Shed at Tanglewood last night, except for a short overture, consisted of ballet music. It was the first program of the fourth and pivot week of the Berkshire Festival, and an audience of 6,072, identical in numbers with last year's analagous concert within the digits on two hands, derived a tremendous thrill from the evening.

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, shared the podium with Aaron Copland, to whom he yielded the first half of the program. Copland started with the "Preamble for a Solemn Occasion," which he had written for a concert commemorating the first anniversary of the Declaration of Human Rights by the United Nations. It's a majestic and noble conception, and is identifiable by the use of intervals which have become distinctively Copland's as well as a spirit admirably suited to the occasion.

* * *

THE LARGER portion of this half was Copland's "Appalachian Spring." This has several Berkshire connotations. It was commissioned by a Pittsfield musical patron, the late Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, and was first performed by Martha Graham's ballet troupe in the Coolidge auditorium in the Library of Congress in Washington on October 30, 1944, the sponsor's birthday concert.

The composer says it concerns a pioneer celebration around a newly-built farmhouse in the Pennsylvania hills in the early part of the last century, but Copland worked on it and finished it in adjacent Richmond, and the tunes could well be Shaker songs from the Lebanon colony as well as from the Keystone state.

IN ANY CASE it is now firmly established as a classic in our musical literature. Within the 20 minutes of its duration there is great variety of moods and consequent tempos. The rhythm is intricate in many situations, and in 1944 Louis Horst had more than ordinary trouble keeping the smaller ensemble in the original scoring in presentable company front. Among the performers on that occasion was Howard Mitchel, who later became conductor of the National Symphony in Washington.

Copland was vehement in his gestures but absolutely secure in his own music, less of a natural phenomenon than may be patent to some people. His sense of sonorities is unexcelled, and the ascending fourth which here is his personal cachet has an element of comfort in its inquiring appeal.

His opera, "The Tender Land," in a slightly later generation and a more distant locale, still has the same general tenor and stamp in its rural background.

* * *

MUNCH TOOK OVER the baton after intermission for Ravel's ballet in one act, "Daphnis et Chloé," in which the Festival chorus, prepared by Hugh Ross Willis Beckett, participated.

The second suite has been performed in the Shed many times but the inclusion of the first with the voices in both is less common, and we would vote for last night's version against the partition of the score any time. The voices mouth no words: Merely shape an "ah" or a "la" as the phrases recommend, but Ravel's marvelous grasp of color fuses the instruments with the voices and at times gives the instruments alone material in certain registers which would make one believe voices were still uttering a bewitching line. The chorus did the a cappella section extremely well, and they sang for Munch with splendid discipline. They did not leave the stage for the section in which Ravel asks for a more distant quality, but a horn and trumpet off stage supplied such a contribution in line with the composer's wishes.

Munch whipped up furious excitement where proper and the final explosion set off a demonstration which allowed the audience to ease their surfeited enthusiasm.

Ormandy Conducts At Tanglewood

(Special to The American)

LENOX, MASS. — Three conductors, Charles Munch, Aaron Copland, and Eugene Ormandy, the last named making his first appearance at a Berkshire Symphonic Festival, gave nearly 27,000 listeners at the three week-end concerts electrifying and haunting experiences they will long remember. To add to the thrilling experiences Byron Janis gave the Sunday afternoon audience of 8,747 such accomplished performance in two Liszt piano concertos that the concerts will be added to the long list of "memorables" at Tanglewood.

Programming for the week end included large offerings of music not usually heard and brought Walter Piston to the platform after the performance of his "Three New England Sketches" and Aaron Copland to the podium to conduct his own "Appalachian Spring, Ballet for Martha" and "Preamble for a Solemn Occasion" before Friday night's audience of 6,072. It was ballet music to the fore on Friday night with Munch giving one of the most moving interpretations of Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" utilizing the full Festival. Chorus in a manner few remember. There was brilliant coloring, weird and haunting ghostliness, strange effects from off-stage, and a glorious crescendo which placed Charles Munch's interpretation of Ravel high up beside his interpretations of Berlioz.

With Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, as guest conductor Saturday night the audience of 8,213 was treated to such an electrifying and exhausting experience as Tanglewood has not had in years. Conducting the entire concert without score in front of him, Ormandy put the Boston's musicians through their paces with such an exuberance and exacting and demanding performance as we had forgotten they could deliver. As though playing each instrument himself, Ormandy gave such fullness, brilliance, and controlled vigor to the reading of Strauss' "Don Juan" that he won his way into the hearts of the Tanglewood audience. The strings were pushed and pushed hard by the conductor but the Boston delivered as though inspired. Roy Harris' "Symphony No. 3" was given a brilliant reading and the ballet music of Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane" brought the audience to most enthusiastic response by intermission.

Ormandy completed the program with a fine reading of Brahms' "Symphony No. 2 in D Major" but for this reviewer his Brahms lacks the sparkle and smoothness Charles Munch gives it. When Saturday's concert was over the bursts of applause made it clear that Ormandy made a hit with the Berkshire Festival audience and that he may well expect to be added as a regularly "invited" conductor in the years ahead.

The young Byron Janis who has been heard so successfully at other Tanglewood concerts gave such lyric, limpid interpretation to his performances in the Liszt "Piano Concerto in A Major" and in the "Piano Concerto in E-flat Major" that he won over the Sunday afternoon audience which stayed to applaud. His playing had in it a gentle, easy rippling, a liquid quality that belied the rich reserves of vigorous, forceful thundering which he called upon as needed. Janis played with boldness when necessary and with exquisite delicacy for performances which continue to amaze his listeners.

Munch conducted Sunday afternoon's concert in a manner which heightened the contrast with Ormandy's performance Saturday night. Munch's conducting of Beethoven's "Symphony No. 4, in B-flat Major" was like a nice, easy stroll through the woods or beside a brook on the warm Berkshire Sunday afternoon it was. It was leisurely and sure, nevertheless. Ormandy had given not only the Boston Symphony Orchestra but also the audience a workout. The audiences seemed to love both experiences.

S.M.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,783

JUL 31 1961

Music:

Byron Janis Plays Two Liszt Concertos

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX— Charles Munch, conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Byron Janis in spectacular performances of Liszt's two piano concertos, closed the fourth weekend with a Music Shed and surrounding grounds audience of 8,747.

The weekend total was 26,914, compared to last summer's 26,-621.

Orchestral selections were Beethoven's Symphony No. 4 in B-flat major (Opus 6;) and Walter Piston's "Three New England Sketches," commissioned for the Worcester Festival and permiered at its 100th anniversary in 1959.

Dazzling Technique

Perhaps the best asset of Janis rousing exhibitions yesterday was his honesty in openly attacking the two Liszt concertos with the full charge of his dazzling technique. This was to be expected in the First "Triangle", Concerto in E flat, but not necessarily in the Second, in A major.

Liszt wrote both to "wow" his own audiences with bravura keyboard calisthenics. Decorateve melodies were directed at his listener's emotions, sensual, if not spiritual.

Both concertos are so exciting to watch that they haven't yet become curios of 19th-century sentimentality, but even Janis and Munch couldn't disguise long stretches of clattering, or gushy triviality. From these standpoints which are inevitable, probably both concertos were well-played and received rousing reactions.

Janis achieved his maximun tone and speed of the turbulent passages of the "Triangle" Concerto. While he didn't quite permit the emoting melodies to dissolve, they were addressed with typical Lisdtian tenderness-plus.

Clean Cadenzas

Cadenzas were immaculately clean and played for the most part at top speed. The slow movement had rich, singing tone, though there was a brief departure from text.

The second Concerto was played with verve, hammered athletically, displaying pyrotechniques in runs, octaves, double notes and chords. Munch extracted poetry at every opportunity, in which the soloist (and cello soloist, Samuel Mayes) shared generously.

Everything was done to "rhapsodize' the concerto without actually letting it turn to syrup. The finale was quite the bravura affair. It was Liszt at his "schmaltziest" and most virtuosic. After the double glissandos in piano and orchestral oratory, one could but decide that it ended in a "draw."

Munch and the orchestra gave an interest-laden performance of Beethoven's Fourth. After an unusually slow, stealthy introduction, the main body of the first movement burst forth with enthusiasm. Trademark of the movement was unbounded joy, even in agitated sections.

Stress was placed on the melodic content of the slow movement, keeping other material on the two-note figure that persists replane of support. The restless two-note figure that persists received a vast number of inflections. The scherzo was virile and majestic. By contrast, the quiet chorale (in winds) was reposed and had beautiful tonal quality.

The finale was moved along at a gallop, employing the strings at their dexterous best. It was energetic throughout, hurried perhaps, but brilliant in effect and capping the entire symphony with a brigh crown.

New England Portrayed

Munch handled the Piston "sketches" with vivid portraiture as his objective, Incidentally, the composer was on hand to take a bow after the performance.

"Seaside" had undercurrents of movement, supporting solos in woodwinds and strings that were most euphonious. Impetus was there and while the idea of "Seaside" was pure speculation, the composer made clear that this was to be taken in a "broad sense."

"Summer Evening" was interpreted as a restless, whimsical scherzo, at an overly-fast clip, passing over some of its clever details. The third section, "Mountains," had sweeping lines in strings and brass. The impressive middle section was richly intoned by woodwinds. The fugue, with which the movement closes, rose systematically to a big climatic scene.

Thursday is Boston "Pops" night at Tanglewood, to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. Arthur Fiedler will conduct the orchestra in Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance" March; "Mignon Overture, Strauss Emperor Waltzes, Gaite Parisienne Suite by Offenbach and medleys from "West Side Story" and "Music Man.' Earl Wild will be soloist in the Tchaikovsky Piano Concertc No. 2 in B-flat minor.

Gazette Northampton

SIXTEEN

Attendance Is In Step With Top-Notch Programs Offered At Tanglewood

The Berkshire Festival continues to draw hordes of interested listeners to the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood. Total for the fourth weekend reached 26,914. Programs included music by three American composers, Copland, Harris and Piston, with two Liszt piano concertos to commemorate the composer's 150th birth year.

Saturday's concert was conducted by Eugene Ormandy, for 25 years leader of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra. His premiere appearance at Tanglewood was hailed with great enthusiasm by the audience. Without baton or music he led the responsive musicians through the emotionally delineative "Don Juan" Tone Poem, Op. 20 of Richard Strauss. His manner of directing suggests the strong bowing of a string player, (he was a European violin prodigy at the age of three and a half). One feels the drive and energy behind his straightforward commands and hears the resultant clarity of each musical presentation. His heels never leave the ground, unlike many other conductors. A serious drill-master, he inveigled Dr. Munch into giving him an extra half rehearsal, making a total of one and a half.

Roy Harris' Symphony No. 3 (In one movement), starting with deep long drawn out string tones and finishing with a brilliant rhythmic exposition by the brass, impressed everyone with its cleanly defined form and restrained development. The briliant close of the legendary "Bacchus et Ariane" Ballet Suite No. 2 by Roussel brought the audience to its feet in stormy applause, as had the like climaxes of the first two. Serious and somber in mood was the final Second Symphony of Brahms, its lyric and romantic themes wistful and gracious, the concluding movement displaying great vigor through Mr . Ormandy's imposing musicianship.

Sunday afternoon saw the lawns filled with people in lawn chairs, some lying or blankets drinking in the sun and heart-satisfying music. A few had brought tables for refreshments. Comportment was excellent, even the wandering children noiseless.

Liszt's two piano concertos were given a stirring performance by Earl Wild, The A major No. 2 composed and played first, is not as well known, or considered as serious a composition as the first in E flt, which had once been referred to as "the triangle concerto." If one cares for this composer or his departure from the strict concerto form, the program would appeal. Mr. Wild's technique is prodigious, but even so it was overshadowed by the orchestra many times where integration was not the intent. Melodic lines on the piano tended to be smudgy, though the notes were all there. The audience loved every bit.

Beethoven's Fourth Symphony opened the program and was completely and thoroughly satisfying in direction by Charles Munch and projection by the Symphony musicians. One wonders why Walter Piston remarks concerning his "New England Sketches" that "they are not intended as descriptive or represenational tone panting . . . " and then titles each of the three sections. In spite of this they are evocative and pleasing to any listener, especially as Dr. Munch displayed them on Sunday.

—M de B. B.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127

JUL 31 1961

S, TRANSCRIPT

At Tanglewood

Ormany and Munch Conduct Boston Symphony in Shed

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Saturday, Eugene Ormandy, Conductor.

Strauss	Don Juan
Harris	Symphony No. 3
Roussel	Bacchus et Ariane
Brahms	Symphony No. 2

Sunday, Charles Munch, Conductor.

Beethoven	Symphony No. 4
Liszt	Piano Concerto No. 2
Piston	Three New England Sketches
Liszt	Piano Concerto No. 1

Soloist Byron Janis.

By FRANK PATTERSON

In probably the most imposing structure ever to be called a shed, Messrs. Ormandy and Munch conducted two somewhat similar programs in a most dissimilar manner. Dissimilar not as a comparison of good, better and best, but in the extremes of approach to the matter at hand.

The safe, sane and deliberate conducting of Eugene Ormandy most closely matched the deliberate efforts of Harris' Third Symphony. The results of its opening long cello theme through the third section was one of a studied and worked piece of music which glittered but very little. The fugue of the following section performed at a slower than usual tempo, however, was both imposing and great.

The brass of the orchestra has, to my mind, become at least as impressive as their renowned strings. The control and rhythm here produced so astonishing an impression that the grandeur of the choral-like close seemed unbalanced in its efforts to carry as nobly its own place in the work.

Lacks Emotional Drive

The symphony is certainly professional and technically attractive, but it lacks to me the emotional level and drive to exceed the mortal limit of most any general audience. The three doses of program music (Strauss, Harris and Roussel) were conducted without score, baton or even the orchestra's general seating arrangement, but the energetic and precise conducting by Ormandy suited very well the thin and bright sounds typical of the orchestra's fame. If color seemed to lack in these three works it was not for any lack by Ormandy, lest it be the lack of dare. The romantic Brahms' Second was heard but vaguely among the distracts of distance, pastoral airs and cool green shadows on the lawn in front of the shed, similar to the distracts that inspired Brahms to write the composition.

Sunday's afternoon program was performed in the tradition of a warm day at Tanglewood, in shirtsleeves. Beethoven's Fourth, so often marked as the gentle work between the Eroica and the Fifth was, as conducted by Munch, reason enough to be thus dressed. Wherever the moment allowed some warmth to the interpretation, a fire was fanned into it. Details, minor in one viewpoint, seldom stand in the way of Munch injecting exciting, pulsing life into most any work. True, this life can on occasion be jarringly transitory. However, it is very seldom an audience can grumble at its loss but that a brighter life and beauty has replaced the old.

Allows Breadth

A work such as the Fourth allows this breadth in handling, but Franz Liszt Concerti No. 1 and No. 2 are far from commonplace. The noise and clatter required of the piano might better be handled by a deft elephant, while any shadings for the orchestra scored like artillery are difficult to come by. That all this depth of profound sound is made without the suggestive odors of gun powder, brimstone or roses is amazing. Liszt even on the 150th anniversary of his birth still sounds slightly vulgar. He might much better be remembered by the long list of composers he helped to fame than the Liszt he hasn't.

Mr. Piston, on hand for his three New England Sketches, took deserved bows for his work which I believe had its fourth public hearing Sunday. The sketches, first performed at the 100th Worcester Festival 1959, are as delightful and cheery as any he has written. The simplicity and directness essential to most of his music is a happy characteristic of this work as well.

134

The Evening Gazette Worcester, Mon., July 31, 1961

Good-Sized Audiences At Tanglewood

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — Average attendance at Tanglewood concerts is running slightly behind 1960, but good sized audiences were attracted this weekend. Exactly 8,747 came yesterday afternoon to hear Byron Janis play the two Liszt piano concertos, while the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch offered the Beethoven Fourth Symphony and Walter Piston's "Three New England Sketches," composed two seasons ago for the Worcester Music Festival's 100th anniversary celebration.

On Saturday 8,213 witnessed Eugene Ormandy's initial bow at Tanglewood, in a program devoid of soloists but rich in orchestral interest. On Friday 6,072 saw Aaron Copland conduct two of his own works, "Preamble for a Solemn Occasion" and "Appalachian Spring," while Charles Munch led the orchestra in the complete "Daphnis and Chloe" music of Ravel, with the assistance of the Festival Chorus, prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett.

Conductor Lauded

Eugene Ormandy is no stranger to Boston, but had never appeared at the Berkshire Festival. He was lauded both by the audience and the members of the orchestra, to a degree which indicated great admiration. His program consisted entirely of works composed within the scope of the last hundred years, with a strongly romantic flavor.

Throughout the evening, Ormandy urged the cellos to unusual efforts, and the richness of the resultant ensembles rewarded his proddings. The section is led by Samuel Mayes, long associated with Ormandy as first cellist at Philadelphia.

The Richard Strauss tone poem, "Don Juan" was brilliant fare. Ormandy's directives were of great energy, and he had the winds sounding quite marvelous, while complex phrasings were negotiated cleanly.

Roy Harris' short, one-movement Symphony No. 3 began with smooth and expressive passages for violas and cellos, adding the other instruments gradually. Though the first three "sections" were designated as "Tragic," "Lyric" and "Pastoral," there seemed to be no real division. The mid-section of the work was obsessed with a ceaseless pressure and onward push, like so much modern music, afraid to pause and punctuate its own verbosity.

The latter part of the symphony achieved strongly dramatic qualities in the Fugue and the final blows of fate graphic.

The second suite from Roussel's "Bacchus and Ariadne" Ballet gave the audience its first real taste of how the orchestra could play softly for Ormandy. The awakening of Ariadne was delicately painted, and the Baccanale worked up to a wild and resounding climax.

Warm and Human

Ormandy's Brahms was warm human music filled with moods which ranged from sunny idylls to moments of stress. It is hard to believe that early audiences dubbed this music cold-blooded and obscure. Probably Ormandy dwells on its human possibilities and heart-beats more than some, but his liberties with the printed score on Saturday were all in the direction of conveying a picture to the audience. His well known faculty for tossing one choir of the orchestra against another could not always be indulged as completely as with an orchestra more used to him, but the Bostonians had encompassed splendid cooperation in brief rehearsals and came along with him to a climax which found the audience shouting its applause.

Throughout the evening, total structures tended to be built on somewhat lavish lines, but with splendid depth and body, the Boston winds in particular sounding extremely good.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 81,815

JUL 31 1961

Home Jottings

The Wonder of Sounds Is Found at Tanglewood

First Visit to Festival Is Listening Experience Long to Be Remembered

By ALICE SCOTT ROSS

In what manner does sound permeate?

Awash in a sea of lovely sounds, in exhileratingly dramatic ones, she decided that listening wasn't merely done with the ears.

Antennas for Soul?

Does the soul have antennas? And, if so, are they selective to the degree, in their reaching out, that only music is channeled through?

Seated in the shed at Tanglewood—a first time for her—sounds whispered, light as the fluttering of a moth's wings, as resounding as though a giant wave had crashed on rocks inundating her completely in its roar of triumph.

She was without self, altogether vulnerable, as subject to the command of the conductors' batons as were the musicians. And there were two conductors Friday evening, July 28, at the Berkshire Festival leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Aaron Copland with his town compositions and Charles Munch for Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe."

Time Never Ample

There was no way of knowing, should one be interested, how regular patrons of the symphony concerts were reacting other than through their enthusiastic responses, but she was surprised at her own.

Time never had seemed ample enough to do what needed to be done let alone taking off for Tanglewood during the summer and in the winter, she never felt free to sign up for a concert series and consequently became engrossed in other things.

There may have been apprehension, as well, that "long-haired stuff" was not for her. She knew so little musically — only those piano lessons of long ago which hadn't seemed to "take" — that she considered herself unsuited for more than the wired sounds of radio and television.

Unprepared for Impact

So she was unprepared for the impact of those vibrations which filled the vast shed and floated over lawns beyond and seemed to come to her from senses quite apart from that of hearing.

For her ears weren't involved —never was there the sensation of listening. Trying to find the words to make her meaning clear, the lines of a hymn came to her interpretive aid.

"Take my heart, O Father take it—take and make it all Thine own. . ."

That was the way it had been. Each crescendo, each delicate breath of sound, passed into her heart filling it, claiming it making it their own.

Home again, after riding back through the hills in the coolness of the late evening, and thence to bed, sleep, which had come but fitfully of late, was deep and quiet and peaceful.

He speaks through many tongues.

Music Review — BERKSHIRE EAGLE, July 31, 1961

Liszt at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE PIVOT WEEK of the seven-week Berkshire Festival schedule at Tanglewood was completed yesterday afternoon by a program led by Charles Munch honoring the 150th anniversary of the birth of Franz Liszt. The Boston Symphony Orchestra had Byron Janis as soloist in both piano concertos. The audience numbered close to 9,000.

On the previous evening Eugene Ormandy, musical director of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, made his Tanglewood debut in a program without soloists. Mr. Ormandy has recently become a summer resident of southern Berkshire, and this was not only his first appearance at this festival but also his only one of this season.

* * *

MUNCH BEGAN his program yesterday with the Beethoven Fourth Symphony, and gave it its true character. It isn't a dramatic piece. It has no heartbreak nor shattering inner conflicts like the contiguous works in the same category. Munch did not try to inject false violence nor exaggerated contrasts. No conductor ever chooses the fourth who is intent on making a personal striking success or to impress an audience. Munch showed that he recognized how here Beethoven yields to a milder ingratiating mood. It's an intimate, homely tale with touches of happiness and good humor. Munch kept it within such a framework perfectly.

Eugene Ormandy

Today, July 31st, happens to be the 75th anniversary of Liszt's death. His stature has grown as time recedes, and his importance in musical history becomes more apparent in his capacities as performer, composer and benefactor and champion of other of his fellow musicians. He devoted a large part of his life to encouraging his friends and confreres. After a short but pleasant association in Rome with another Berkshire summer resident of a century ago, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, he wrote the poet in 1868 in Cambridge asking him, if possible, to lend a hand to a young colleague who was coming to make his way in America, a 20-year-old boy named Leopold Damrosch.

* * *

JANIS PLAYED both concertos with gusto and the proper bravado. There is more substance to Liszt's orchestral accompaniments than to the general run of piano concertos of that day. Indeed, he calls the A Major a symphonic concerto. The very introduction shows the orchestral innovator for which he now is accorded due credit. He was a prolific composer; the catalogue of his works in musical encyclopedias requires more pages than of any other of the immortals.

The intricate passage and ornamental work of the solos, however, becomes bombastic in contemporary eyes and ears, even as impetuously as Janis threw himself into them. The soloist proved himself equally as effective in the slow sections of the concertos, which are both played without pause, and articulated the poetic phrases with grace, understanding and singing tone. The lovely cello solo in the A Major central section was beautifully played by Samuel Mayes.

* * *

BETWEEN the concertos and after intermission, Munch led the orchestra in Walter Piston's "Three New England Sketches." On his first recall the conductor brought the composer back to the stage with him to acknowledge the applause his work had evoked. The first two sketches, "Seaside" and "Summer Evening," are whimsical, amorphous reveries; the final one, "Mountains," has a more ponderous and massive mold which aids visualization.

Ormandy chose a program contrived to drain an orchestra of its last drop of tone. The Bostonians played the first half of his evening for him with exhausting response. He began with an exciting "Don Juan" of Strauss, continued through Roy Harris' Third Symphony to Roussel's second suite from his ballet "Bacchus et Ariane."

The orchestra played for him with vivid brilliance. He conducts without a baton and with clenched fists "boxed" the musicians relentlessly into sensational agitation. Strauss particularly lends himself to this type of demonstration, and Ormandy's demands found the famous orchestra willing and more than able. He revealed a firm grip and splendid over-all conception of the music, and was very gracious to bring Ralph Gomberg to the front for appreciation of his lovely oboe solo.

* * *

THE HARRIS symphony focuses light on the strength and solidity of the orchestra's cello section. The long preamble is totally in the low registers, and the tone was as firm and genuine as the music is plain and true in its primitive nudity. The Roussel ballet music has a delightful solo for the viola which Joseph de Pasquale made sound outstanding.

The final half of the evening was the Brahms Second Symphony. This was a beautifully-planned performance. It was consistently vital and moving and the orchestral tone was magnificent. The life spans of Brahms and Strauss linked far over a century yet the exhibits of these two composers Saturday night were within a lax decade of each other. Ormandy penetrated his Brahms with extreme lucidity. The tempos in the scherzo and the finale were in a most happy realization. We found his demands for full and forte tonal production occasionally in excess of requirements, but he was tense and in emotional ferment, and imparted that quality to all he touched. The audience of over eight thousand was roused to fever pitch.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,783
JUL 29 1961

135

Second Thoughts On Music

Munch's Reading of Brahms' Symphony One of His Finest Lenox Achievements

Tanglewood Topics

LENOX—Starting this morning at 10, Tanglewood will observe its busiest week of the season with some musical activity scheduled daily. The lineup is as follows:

Sunday: 10 a. m., Music Hall, Berkshire Chamber Music; 2.30 p. m. Music Shed, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conductor, Byron Janis soloist.

Monday: 8.30 p. m., Music Hall, Composer's Forum.

Tuesday: 8.30 p. m., Theater, Tanglewood Choir.

Wednesday: 8.30 p. m., Theater, Boston Fine Arts Quartet.

Thursday: 8.30 p. m., Music Shed, Boston Pops, Arthur Fiedler conductor, Earl Wild soloist.

Friday: 3.15 p. m., Music Hall, Seminar in Contemporary Music; 8.30 p. m., Music Shed, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conductor, Eugene Istomin soloist.

Saturday: 10 a. m. Music Shed, Boston Symphony Orchestra rehearsal; 3 p. m., Music Shed, Berkshire Music Center Orchestra; 8.30 p. m., Music Shed, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conductor, Joseph Silverstein soloist.

Violinist Joseph Silverstein will be soloist with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the orchestra's Berkshire Festival concert at Tanglewood Saturday evening. Mr. Silverstein will appear instead of pianist Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer who was scheduled to perform but who has had to cancel her appearance because of illness.

The revised program, to be conducted by Charles Munch, will consist of Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 plus Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn and the Symphony by Franck.

A member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1955, Mr. Silverstein has previously appeared as soloist with the orchestra in Boston, New York and at Tanglewood. Mr. Silverstein won the Walter W. Naumburg Foundation Award in 1960 and was the only American to place in the 1959 Queen Elisabeth of Belgium International Music Competition.

* * *

Arthur Fiedler, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a benefit pops concert at Tanglewood Thursday evening will return to San Francisco immediately after the concert via Miami and Denver.

* * *

Pianists will dominate the next few programs at Tanglewood. This afternoon it will be Byron Janis, Thursday Earl Wild and Friday Eugene Istomin.

* * *

Soprano Linda Sanford, in residence this summer at Lenox for the music festival, will leave this area for the only time of the season to sing the Verdi "Requiem" at the Brevard Festival, Brevard, N. C. to be held next Sunday.

This performance, to be conducted by James Christian Pfohl, will be Miss Sanford's third time at the famed festival in the Transylvania Mountains of southern North Carolina.

A native of Alabama, Miss Sanford successfully manages two careers. She is an eagerly sought soloist with important New England musical organizations and is also staff member of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra's public relations department. She is soloist at historic Trinity Church, downtown Boston.

* * *

On Friday evening, pianist Eugene Istomin will appear with Pierre Monteux and the Boston

EUGENE ISTOMIN

Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood. Mr. Istomin will be heard in the Schumann Piano Concert.

Adele Addison Displays Artistic Approach With Hub Symphony Orchestra, Critic Says

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — There were many things to admire during the first week end of concerts by the full complement of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The week end audience total was 30,784 which included 5302 at the open dress rehearsal on Saturday morning. As usual, Saturday night's concert drew the largest audience, 10,949.

Charles Munch opened the week-end series Friday night with a very superior reading of the Brahms' Symphony No. 1 in C minor. It was one of his finest achievements at Tanglewood. He then offered the first hearing of Francis Poulenc's "Gloria" for soprano soloist, chorus and orchestra. Adele Addison, soprano, who was soloist at the world premiere in Boston early this year, was soloist here. The Festival Chorus was prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson.

The work is an extended one, rich in melody and texture. Miss Addison sang with her accustomed beauty of tone and intelligent approach to the music. Its technical demands are many but each was met with consummate artistry.

Dr. Munch conducted the concert Saturday night offering the overture to "Genoveva" by Robert Schumann; the seventh symphony of William Schuman and the Beethoven violin concerto with Isaac Stern as soloist. The concerto was by far the most finished performance. Stern was at his magnificent best and was given superb collaboration by Dr. Munch and the orchestra. It was an exciting performance which caused the audience to burst into bravos almost before the final movement had concluded.

Little is left of Schumann's opera "Genoveva" but its overture, and that is not much to rave about. Schumann, like many of his colleagues, lacked the dramatic instinct for opera.

William Schuman's seventh symphony has powerful moments and is an object lesson on what may be accomplished through orchestra colors. We found much of it ugly, but interest was held throughout.

The Sunday afternoon concert was brightened by the initial appearance of the octogenerian Pierre Monteux. No one is more beloved at Tanglewood than this veteran French conductor who is at home in any style of music and must hold some sort of a record for premieres of contemporary works.

As his soloist, Monteux had violinist Isaac Stern who was heard in the Viotti "Violin Concerto in A minor" and in Bela Bartok's "Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra." The Viotti concerto is slightly worn, but its old time grace and charming melodies made for pleasant listening. Stern played it as though it were just written. The Bartok Rhapsody was a veritable tour deforce. Stern brought out his native charm through the strength of its rhythms and its admirable melodic content. Monteux and the orchestra were in complete rapport with the violinist and the performance brought about an ovation almost as great as that which greeted Monteux when he slowly came on stage.

Monteux conducts with a minimum of effort, but every climax is made and in passages demanding delicacy, true delicacy is evident. In addition to the two violin works, Monteux offered a beautiful reading of "Old Dances and Airs for Flute" by Respighi. There was grace and elegance in these arias and dances and they were played with admirable verve and clarity. The three dances from the ballet "The Three Cornered Hat" by Manuel de Falla provided opportunity for the orchestra to spread its wings and range through exotic rhythms and all the colors in a rainbow.

The final work under his direction was the lovely orchestral suite from "Die Rosenkavalier" by Strauss. Here is music which sings from beginning to end; which has the most intriguing of melodies and which many, many people know who have never seen the opera.

Another feature of the week end was the presentation of a citation and a recording of the "Gloria" to Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith. The occasion was her 80th birthday and it was noted by the president of the board of trustees of the orchestra that Miss Smith's enthusiasm and administrative genius made possible the formation of the Berkshire Festival and the great Music Shed. Miss Smith was the first president of the trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Music: Copland, Munch At Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The Tanglewood Podium was shared last night by composer Aaron Copland and the Boston Symphony's regular conductor, Charles Munch, for the opening concert of the Berkshire Music Festival's fourth week. Attendance was 6,072.

Copland conducted his "Preamble for a Solemn Occasion" and "Appalachian Spring Suite." Munch conducted Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe Ballet Suite" for orchestra and the festival chorus, which had been prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett.

Copland heads the Berkshire Music Center's composition department. The center is a subsidiary of the festival. For the last many years, he has conducted the Boston Symphony in at least one festival concert.

Sometimes Unfortunate

With all due respect to Copland as composer and educator, his Tanglewood appearances as conductor have sometimes been unfortunate.

This was partly so last night. "Appalachian Spring" is one of Copland's most ingratiating works, written in 1944. It lies smack center of an idiom in which Copland wrote with distinction and comparative interest. Unlike many other Copland products, it does not require an amicable ear.

Copland is far from being a first-class conductor. There's a looseness and sameness of mannerisms in his style that isn't so much an affront to the eye as to articulation. Fortunately, it is well-nigh impossible to lose the Boston Symphony.

Lends Verification

Picturesque as he is on podium, Copland's presence certainly lends verification to his own music, even if another conductor might make it more exciting.

"Preamble" does a lot of brassy blasting from the outset in reasonably coherent harmonies. Progress thereafter is through some pseudo-passionate material, most of it joined in nearby related keys. This is embellished with bell sounds in a noisy but thin instrumental mixture.

There are a few references to "Our Town" and other Copland works. The thing ends with even more clatter, this time emphasized with muscular whacks of the tam-tam and cymbals.

Superb Performance

"Appalachian" received a superb performance by the orchestra. The slow introduction was meticulously played, featuring excellent solo work in woodwinds. The first "let go" made a good point of its tricky rhythms garnered with drums and xylophone.

Possibly the tender spots in "Appalachian" have more impact when associated with ballet, but under Copland's baton they looked intense and sounded undernourished.

We've rarely heard a more compelling or vitalized performance of Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" than last night's under Munch's direction. It represented the marvellous growth of the French school that Munch has asserted on the orchestra during the past dozen years.

Score Elaborate

For the Boston Symphony, the score is elaborate but not intricate. Therefore, it wasn't necessarily the thrill of virtuoso playing alone. Rather, it was the descriptive clarity, the way the balletic story was unfolded, and the wealth of sound in which sensitive solos were allowed freedom to exploit themselves freely.

The choral score is secondary. It was this wordless music that caused such bitterness when the work was introduced as ballet in 1912.

If one becomes analytical of Munch's crafty use of the voices last night, it leads to an interesting paradox in connection with previous readings of Wagner which have irked singers because of an engulfing orchestra.

Tonal Coloration

Last night Munch caused the vocal ensemble to contribute to the general composition of sound. In other words, the chorus' mission was one of tonal coloration rather than out-and-out singing of syllables on pitch and in time. Most conductors completely miss the boat on this point.

Tonight, Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, makes his Tanglewood debut with the Boston Symphony. The program: Richard Strauss' "Don Juan," Roy Harris' Third Symphony, Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariance," and Brahms' Second Symphony.

136

Fifth Week - July 31 - Aug 6

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
FRAMINGHAM, Mass.
Circ. 13,754
AUG 1 1961

Natick Violinist Soloist at Tanglewood

Joseph Silverstein of 19 Irving Rd., Natick, violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1955, will be soloist with the Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival concert at Tanglewood, Lenox, Saturday evening, Aug. 5.

Charles Munch will conduct the orchestra in the program which will consist of Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 plus Brahms' Variations on a theme by Haydn and the Symphony by Franck.

Mr. Silverstein has previously appeared as sololist with the orchestra in Boston, New York and at Tanglewood. He won the Walter W. Naumburg Foundation Award in 1960 and was the only American to place in the 1959 Queen Elizabeth of Belgium International Music Competition.

Mr. Silverstein received his early training from his father, the later Bernard Silverstein and later studied with Joseph Gingold and Efrem Zimbalist Sr. at Curtis Institute. Zimbalist, who has given private recitals at the Fay School in Southboro, is the father of Hollywood actor, Efrem Zimbalist, who appears as Stuart Bailey on the Television program, "77 Sunset Strip."

The Natick violinist has played with the Detroit, Houston, Philadelphia and Denver Symphony Orchestras as well as the Boston Symphony. As concert master and assistant conductor with the Denver orchestra, he has soloed with all the above orchestras. He has also studied at Colorado College and has given many recitals. He has played with the Boston "Pops" orchestra, the Efrem Zimbalist Symphonette and the Boston Arts Quartet.

He is a native of Detroit, Mich., as is his wife, the former Adrienne Shufro. They have two daughters, Bunny, 4, and Deborah, 20 months.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 47,10
JUL 27 1961

Silverstein To Perform at Tanglewood

Violinist Joseph Silverstein, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1955, will be soloist with Charles Munch and the orchestra at the Berkshire Festival concert at Tanglewood Aug. 5.

* * *

HE WILL APPEAR instead of pianist Nicale Henriot-Schweitzer, who was scheduled to perform but who has had to cancel her appearance because of illness.

The revised program will consist of Prokofiev's "Violin Concerto number 2" plus the Brahms' "Variations on a Theme by Haydn" and the Symphony by Franck.

Silverstein has previously appeared as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston, New York and at Tanglewood. He won the Walter W. Naumburg Foundation Award in 1960 and was the only American to place in the 1959 Queen Elizabeth of Belgium International Music competition.

Silverstein was heard in this city in a program at the General Electric Co. research laboratory on April 7 under the sponsorship of the Whitney Club.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 99,973
AUG 2 1961

To Conduct at Tanglewood

Pierre Monteux will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival concert Friday and again Saturday the 19th. Eugene Istomin will appear with him at the first concert and Gary Graffman at the second.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
AUG 2 1961

Fifth Music Center Concert Is Saturday

Because of the Boston Pops-at-Tanglewood concert tomorrow evening the fifth concert by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra will take place Saturday afternoon at 3 p.m.

The program will include Stravinsky's Symphonies of Wind Instruments and the Concerto for Two pianos by Bach. Soloists in this work will be Nancy Wurtele of Los Angeles, Calif. and Constance R. R. Jackson of Miami Beach, Fla.

Following the intermission Arnold Schoenberg's Chamber Symphony will be heard. The concluding work of the program is the Symphony No. 41 by Mozart.

This orchestra is under the supervision of Eleazar de Carvalho, and the concerts are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (e)
NEW BRITAIN, Conn.
Circ. 31,209
AUG 2 1961

Music Students Ready For Tanglewood Trip

NEWINGTON — Music students will hear an open rehearsal of the "Boston Symphony Orchestra" at "Tanglewood" Lennox, Mass., on a trip sponsored by the Park and Recreation Dept.

On Saturday they will hear Charles Munch conduct from 10 a.m. to 12 p.m.

The bus will leave New Meadow School at 7:30 a.m. and return about 4 p.m. Parents are invited. Everyone is to bring their lunch.

Bus transportation will cost $1.50 per person and the same fee is required of adults for admission to the rehearsal. Students less than 13-years-old must pay 50 cents.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Town Times
OAKVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independen
Circ. 2,450
AUG 3 1961

List Soloists For Weekend Concerts At Tanglewood

Charles Munch has invited two members of his Orchestra to be soloists at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tanglewood concerts this weekend.

On Saturday evening, (August 5, at 8:30) concert violinist Joseph Silverstein — replacing the indisposed Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer — will be soloist in the Violin Concerto No. 2 by Prokofiev; at this concert Doctor Munch will also conduct Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn and the Symphony by Franck. Joseph de Pasquale will be heard at the concert on Sunday afternoon August 6, at 2:30 in a performance of Bartok's Viola Concerto . The balance of this program will consist of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and "The Pines of Rome" by Respighi.

EUGENE ISTOMIN

Pierre Monteux makes his second appearnance at the 1961 Berkshire Festival to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday evening August 4, at 8:30 when pianist Eugene Istomin will be his guest. The program will include Beethoven's Overture to "Fidelio," Schumann's Piano Concerto, the Dance from "Salome" by Richard Strauss and the Symphony No. 2 by Sibelius.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will make their annual appearance at Tanglewood this evening at 8:30 to give a benefit concert for the Berkshire Music Center. Earl Wild will be Mr. Fiedler's guest at this special concert. The program includes Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto in B-Flat minor plus Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance," the Overture to "Mignon" by Thomas, Strauss's "Emperor" Waltzes and compositions by Offenbach, Berstein and Willson.

EARL WILD

Members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to the following events at Tanglewood this week: Friday, August 4, 3:15 p.m., in the Chamber Music Hall, Seminar in Contempory Music; Saturday, August 5, 3 p.m., in the Music Shed, the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra; and Sunday, August 6, 10 a.m. in the Chamber Music Hall, Berkshire Music Center Chamber Music.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 99,973
JUL 27 1961

Soloist Aug. 5 At Tanglewood To Be Violinist

Silverstein Replaces Pianist Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer Who Is Ill

TANGLEWOOD—Violinist Joseph Silverstein will be soloist with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Orchestra's Berkshire Festival concert at Tanglewood Saturday night, Aug. 5. Mr. Silverstein will appear instead of pianist Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer who was scheduled to perform but who has had to cancel her appearance because of illness.

The revised program, to be conducted by Charles Munch, will consist of Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 plus Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn and the Symphony by Franck.

A member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1955, Mr. Silverstein has previously appeared as soloist with the orchestra in Boston, New York and at Tanglewood. Mr. Silverstein won the Walter W. Naumburg Foundation Award in 1960 and was the only American to place in the 1959 Queen Elisabeth of Belgium International Music Competition.

VALATIE, N.Y.
ROUGH NOTES
W. 1,488
AUG 4 1961

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
JUL 30 1961

Orchestra Members Tanglewood Soloists

Charles Munch has invited two members of his orchestra to be soloists at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tanglewood concerts this weekend.

Saturday evening violinist Joseph Silverstein—replacing the indisposed Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer—will be solist in the Violin Concerto No. 2 by Prokofiev; Doctor Munch will also conduct Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn and the Symphony by Franck.

Joseph de Pasquale will be heard the following afternoon in Bartok's Viola Concerto. The balance of this program will consist of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and "The Pines of Rome" by Respighi.

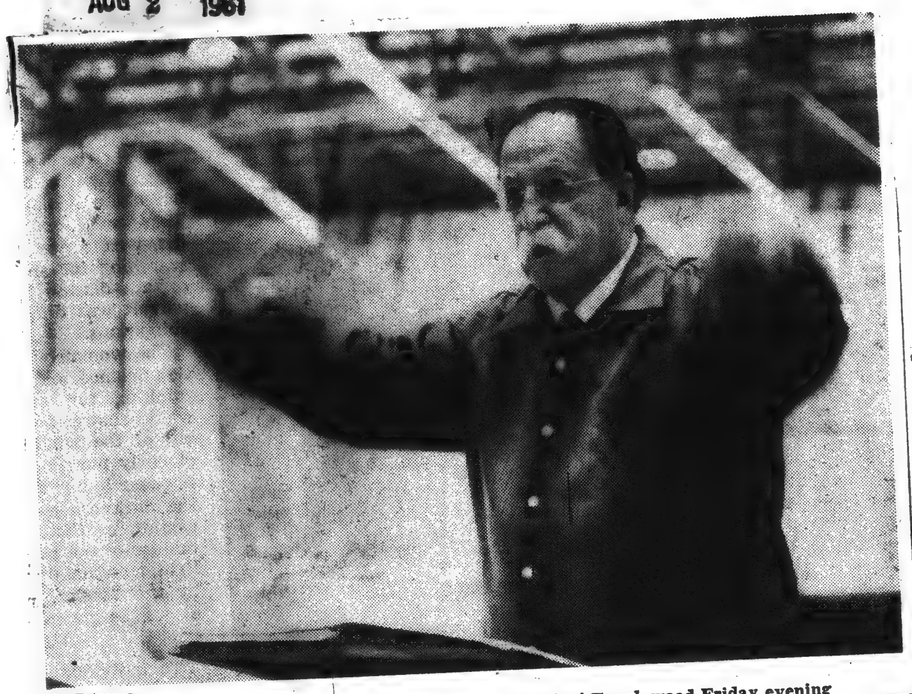
Pierre Monteux makes his second appearance at the 1961 Berkshire Festival to conduct Friday evening when pianist Eugene Istomin will be his guest. The program will include Beethoven's overture to "Fidelio," Schumann's Piano Concerto, the Dance from "Salome" by Richard Strauss and the Symphony No 2 by Sibelius.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will make their annual appearance at Tanglewood Thursday evening to give a benefit concert for the Berkshire Music Center. Earl Wild will be Mr. Fiedler's guest at this special concert.

The program includes Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto in B-Flat minor plus Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance," the Overture to "Mignon" by Thomas, Strauss's "Emperor" Waltzes and compositions by Offenbach, Bernstein and Willson.

The fifth concert of the Festival's chamber music series will be performed by the Boston Fine Arts Quartet with Mr. de Pasquale in the Tanglewood Theater Wednesday evening. The Quartet includes four members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra: Joseph Silverstein, Harry Dickson, Eugen Lehner and Richard Kapuscinski.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
AUG 2 1961



Joe Petrovec

Pierre Monteux will conduct the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood Friday evening

—The Berkshire Eagle, Monday, Aug. 7, 1961

VALATIE, N.Y.
ROUGH NOTES
W. 1,488
AUG 4 1961

BSO Members Will Be Tanglewood Soloists

Charles Munch has invited two members of his orchestra to be soloists at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tanglewood concerts this weekend.

Joseph de Pasquale

At the Saturday evening, August 5 concert at 8:30, violinist Joseph Silverstein will be soloist in the Violin Concerto No. 2 by Prokofiev; at this concert Doctor Munch will also conduct Brahams' Variations on a Theme by Haydn and the Symphony by Franck. Joseph de Pacquale will be heard at the concert on Sunday afternoon August 6, at 2:30, in a performance of Bartok's Viola Concerto. The balance of this program will consist of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and "The Pines of Rome" by Resphighi.

Pierre Monteux makes his second appearance at the 1961 Berkshire Festival to conduct the Boston Symphony Friday evening, August 4, at 8:30, when pianist Eugene Istomin will be his guest. The program will include Beethoven's Overture to "Fidelio," Schumann's Piano Concerto, the Dance from "Salome" by Richard Strauss and the Symphony No. 2 by Sibelius.

Whitestone

SURPRISE VISITOR to Tanglewood yesterday afternoon for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert was Danny Kaye, the famed comedian, who was a guest of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of Stockbridge, right, in her box. With them at left is Mrs. Shelagh Moore of London and New York City, a weekend guest of Mrs. Albert Spalding of Great Barrington, widow of the late concert violinist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Town Crier
WESTPORT, Conn.
Bi-Weekly Circ. 6,005
JUL 30 1961

Violinist At Festival . . .

Violinist Joseph Silverstein will be soloist with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the orchestra's Berkshire Festival concert at Tanglewood Saturday evening, Aug. 5.

Mr. Silverstein will appear instead of pianist Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer who was scheduled to perform but who has had to cancel her appearance because of illness.

The revised program, to be conducted by Charles Munch, will consist of Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 plus Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn and the Symphony by Franck.

A member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1955, Mr. Silverstein has previously appeared as soloist with the Orchestra in Boston, New York and at Tanglewood. Mr. Silverstein won the Walter W. Naumburg Foundation Award in 1960 and was the only American to place in the 1959 Queen Elisabeth of Belgium International Music Competition.

Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 4,856
JUL 26 1961

Silverstein Is Soloist At Tanglewood

Violinist Joseph Silverstein will be soloist with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Orchestra's Berkshire Festival concert at Tanglewood Saturday evening, Aug. 5. Silverstein will appear instead of pianist Nichole Henroit-Schweitzer who was scheduled to perform but who has had to cancel her apppearance because of illness.

A member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1955, Silverstein has previously appeared as soloist with the Orchestra in Boston, New York and at Tanglewood. He won the Walter W. Naumburg Foundation Award in 1960 and was the only American to place in the 1959 Queen Elisaboth of Belgium International Music Competition.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
JUL 26 1961

Silverstein Is Soloist At Tanglewood Aug. 5

Violinist Joseph Silverstein will be soloist with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Orchestra's Berkshire Festival concert at Tanglewood Saturday evening, Aug. 5. Silverstein will appear instead of pianist Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, who was scheduled to perform but who has had to cancel her appearance because of illness.

The revised program will consist of Prokofiev's "Violin Concerto No. 2" plus Brahms' "Variations on a Theme by Haydn" and the "Symphony" by Franck.

A member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1955, Silverstein has previously appeared as soloist with the orchestra in Boston, New York and at Tanglewood.

138

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 27 1961

Whitestone

AUG. 5 SOLOIST, replacing Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, pianist, who is ill, is Joseph Silverstein of the Boston Symphony Orchestra violin section, who will give a performance of Prokofiev's Concerto No. 2 in the Music Shed at Tanglewood. BSO also will perform works by Haydn and Franck.

News
WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,700
AUG 3 1961

Monteux Conducts Again At Lenox

Charles Munch has invited two members of his Orchestra to be soloists at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tanglewood concerts this weekend.

At the Saturday evening concert violinist Joseph Silverstein — replacing the indisposed Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer — will be soloist in the Violin Concerto No. 2 by Prokofiev; at this concert Doctor Munch will also conduct Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn and the Symphony by Franck. Joseph de Pasquale will be heard at the concert on Sunday afternoon in a performance of Bartok's Viola Concerto. The balance of this program will consist of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and "The Pines of Rome" by Respighi.

Pierre Monteux makes his second appearance at the 1961 Berkshire Festival to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow (Friday) evening when pianist Eugene Istomin will be his guest. The program will include Beethoven's Overture to "Fidelio," Schumann's Piano Concerto, the Dance from "Salome" by Richard Strauss and the Symphony No. 2 by Sibelius.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will make their annual appearance at Tanglewood tonight (Thursday) to give a benefit concert for the Berkshire Music Center.

News (e)
FRAMINGHAM, Mass.
Circ. 13,754
AUG 1 1961

VIOLINIST Joseph Silverstein with the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1955, and a resident of 19 Irving Rd., Natick, will be soloist with Charles Munch and the Symphony Orchestra at the Orchestra's Berkshire Festival concert at Tanglewood, Lenox, Saturday evening, Aug. 5. The program will consist of Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 and Brahms' Variations on a theme by Haydn and the Symphony by Franck.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 92,860
JUL 29 1961

To Play Viola Solo

Joseph de Pasquale, principal viola of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be soloist in a performance of the Bartok Viola Concerto at the orchestra's Tanglewood concert Aug. 6. The balance of the program will consist of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and Respighi's "The Pines of Rome."

KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
D. 16,251
JUL 29 1961

Pierre Monteux and Eugene Istomin Will Be With Boston Symphony at Tanglewood

Charles Munch has invited two members of his orchestra to be soloists at Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tanglewood concerts.

At the Saturday evening (August 5, 8:30) concert violinist Joseph Silverstein—replacing the indisposed Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, will be soloist in the Violin Concerto No. 2 by Prokofiev; at this concert Doctor Munch will also conduct Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn and the Symphony by Franck. Joseph de Pasquale will be heard at the concert on Sunday afternoon (August 6, 2:30) in a performance of Bartok's Viola Concerto. The balance of this program will consist of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and "The Pines of Rome" by Respighi.

Monteux Scheduled

Pierre Monteux makes his second appearance at the 1961 Berkshire Festival to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday evening, Aug. 4 at 8:30 when pianist Eugene Istomin will be his guest. The program will include Beethoven's Overture to "Fidelio," Schumann's Piano Concerto, the Dance from "Salome" by Richard Strauss and the Symphony No. 2 by Sibelius.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will make their annual appearance at Tanglewood Thursday evening, Aug. 3, at 8:30 to give a benefit concert for the Berkshire Music Center. Earl Wild will be Mr. Fiedler's guest at this special concert. The program includes Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto in B-Flat minor plus Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance," the Overture to "Mignon" by Thomas, Strauss's "Emperor" Waltzes and compositions by Offenbach, Bernstein and Willson.

The fifth concert of the Festival's chamber music series will be performed by the Boston Fine Arts Quartet with Joseph de Pasquale in the Tanglewood Theatre Wednesday evening (August 2, 8:30). The Quartet—consisting of four members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra: Joseph Silverstein, Harry Dickson, Eugen Lehner and Richard Kapuscinski — and Mr. de Pasquale will perform the Quintets in C minor (K. 406), D major (K. 593), and E-flat major (K. 614) by Mozart.

Members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to the following events at Tanglewood this week: Monday, July 31, 8:30 p. m., in the Chamber Music Hall, Composer's Forum; Tuesday, Aug. 1, 8:30 p. m. in the theatre, the Tanglewood Choir; Friday, Aug. 4, at 3:15 p. m., in the Chamber Music Hall, Seminar in Contemporary Music; Saturday, Aug. 5, 3 p. m. in the Music Shed, the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra; and Sunday, Aug. 6, 10 a. m. in the Chamber Music Hall, Berkshire Music Center Chamber Music.

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUL 25 1961

Solo Violinist Is Tanglewood Feature On Saturday Night

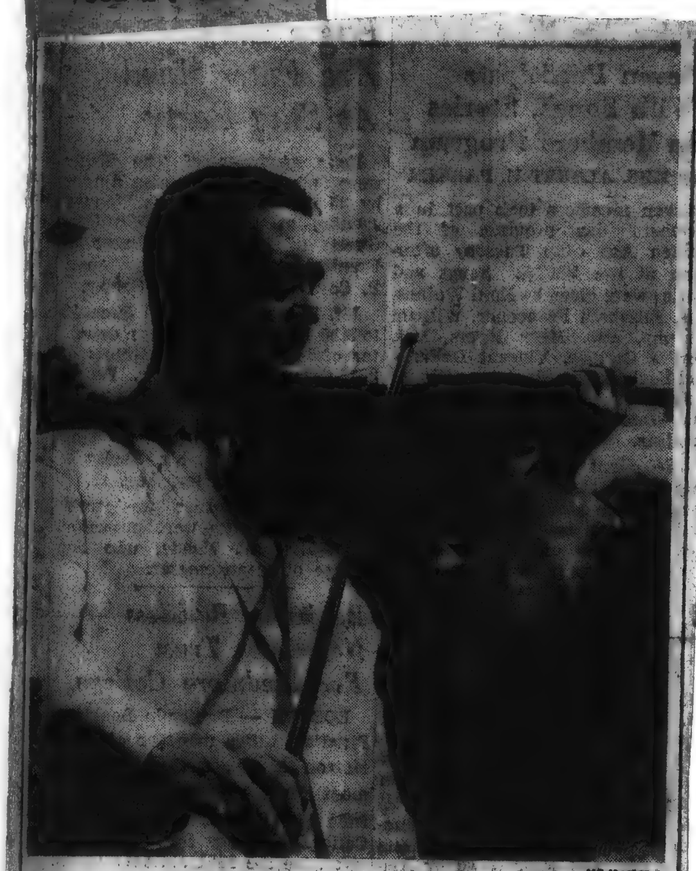
Violinist Joseph Silverstein will be soloist with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the orchestra's Berkshire Festival concert at Tanglewood Saturday evening, Aug. 5. Mr. Silverstein will appear instead of pianist Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer who was scheduled to perform but who has had to cancel her appearance because of illness.

The revised program, to be conducted by Charles Munch, will consist of Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 plus Brahm's Variations on a Theme by Haydn and the Symphony by Franck.

A member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1955, Mr. Silverstein has previousiy appeared as soloist with the orchestra in Boston, New York and at Tanglewood. Mr. Silverstein won the Walter W. Naumburg Foundation Award in 1960 and was the only American to place in the 1959 Queen Elisabeth of Belgium International Music Competition

138

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 27 1961



Whitestone

AUG. 5 SOLOIST, replacing Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, pianist, who is ill, is Joseph Silverstein of the Boston Symphony Orchestra violin section, who will give a performance of Prokofiev's Concerto No. 2 in the Music Shed at Tanglewood. BSO also will perform works by Haydn and Franck.

News
WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,700
AUG 3 1961

Monteux Conducts Again At Lenox

Charles Munch has invited two members of his Orchestra to be soloists at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tanglewood concerts this weekend.

At the Saturday evening concert violinist Joseph Silverstein — replacing the indisposed Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer — will be soloist in the Violin Concerto No. 2 by Prokofiev; at this concert Doctor Munch will also conduct Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn and the Symphony by Franck. Joseph de Pasquale will be heard at the concert on Sunday afternoon in a performance of Bartok's Viola Concerto. The balance of this program will consist of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and "The Pines of Rome" by Respighi.

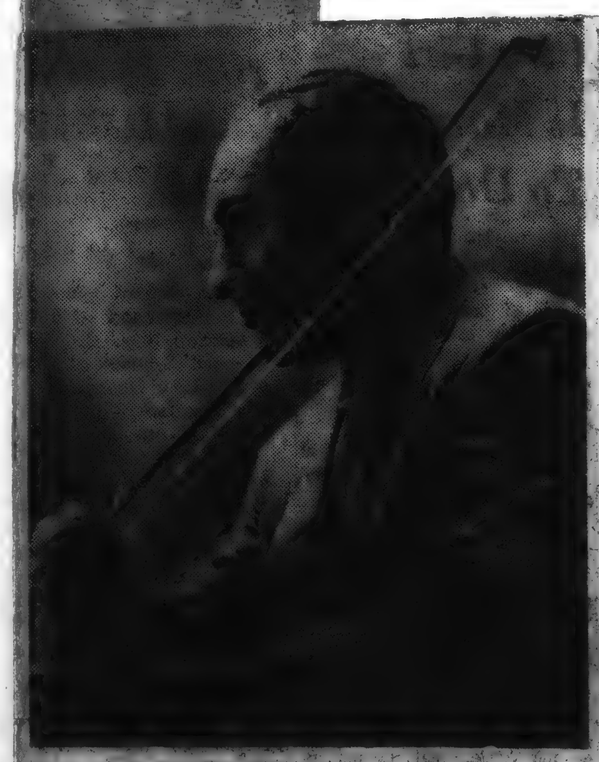
Pierre Monteux makes his second appearance at the 1961 Berkshire Festival to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow (Friday) evening when pianist Eugene Istomin will be his guest. The program will include Beethoven's Overture to "Fidelio," Schumann's Piano Concerto, the Dance from "Salome" by Richard Strauss and the Symphony No. 2 by Sibelius.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will make their annual appearance at Tanglewood tonight (Thursday) to give a benefit concert for the Berkshire Music Center.

News (e)
FRAMINGHAM, Mass.
Circ. 13,754
AUG 1 1961

VIOLINIST Joseph Silverstein with the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1955, and a resident of 19 Irving Rd., Natick, will be soloist with Charles Munch and the Symphony Orchestra at the Orchestra's Berkshire Festival concert at Tanglewood, Lenox, Saturday evening, Aug. 5. The program will consist of Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 and Brahms' Variations on a theme by Haydn and the Symphony by Franck.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 92,860
JUL 29 1961



To Play Viola Solo

Joseph de Pasquale, principal viola of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be soloist in a performance of the Bartok Viola Concerto at the orchestra's Tanglewood concert Aug. 6. The balance of the program will consist of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and Respighi's "The Pines of Rome."

KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
D. 16,291
JUL 29 1961

Pierre Monteux and Eugene Istomin Will Be With Boston Symphony at Tanglewood

Charles Munch has invited two members of his orchestra to be soloists at Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tanglewood concerts.

At the Saturday evening (August 5, 8:30) concert violinist Joseph Silverstein—replacing the indisposed Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, will be soloist in the Violin Concerto No. 2 by Prokofiev; at this concert Doctor Munch will also conduct Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn and the Symphony by Franck. Joseph de Pasquale will be heard at the concert on Sunday afternoon (August 6, 2:30) in a performance of Bartok's Viola Concerto. The balance of this program will consist of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and "The Pines of Rome" by Respighi.

Monteux Scheduled

Pierre Monteux makes his second appearance at the 1961 Berkshire Festival to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday evening, Aug. 4 at 8:30 when pianist Eugene Istomin will be his guest. The program will include Beethoven's Overture to "Fidelio," Schumann's Piano Concerto, the Dance from "Salome" by Richard Strauss and the Symphony No. 2 by Sibelius.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will make their annual appearance at Tanglewood Thursday evening, Aug. 3, at 8:30 to give a benefit concert for the Berkshire Music Center. Earl Wild will be Mr. Fiedler's guest at this special concert. The program includes Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto in B-Flat minor plus Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance," the Overture to "Mignon" by Thomas, Strauss's "Emperor" Waltzes and compositions by Offenbach, Bernstein and Wilson.

The fifth concert of the Festival's chamber music series will be performed by the Boston Fine Arts Quartet with Joseph de Pasquale in the Tanglewood Theatre Wednesday evening (August 2, 8:30). The Quartet—consisting of four members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra: Joseph Silverstein, Harry Dickson, Eugen Lehner and Richard Kapuscinski — and Mr. de Pasquale will perform the Quintets in C minor (K. 406), D major (K. 593), and E-flat major (K. 614) by Mozart.

Members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to the following events at Tanglewood this week: Monday, July 31, 8:30 p. m. in the Chamber Music Hall, Composer's Forum; Tuesday, Aug. 1, 8:30 p. m. in the theatre, the Tanglewood Choir; Friday, Aug. 4, at 3:15 p. m., in the Chamber Music Hall, Seminar in Contemporary Music; Saturday, Aug. 5, 3 p. m. in the Music Shed, the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra; and Sunday, Aug. 6, 10 a. m. in the Chamber Music Hall, Berkshire Music Center Chamber Music.

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUL 25 1961

Solo Violinist Is Tanglewood Feature On Saturday Night

Violinist Joseph Silverstein will be soloist with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the orchestra's Berkshire Festival concert at Tanglewood Saturday evening, Aug. 5. Mr. Silverstein will appear instead of pianist Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer who was scheduled to perform but who has had to cancel her appearance because of illness.

The revised program, to be conducted by Charles Munch, will consist of Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 plus Brahm's Variations on a Theme by Haydn and the Symphony by Franck.

A member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1955, Mr. Silverstein has previously appeared as soloist with the orchestra in Boston, New York and at Tanglewood. Mr. Silverstein won the Walter W. Naumburg Foundation Award in 1960 and was the only American to place in the 1959 Queen Elisabeth of Belgium International Music Competition.

WHEELS, KEELS & WINGS

Take to the Hills—Berkshire

The music is longhair but the listeners strike an informal note as they sprawl on the greensward before the music shed at the Boston Symphony's Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass.

By PATRICIA O'HAIRE

Pittsfield, Mass. (Special).—To paraphrase an old adage, everybody talks about summer people, but nobody does anything about them—except up here in the Berkshire Hills of western Massachusetts, where the problem has been treated successfully every summer for decades.

Up here, when summer people arrive, which is about the same time as the first green appears on the trees, if there is no room at the inns for them the natives know exactly what to do. They dust off their welcome mats, drop them smack in front of the door, then leave the door wide open for whatever guests overflow from hotels and motels.

6,000-Seat Shed

One reason these Bay Staters behave thusly is the annual Berkshire Festival held each summer at Tanglewood, the 210-acre summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The orchestra holds concerts every Friday and Saturday at 8:30 P. M. and on Sundays at 2:30 at its summer place. Last year it attracted about 200,000 persons to its performances.

This year's schedule, which continues until Aug. 20, will include various programs featuring works by famous composers and solo performances by internationally known artists. Admission prices range from $3 to $6.50 for reserved seats in the 6,000-seat Music Shed, depending on location, but many persons prefer to purchase general admission tickets for $2.50 and sit on the lawns outside the shed, soaking up sun and culture at the same time.

Tanglewood is located in Lenox in the approximate center of the Berkshire area, just about 10 miles from the New York border. Since Lenox is only a small city, this annual invasion puts somewhat of a strain on its hotel facilities, so many people have been directed to hotels in nearby towns.

The Berkshire area is only about 40 miles long and about 15 miles at its widest point, so no one is ever too far from Lenox. And for those who can't find rooms at the resorts, hotels, motels or inns somewhere in the area, there are a number of private home owners who will take guests for several days at a time.

While the Boston Symphony has, by itself, proven a tremendous attraction to visitors to this area, it is far from the only attraction. For about 100 years tourists have been coming here in the summer months. In the 19th Century such literary figures as Nathaniel Hawthorne, Herman Melville, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, Oliver Wendell Holmes and William Cullen Bryant called this area home—at least part of the time.

It was at Tanglewood, at what is presently the festival grounds, that Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and worked, and it was here that he was inspired to write his "Tanglewood Tales." Hawthorne Cottage, where he lived, was destroyed by fire in 1891, and has since been rebuilt. It is now used as a music studio, but the curious may wander through the restored cottage before each concert.

Scenic Splendor

So, because this area has attracted so many varied people for so many years, I drove to the Berkshires to sample what there was to offer, and am now ready to report that I am entranced by what I have viewed so far. The clear, crisp mountain air, spiced with the smell of fresh-cut grass, the calm beauty of the dozen or more lakes ideal for bathing or boating, lovely woodland trails where tree branches form a natural green ceiling and an unhurried and peaceful way of life are just a few of the attractions that make this area unusual.

In addition, in keeping with the sturdy New England character of the state, there are no idle moments for visitors who like to keep busy. Entertainment programs of one kind or another are featured nightly, while days may be taken up with the usual tourist pursuits of swimming, golfing, hiking, sunbathing and sightseeing.

Bracing Atmosphere

Accompanied by friends, I drove here over the New York Thruway, turning off at the Berkshire extension just below Albany to the state line exit B-3. Thruway tolls came to $2.80, then it was 25 cents more to the Lee exit of the Massachusetts Turnpike. From there it was about six miles to Lenox, then another six to Pittsfield, where we put up at the Wendell-Sherwood Hotel (single rates start at $7.75 per night, double at $12.75, two-day minimum stay required during July and August).

The days have been long and pleasant so far, and the air so

(Continued on page 28 col. 1)

TRAVEL

Hills Are Alive With The Sound of Music

Veteran dancer Ted Shawn demonstrates for students on spacious grounds of Jacob's Pillow, near Berkshire town of Lee.

(Continued from page 23)

invigorating that we have spent all our time wandering around sightseeing and exploring instead of lazing beside a pool.

In the past few days, we have been to Williamstown, at the northern corner of the state, site of Williams College and the Williamstown Summer Theatre, which gives summer stock presentations nightly except Sunday and Monday.

We stopped at North Adams, where we took the summit road just south of town to the top of Mount Greylock to see the 100-foot War Memorial Beacon, drove down to Adams to peek in at the birthplace of that pioneer suffragette, Susan B. Anthony.

Folk, Jazz Concerts

The southern section of the Berkshires has Stockbridge, where another playhouse operates nightly with stock companies of Broadway shows, and also the Chesterwood studio of sculptor Daniel Chester French. For a 50-cent admission charge (children under 12, 25 cents), sightseers can look at plaster casts of French's designs for the statue of Lincoln in the Lincoln Memorial at Washington, D. C., and the Minute Man statue now in Concord, Mass.

In Lee, we drove out to Jacob's Pillow, where devotees of the dance gather to watch famous ballet and modern dance stylists perform, then moved further south to Great Barrington, where the annual Barrington Fair is held in September. We were too early.

Back in Lenox, we parked the car and went walking. We walked toward the lake, and discovered en route that we were passing near another famous attraction of the town—the Music Barn, where a series of folk and jazz concerts are held on Wednesdays, Saturdays and Sundays throughout the summer.

Tourists coming to this section should have confirmed reservations to be assured of a place to sleep. The Berkshire Hills Conference in Pittsfield (phone Hillcrest 3-4431 or 4432) will help tourists in finding accommodations for stays of more than one night. Shorter stays may be arranged on arrival through the local information bureaus of Pittsfield, Lee, Lenox, Stockbridge, Great Barrington, North Adams and Williamstown.

From New York City, there are a number of bus tours to the area, sponsored by Casser Tours, 201 W. 41st St., and by Ski Bird Tours, 2039 Broadway. Casser has a two-day all-expense trip for $25.45 (except meals) and the Ski Bird Tours range from one to three days, from $8.95 to $33.25, and include accommodations, tips, taxes and sightseenig.

A "Music Sunday" package excursion leaves aboard New Haven Railroad trains on Sunday mornings for $8.75, which includes transportation, general admission to Tanglewood and taxes.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Farmington Valley Herald
SIMSBURY, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,678
AUG 3 1961

Viola Concert

JOSEPH de Pasquale, principal viola of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be heard as soloist in a performance of the Bartok Viola Concerto Sunday afternoon at 2:30 at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

This program will close the fifth week of the Berkshire Festival.

Susan Mahoney

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 22 1961

Tanglewood Notes

On Aug. 5, the Boston Symphony's concert includes Prokofiev's Second Piano Concerto. Originally Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer was scheduled to be soloist, but she recently had to cancel her performance. Rather than seek another outside performer, Dr. Munch chose Joseph Silverstein, a regular member of the Symphony, to be soloist. Last fall, Mr. Silverstein won the Naumburg award, one of the most valuable in music competition. Its total value is in the neighborhood of $25,000.

* * *

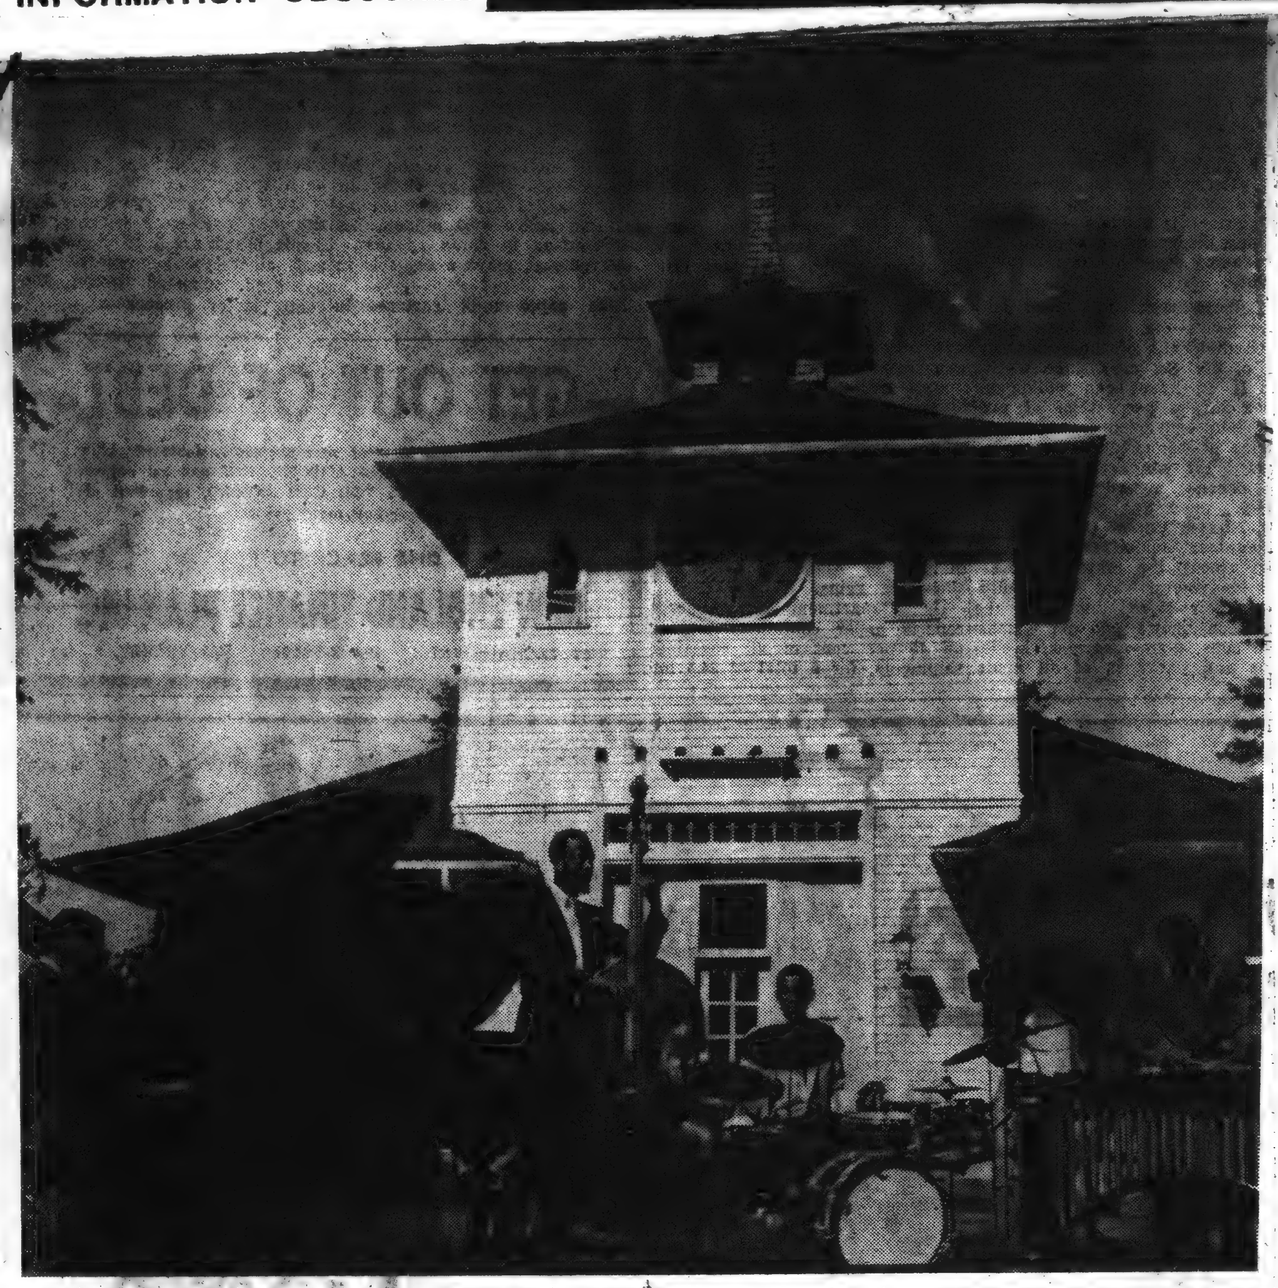
The Boston Pops at Tanglewood will be on Aug. 3 this year. In past years, Arthur Fiedler, who conducts both the Boston and the San Francisco pops orchestras, has had to fly in about two hours before the performance, conduct, and then fly out to the West Coast immediately after the concert. This year, however, perhaps as a reward for his eleventh consecutive season with the San Francisco Orchestra, he is able to take a few days off, and he plans to fly to Boston on July 31 to take in the All-Star baseball game. He won't have a complete vacation, however: he has agreed to conduct the Star-Spangled Banner before the ball game.

The Pops concert this year, by the way, will not be the same as the identical Gershwin programs Fiedler has conducted for the past two seasons. This year, he will play everything from Tschaikovsky to the "The Music Man."

—Jonathan Middlebrook

INFORMATION OBSCURED

14



WHERE ART AND NATURE MEET. Berkshire County, Massachusetts is the place where culture vultures can have their art and their outdoors at the same time as is demonstrated in this photograph. Shown here outside the Berkshire Music Barn in Lenox, excellent showcase for jazz and folk music, are members of the Modern Jazz Quartet, left to right, John Lewis at piano; Percy Heath, bass; Connie Kay, drums; and Milt Jackson, vibes. Note the horse grazing peacefully behind Jackson. See what we mean?

Muic, Drama, Dance

Treasures of Culture Abound in Berkshires

By GUSTAVE JACOBSON

Culture vultures (to borrow a phrase) who with to combine great outdoor living with some of the finest presentations in music, drama and dance will find the answer to their quest in the Berkshire Hills of Massachusetts.

Prospectors for "das Kultur" are apt to reap as many treasures in the hills of Western Massachusetts in a sense as did the pioneers in the California mountains in 1848.

Nowhere else in the United States is there a natural spot that combines so much Brahms with antique bedsteads, jazz with junipers, ballet with blueberries and Shakespeare with swimming.

The only other place that comes to mind is Aspen, Colorado, but of course for economy's sake I will not recommend a trek that far west.

Cool Stuff

For example, this past Saturday if you were in the Berkshires you could have seen and heard that marvelous Sapnish guitarist, Carlos Montoya at the Berkshire Music Barn — that reconverted ice house which how houses another kind of cool stuff — jazz.

In the evening about a mile away from the Music Barn Dr. Charles Munch led the Boston Symphony Orchestra through Variations on a Theme by Haydn, Violin Concerto No. 2 by Prokofieff and Franck's Symphony in the large pie-shaped building known simply as the shed.

If you prefer chamber to symphonic musical fare then a trip to the Red Fox Music Barn that same evening would have revealed for you works by Brahms, Mendelsohn, Weber, Hindemith and Loeillet.

For the Dancers

The common use of the word "barn" in the proper name of buildings which house cultural attractions is another example of the mixing of sophistication and rusticity in the westernmost county of the state.

On Saturday dance enthusiasts could have seen at Jacob's Pillow Myra Finch and company, Jean Leon Destine and company and Alphonse Cimber, drummer.

Of summer theaters in that area, unreservedly, I point to the Adams Memorial Theater in Williamstown as one of the finest on the eastern seaboard — both with regards to physical facilities and also the creative forces at work within that particular group. More about that later.

All of these attractions and many more — all by the way under separate management and ownership — are within an hour's drive of each other at the most. If you rule out Williamstown in Northern Berkshire, the rest are within a half hour's drive of one another.

Two weekends ago my wife and I, W.C. (without children) set out for the Berkshires.

Direct Route

The hour being late on Friday afternoon we selected the Massachusetts Turnpike as the swiftest and most direct route to reach Lenox.

The reason for the haste on the out-bound journey was the appearance of the outstanding American composer Aaron Copland, conducting two of his own works that evening at Tanglewood.

Copland led the Boston orchestra through exciting and tight-knit performances of his Preamble for a Solemn Occasion and the music for the Americana ballet, Appalachian Spring.

The second half of the program Dr. Munch, the orchestra's regular conductor, was at the helm during a performance of Daphnis et Chloe.

The following evening Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, made his first guest appearance on the Tanglewood podium.

Attleboro Reunion

The intermission period Saturday evening was a little like an Attleboro reunion. We had the opportunity to speak with violinist Sheldon Rotenberg of Attleboro.

Rotenberg, who is a member of the excellent string section of the Boston orchestra, said he missed Attleboro and added he hoped to renew acquaintances with his Attleboro friends after the Tanglewood season ends on Aug. 21.

The Music Barn is operated by perhaps the most dedicated people in the jazz field today — Phil and Stephanie Barber.

An entire evening is devoted to one performer at the barn contrary to the multiple acts which appear at most jazz festivals. The school of jazz is an adjunct of the barn's operations.

Advantages

The advantages of the theater in Williamstown compared to the tents of the straw hat trail are many.

First, the theater is located in a permanent brick building on the Williams College campus with plenty of space and equipment for a variety of productions.

Second, it is air conditioned. That is almost enough to place it in a class by itself compared to some of the sweltering tents used by other theatrical groups. Also summer thunderstorms are no competition for the Williamstown theater.

But more important than the physical plant are the human resources of the Williamstown theater.

Chief of these is Nikos Psacaropoulos, executive director of the

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 10,542
AUG 8 1961

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN
To Offer Violin Solo

Silverstein To Perform at Tanglewood

Violinist Joseph Silverstein, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1955, will be soloist with Charles Munch and the orchestra at the Berkshire Festival concert at Tanglewood Aug. 5.

* * *

HE WILL APPEAR instead of pianist Nicale Henriot-Schweitzer who was scheduled to perform but who has had to cancel her appearance because of illness.

The revised program will consist of Prokofiev's "Violin Concerto number 2" plus the Brahms' "Variations on a Theme by Haydn" and the Symphony by Franck.

Silverstein has previously appeared as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston, New York and at Tanglewood. He won the Walter W. Naumburg Foundation Award in 1960 and was the only American to place in the 1959 Queen Elizabeth of Belgium International Music competition.

Silverstein was heard in this city in a program at the General Electric Co. research laboratory on April 7 under the sponsorship of the Whitney Club.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
JUL 25 1961

Program Change At Tanglewood

Violinist Joseph Silverstein will be soloist with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the orchestra's ~~Berkshire~~ Festival concert at Tanglewood Saturday evening, Aug. 5. Mr. Silverstein will appear instead of pianist Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer who was scheduled to perform but who has had to cancel her appearance because of illness.

The revised program, to be conducted by Charles Munch, will consist of Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 plus Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn and the Symphony by Franck.

A member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1955, Mr. Silverstein has previously appeared as soloist with the orchestra in Boston, New York and at Tanglewood. Mr. Silverstein won the Walter W. Naumburg Foundation Award in 1960 and was the only American to place in the 1959 Queen Elisabeth of Belgium International Music Competition.

Record
WEST SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 3,143
JUL 27 1961

R Dept. Plans anglewood Bus Trip On Aug. 5

The Park and Recreation Dept. is sponsoring a chartered bus trip to Tanglewood in Lenox on Saturday, Aug. 5, for children and adults to attend a morning rehearsal of the Boston Symphony and an afternoon concert by the Tanglewood Summer Music School students.

The bus will leave the Cen-

Continued on Page Eight

P&R Dept. T...

...from Page One

...round in back of the ...ll at 8 a.m. The total cost ... the round trip, including concert admissions, will be $2.50 for children and $3.50 for adults. It is suggested that each person take a picnic lunch, although there is a cafeteria at Tanglewood for those who prefer it. In addition to the two concerts, the trip includes a guided tour of the grounds.

The bus will depart from Tanglewood at 4:30 in the afternoon and arrive back at the Center Playground about an hour later.

Children must have permission slips signed by their parents and give them, with their money covering the trip to their playground director or the P & R office in the Town Hall prior to noon of Aug. 3.

141

Theatre - Concert Hall — Tanglewood

SEVEN CONCERTS OF CHAMBER MUSIC

Wednesday Evenings at 8:30

August 2

The Boston Fine Arts String Quartet
assisted by
Joseph de Pasquale, Viola

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
CHARLES MUNCH
Music Director

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL 1961

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545

AUG 1 1961

Whitestone Photo

The Boston Fine Arts Quartet, all of whom are members of the Boston Symphony, with Joseph de Pasquale, who will join them for a Mozart Quintet program at Tanglewood tomorrow night. They will play three quintets in the Theater-Concert Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

AUG 1 1961

Boston Fine Arts Quartet To Play Tomorrow Night

The fifth concert of the Berkshire Festival's chamber music series will be performed by the Boston Fine Arts Quartet with Joseph de Pasquale in the Tanglewood Theater Wednesday evening at 8:30. The quartet—consisting of four members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra: Joseph Silverstein, Harry Dickson, Eugen Lehner and Richard Kapuscinski—and Mr. de Pasquale will perform the Quintets in C minor (K. 406), D major (K. 593), and E-flat major (K. 614) by Mozart.

Members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to the following events at Tanglewood this week: Tonight, 8:30 p.m., in the theater-concert hall, the Tanglewood Choir; Friday, 3:15 p.m., in the chamber music hall, Seminar in Contemporary Music; Saturday, 3 p.m., in the Music Shed, the Berkshire Music Center orchestra; and Sunday, 10 a.m. in the chamber music hall, Berkshire Music Center chamber music.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263

AUG 3 1961

MOZART WORKS ARE PRESENTED IN TANGLEWOOD

Boston Fine Arts Quartet, Violist De Pasquale Hailed by Critic

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—When five superb musicians get together to make beautiful music something very fine is liable to result.

Assisted by Violist

It did Wednesday night during a chamber music concert played by the Boston Fine Arts Quartet, assisted by Joseph de Pasquale, violist. The members of the quartet were Joseph Silverstein, violin; Harry Dickson, violin; Eugene Lehne, viola; and Richard Kapuscinski, cello. The program was made up of three string quartets by Mozart, the C Minor, D Major and E-flat Major.

Three quintets can make for laborious listening, but not when they are filled with the magic of the Mozart melodies and the skillful rhythms of which he was a master. One was also aware of the fact that the quintet was having as good a time playing this music as the audience was while listening.

The Boston Fine Arts string quartet and its distinguished guest was by far the best ensemble to come out of Boston that we have heard here in years. Joseph Silverstein, who will be heard as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a superb first violinist. His tone is finely colored and he brings rhythmic strength to the ensemble.

Also outstanding was the four-square, finely integrated playing by cellist Kapuscinski. The ensemble seemed to us to be admirable, the result of close association and hard work. How much time the busy members of the Boston Orchestra have to get together, we do not know, but such admirable musicians know how to make the most of every minute.

The three quintets, though modeled similarly, are vastly different in melodic content. There are lovely slow movements and rollicking finales. These quintets are among the aristocrats on the chamber music repertoire. It was in that spirit they were played.

There are two more chamber concerts. On Aug. 9, the Kroll String Quartet will be heard. The final concert of the series will be played Aug. 16 when Claudio Arrau will play a program of the music of Franz Liszt.

Theatre - Concert Hall — Tanglewood

SEVEN CONCERTS OF CHAMBER MUSIC

Wednesday Evenings at 8:30

August 2

The Boston Fine Arts String Quartet

assisted by

Joseph de Pasquale, Viola

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
CHARLES MUNCH
Music Director

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL 1961

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
AUG 3 1961

MOZART WORKS ARE PRESENTED IN TANGLEWOOD

Boston Fine Arts Quartet, Violist De Pasquale Hailed by Critic

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—When five superb musicians get together to make beautiful music something very fine is liable to result.

Assisted by Violist

It did Wednesday night during a chamber music concert played by the Boston Fine Arts Quartet, assisted by Joseph de Pasquale, violist. The members of the quartet were Joseph Silverstein, violin; Harry Dickson, violin; Eugene Lehne, viola; and Richard Kapuscinski, cello. The program was made up of three string quartets by Mozart, the C Minor, D Major and E-flat Major.

Three quintets can make for laborious listening, but not when they are filled with the magic of the Mozart melodies and the skillful rhythms of which he was a master. One was also aware of the fact that the quintet was having as good a time playing this music as the audience was while listening.

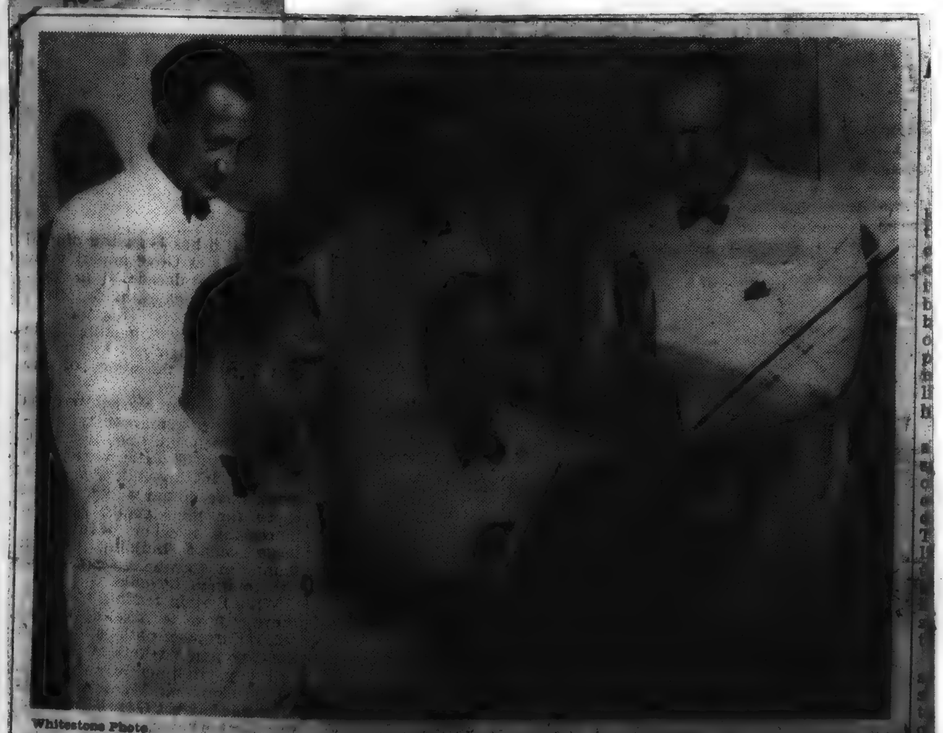
The Boston Fine Arts string quartet and its distinguished guest was by far the best ensemble to come out of Boston that we have heard here in years. Joseph Silverstein, who will be heard as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a superb first violinist. His tone is finely colored and he brings rhythmic strength to the ensemble.

Also outstanding was the four-square, finely integrated playing by cellist Kapuscinski. The ensemble seemed to us to be admirable, the result of close association and hard work. How much time the busy members of the Boston Orchestra have to get together, we do not know, but such admirable musicians know how to make the most of every minute.

The three quintets, though modeled similarly, are vastly different in melodic content. There are lovely slow movements and rollicking finales. These quintets are among the aristocrats on the chamber music repertoire. It was in that spirit they were played.

There are two more chamber concerts. On Aug. 9, the Kroll String Quartet will be heard. The final concert of the series will be played Aug. 16 when Claudio Arrau will play a program of the music of Franz Liszt.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
AUG 1 1961



Whitestone Photo.

The Boston Fine Arts Quartet, all of whom are members of the Boston Symphony, with Joseph de Pasquale, who will join them for a Mozart Quintet program at Tanglewood tomorrow night. They will play three quintets in the Theater-Concert Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 1 1961

Boston Fine Arts Quartet To Play Tomorrow Night

The fifth concert of the Berkshire Festival's chamber music series will be performed by the Boston Fine Arts Quartet with Joseph de Pasquale in the Tanglewood Theater Wednesday evening at 8:30. The quartet—consisting of four members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra: Joseph Silverstein, Harry Dickson, Eugen Lehner and Richard Kapuscinski—and Mr. de Pasquale will perform the Quintets in C minor (K. 406), D major (K. 593), and E-flat major (K. 614) by Mozart.

Members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to the following events at Tanglewood this week: Tonight, 8:30 p.m., in the theater-concert hall, the Tanglewood Choir; Friday, 3:15 p.m., in the chamber music hall, Seminar in Contemporary Music; Saturday, 2 p.m., in the Music Shed, the Berkshire Music Center orchestra; and Sunday, 10 a.m. in the chamber music hall, Berkshire Music Center chamber music.

MOZART'S STRING QUINTETS

Mozart wrote his last two string quartets in 1790, and his last string quintet (in E flat) in April, 1791, eight months before his death. In this sense, the four great string quintets of the last years became in their pure and developed form an amplification of the time-tried string quartets, the form he had begun to work upon in his sixteenth year. The last string quintets can thus be looked upon as an enlargement of the well-worked voice group by the addition of a second viola. The quintet in D major (1790) and the final one in E flat, both played at this concert, were his last chamber works.* The String Quintet in C minor was a transcription, made in 1787, of the Serenade for eight winds, of 1782. This work in its original form was performed at the Festival concerts of this season (July 14).

Mozart, at the top of his powers in his last five years, thus demonstrated the possibilities of this combination in superlative music by no means second to the quartets. The quintets can be considered from their character as having sprung from an entirely personal and individual impulse. There is no particular evidence of "influences" in them, either from Boccherini—who had the monopoly of the combination, leaving 125—from Michael Haydn, whose ventures were earlier and rudimentary, or from Michael's illustrious brother who did not compose so many as one. Mozart's impulse is understandable. Having developed his quartets to a supreme point of rich four-part writing, the next challenge was to handle five voices with equal mastery. Mozart did not use a second cello, as Boccherini did, or as Schubert would later in his C major masterpiece, but preferred a second viola. The dark, almost nasal quality of the two violas gives a special, often somber color to the quintets in general. Sometimes the composer divides his group into antiphonal trios—two violins and first viola against the two violas and cello, the first viola thus serving in both. This kind of division was not possible in a quartet, where any breakdown resolves into individual voices. Here the first viola as leader of the lower group takes an important melodic function to balance the first violin. The second viola does not simply double the cello, but is more often an additional inner voice. Generally speaking, a single melodic voice, wherever it may be, is assured a balanced four-part harmony. The combined five voices can give a tonal amplitude approaching chamber orchestra sonority. That it is richer than a quartet sonority does not mean that it is preferable. A certain clarity, a structural transparency in the quartet, a sense of every individual voice, is sometimes sacrificed. It is a matter of choice between works of equal beauty at the ripest point of Mozart's chamber style. The quintets are far too infrequently performed in public for the obvious reason that a professional quartet group can far more easily choose from the wealth of the ten last quartets than go to the trouble

*They were preceded by the Quintet in C, K., 515, and in G minor, K. 516, both of 1787.

FIFTH CONCERT OF THE CHAMBER MUSIC SERIES

The Boston Fine Arts String Quartet

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN, Violin
HARRY DICKSON, Violin
EUGEN LEHNER, Viola
RICHARD KAPUSCINSKI, Cello

assisted by

JOSEPH DE PASQUALE, Viola

PROGRAM

MOZART — Quintet in C minor, K. 406

I. Allegro
II. Andante
III. Menuetto in canone
IV. Allegro

MOZART — Quintet in D Major, K. 593

I. Larghetto; Allegro
II. Adagio
III. Menuetto: Allegretto
IV. Allegro

INTERMISSION

MOZART — Quintet in E-flat Major, K. 614

I. Allegro di molto
II. Andante
III. Menuetto: Allegretto
IV. Allegro

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
AUG 3 1961

MOZART WORKS ARE PRESENTED IN TANGLEWOOD

Boston Fine Arts Quartet, Violist De Pasquale Hailed by Critic

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—When five superb musicians get together to make beautiful music something very fine is liable to result.

Assisted by Violist

It did Wednesday night during a chamber music concert played by the Boston Fine Arts Quartet, assisted by Joseph de Pasquale, violist. The members of the quartet were Joseph Silverstein, violin; Harry Dickson, violin; Eugene Lehne, viola; and Richard Kapuscinski, cello. The program was made up of three string quartets by Mozart, the C Minor, D Major and E-flat Major.

Three quintets can make for laborious listening, but not when they are filled with the magic of the Mozart melodies and the skillful rhythms of which he was a master. One was also aware of the fact that the quintet was having as good a time playing this music as the audience was while listening.

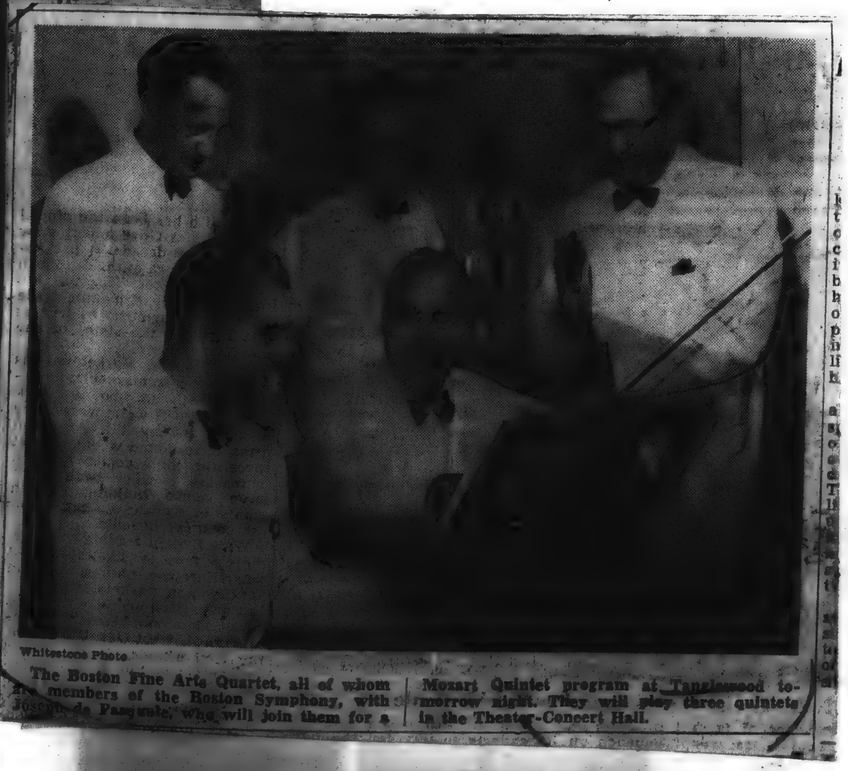
The Boston Fine Arts string quartet and its distinguished guest was by far the best ensemble to come out of Boston that we have heard here in years. Joseph Silverstein, who will be heard as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a superb first violinist. His tone is finely colored and he brings rhythmic strength to the ensemble.

Also outstanding was the four-square, finely integrated playing by cellist Kapuscinski. The ensemble seemed to us to be admirable, the result of close association and hard work. How much time the busy members of the Boston Orchestra have to get together, we do not know, but such admirable musicians know how to make the most of every minute.

The three quintets, though modeled similarly, are vastly different in melodic content. There are lovely slow movements and rollicking finales. These quintets are among the aristocrats on the chamber music repertoire. It was in that spirit they were played.

There are two more chamber concerts. On Aug. 9, the Kroll String Quartet will be heard. The final concert of the series will be played Aug. 16 when Claudio Arrau will play a program of the music of Franz Liszt.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
AUG 1 1961



Whitestone Photo

The Boston Fine Arts Quartet, all of whom are members of the Boston Symphony, with Joseph de Pasquale, who will join them for a Mozart Quintet program at Tanglewood tomorrow night. They will play three quintets in the Theater-Concert Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 1 1961

Boston Fine Arts Quartet To Play Tomorrow Night

The fifth concert of the Berkshire Festival's chamber music series will be performed by the Boston Fine Arts Quartet with Joseph de Pasquale in the Tanglewood Theater Wednesday evening at 8:30. The quartet—consisting of four members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra: Joseph Silverstein, Harry Dickson, Eugen Lehner and Richard Kapuscinski—and Mr. de Pasquale will perform the Quintets in C minor (K. 406), D major (K. 593), and E-flat major (K. 614) by Mozart.

Members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to the following events at Tanglewood this week: Tonight, 8:30 p.m., in the theater-concert hall, the Tanglewood Choir; Friday, 3:15 p.m., in the chamber music hall, Seminar in Contemporary Music; Saturday, 2 p.m., in the Music Shed, the Berkshire Music Center orchestra; and Sunday, 10 a.m. in the chamber music hall, Berkshire Music Center chamber music.

142

Tanglewood on Parade - Aug. 3 -

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 4 1961

Tanglewood Pops' Draws Crowd of 10,799

Music Center Benefit Fund To Get $25,000

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

Last night the Boston Pops Orchestra, with Arthur Fiedler as conductor, played what has happily come to be one of the most anticipated events in the Tanglewood calendar. A crowd of 10,799 including all the children in the summer camps from miles around, came in carnival spirit, to hear the lively program the arbiter of popular music had prepared. The Berkshire Music Center benefited in an amount in excess of $25,000.

No matter what we understand by the word "popular," it seems, so far as music is concerned, that what it pleases Fiedler to play is automatically accepted in that category. The music he chooses is almost unfailingly tuneful and gay, or, at least, animated, and he leads his men, which includes 94 per cent of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with brisk dispatch and sure control. No one achieves such professional standards with less flurry and to-do.

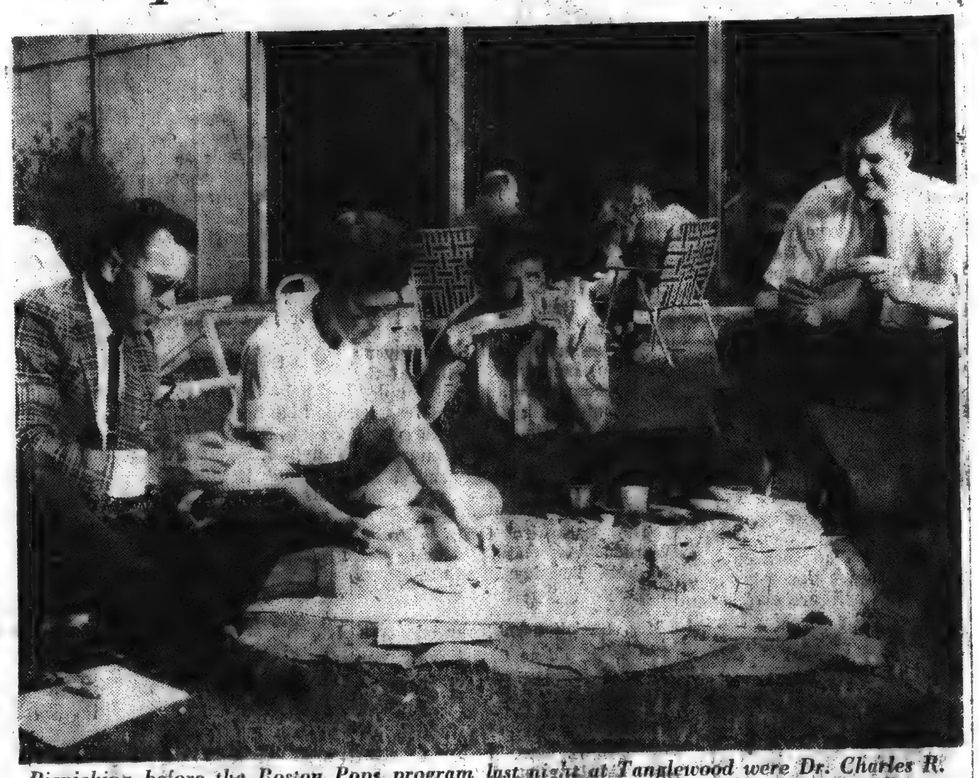
Short Favorites

He always adds to his printed list the shorter favorites, which we all devour like hungry wolves, but his announced programs gradually have changed to include much that the composers did not intend to be popular, if by that term there is understood an element of passing approval. It can not be known just how long any composer expected his brainchildren to endure, but the inclusion of "the" Tchaigkowsky concert on a Pops program indicates a change in public taste, to say nothing of Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance," Ambroise Thomas' overture to "Mignon" (on the occasion of the anniversary of his birthday 150 years ago: (Aug. 5th, 1811), the "Emperor Waltzes" of Strauss, Offenbach's "Gaieté Parisienne" suite, and, for a grand finale, selections from Bernstein's "West Side Story" and "76 Trombones" from Willson's "Music Man."

Wild Soloist

Earl Wild was the soloist in the piano concerto and any idea that he may have been selected for any attribute except genuine, thorough ability and command should be dispelled. Wild has been heard at Tanglewood several times before and always on "Pops" nights, but his insight and execution of Gershwin on previous years and of Tchaikowsky last night show him to be an artist worthy of the highest regard.

For some reason "Pops" audienecs are a trifle less reverent than regular symphony patrons, and Fiedler had to devote an extra moment at the beginning of several numbers before quiet prevailed. But under the guise of high entertainment there is consistent and outstanding musical performance, which both delight and satisfy large audiences.



Picnicking before the Boston Pops program last night at Tanglewood were Dr. Charles R. Chartier, left, and his wife, second from right, and Mr. and Mrs. Gene S. Bradley, Pittsfield.

photos by Plouffe

Miss Christina Stockenberg of Stockholm, spending two months in the U.S. under the Experiment in International Living, receives a program from Miss Roberta Freadman of 106 Brown St. With them are Mr. and Mrs. Robert K. Wheeler of Great Barrington, with whom Miss Stockenberg, a drama student, is spending 10 days. Looking on is Chauncey P. Smith of State Line. A total of 10,799 attended and $25,000 was realized for benefit of Music Center.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
AUG 4 1961

...D, MASS., FRIDAY,

YOUNG PEOPLE ATTRACTED TO POPS CONCERT

Fiedler Leads Orchestra In Familiar Works at Tanglewood

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — When I arrived on the Tanglewood grounds Thursday evening, I thought for a moment I had arrived at the wrong place. The grounds were crowded with children of all sizes and ages, all screaming at the top of their voices. Then I realized that the Boston Pops and Arthur Fiedler were on hand to give a concert for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

Attracts Huge Audience

The Pops attracts a huge, young audience wherever it plays and the many summer camps in this vicinity had apparently disgorged their entire memberships on the grounds of Tanglewood. It wasn't too bad. There was applause in the wrong places and a constant undercurrent of talk throughout the program, but all were having a fine time.

Arthur Fiedler knows how to design a program and how to get the most out of the music he conducts. Some things come off superbly, as for example, the overture to "Mignon," the "Emperor Waltzes" by Strauss and particularly the suite from "Gaite Parisienne" which closed the first portion of the program.

These all too often heard pieces are often heard because they have melody and rhythm which appeals to almost everyone. Fiedler is past master in bringing their essence to his listeners.

Imposing Figure

Earl Wild was the guest artist Thursday night playing the Tschaikowsky "Concerto in B Flat Minor, No. 1." Mr. Wild is an imposing figure, more like a football hero than pianist. His whiting hair glistened under the lights as he plowed his way through this thrice familiar concerto.

It was not a faultless performance. There were some exacting passages excitingly played, but there were also numerous strangely placed retards and sudden changes of contour. Mr. Fiedler offered his soloist every consideration but the sum total of the performance was not one to leave undying memories for the listener. Of course, the performance was greeted with roars of applause and this resulted in much walking for both pianist and conductor.

Mr. Fiedler has learned to keep what the audience really wants until the last. This time it was excerpts from Bernstein's score of "West Side Story." The program proper concluded with "76 Trombones" from "The Music Man." Bernstein's score has imperishable melodies and when they were drawn out and sweetened in the Fiedler manner they made fine listening.

Audience Happy

However, the program proper was followed by such aristocrats of the popular field as "Mack the Knife," "Never On Sunday," "Tiger Rag" and others. The audience went home happy.

The box office receipts of $25,000 from 10,799 patrons were particularly important since they benefited the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's summer school of music.

Pops Orchestra To Play at Lenox 7/24/61

Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the world-renowned Boston Pops Orchestra, today announced the program for the Aug. 3 appearance of the orchestra at the Berkshire Music Festival in Lenox.

The special program, to benefit the Berkshire Music Center, will open with "Elgar's Pomp and Circumstance, followed by the overture to Mignon by Thomas, Strauss's Emporer Waltzes, the suite from Offenbach's Gaite Parisienne, Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto in B-flat minor with pianist Earl Wild as soloist and selections from the Broadway musicals, West Side Story and Music Man.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 19 1961

Few Seats Remain For Women's Club Tanglewood Party

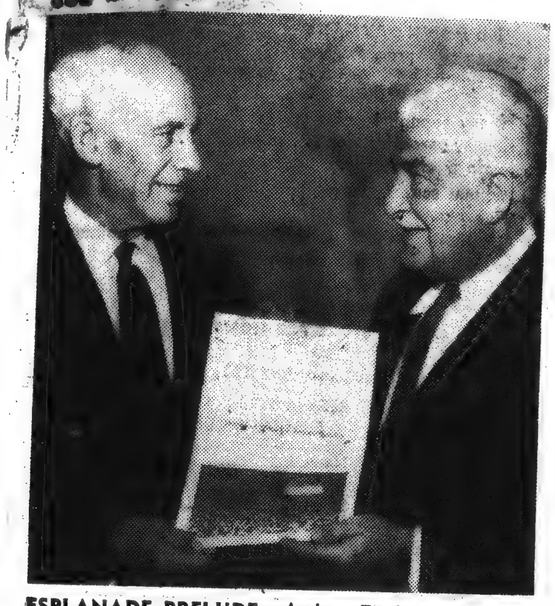
Mrs. Henry G. Horn, chairman of the Women's Club summer theater parties, announced today that only a few seats are left for Tanglewood on Parade, featuring the Boston Pop Orchestra, on Aug. 3.

A box lunch will be ready at the club for those attending. Seats that have been purchased for members are to be picked up by Saturday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

JUL 2 1961



ESPLANADE PRELUDE—Arthur Fiedler, left, conductor of Esplanade Concerts, presents citation to Byron K. Elliott, president of John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co., in appreciation for sponsorship.

News (e)
FRAMINGHAM, Mass.
Circ. 13,754

JUL 19 1961

Fiedler and Pops At Tanglewood

Arthur Fiedler, whose appearance at Tanglewood on Thursday, Aug. 3, is eagerly awaited by thousands of Fiedler-Fans, has just announced his program for the Tanglewood concert.

The special program — to benefit the Berkshire Music Center — will open with Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance," followed by the Overture to "Mignon" by Thomas, Strauss' beloved "Emperor" Waltzes and the suite from Offenbach's "Gaite Parisienne"; Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto in B-flat minor with pianist Earl Wild as soloist, and selections from the Broadway musicals "West Side Story" and "Music Man."

Tickets for Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops at Tanglewood will be available at the Berkshire Festival ticket office, Tanglewood, Lenox, beginning at 9 a. m. Monday, July 24.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
JUL 17 1961

Arthur Fiedler Slated To Appear At Tanglewood

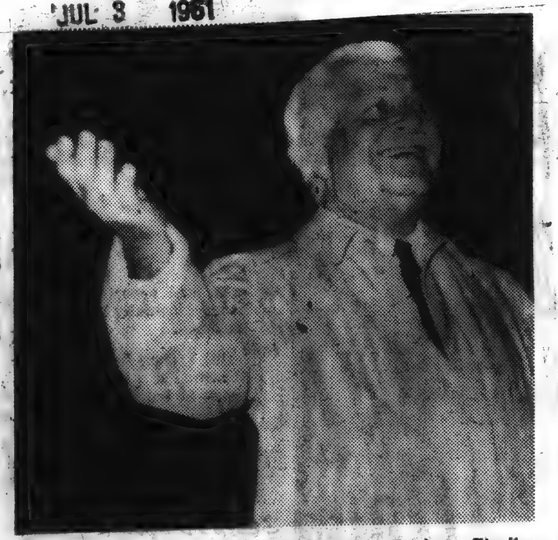
Arthur Fiedler, whose appearance at Tanglewood on Thursday, Aug. 3, is eagerly awaited by thousands of Fiedler-Fans, has announced his program for the concert.

The special program — to benefit the Berkshire Music Center—will open with Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance," followed by the Overture to "Mignon" by Thomas, Strauss' beloved "Emperor" Waltzes and the suite from Offenbach's "Gaite Parisienne"; Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto in B-flat minor with pianist Earl Wild as soloist, and selections from the Broadway musicals "West Side Story" and "Music Man."

Tickets for Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops at Tanglewood will be on sale at the Berkshire Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, beginning 9 a.m. July 24.

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783

JUL 3 1961



RAIN-SPATTERED CONDUCTOR—Arthur Fiedler sends music lovers home as rain squalls cancel opening performance of Boston Pops Orchestra Esplanade concert.

FIRST NIGHTERS Jay Alexander and Barbara Kesselman of Cambridge wait in vain for Pops musicians to unlimber their instruments. Rain washed out opening night at Hatch Memorial Shell.

144

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,783
JUL 4 1961

Music:

Earl Wild Soloist In Benefit Concert

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The Benefit Concert given last night at Tanglewood by the Boston Pops Orchestra, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, was a whopping success, musically and financially.

Earl Wild was soloist in Tchaikovsky's battered, but still throbbing, Piano Concerto in B-flat Minor.

Box-office receipts of $25,000 from 10,799 patrons were particularly important, since they benefited the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's summer school of music.

Neither Fiedler nor his workmanship are particularly impressive. Maybe the magnetism is his "Ground-roots" style with a baton. Only in the Tchaikovsky concerto did last night's audience settle down to be uplifted. The rise wasn't very high, but we'll talk about that later.

Sure Fire Program

Fiedler assembled a program that couldn't miss. Biggest item for the orchestra was a suite from "Gaite Parisienne," Offenbach music transcribed. Garnishings were Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance," the overture from Thomas' opera, "Mignon," Strauss' "Emperor Waltzes," Selections from Bernstein's "West Side Story," and "76 Trombones" from "Music Man," by Willson.

In case you don't know, all Boston Pops players are members of the Boston Symphony. These men don't get out of practice, especially now that the Berkshire Music Festival is moving into its fifth weekend.

Last night's program was in the nature of a recess, but it didn't sound so. Offenbach's music was played to the hilt, though Fiedler didn't contribute much beyond sturdy downbeats and keeping rhythms in order. The overture, polka, galop, march, waltz, can-can and finale all came out as beautiful examples of their kind.

Pomp and Panoply

Fiedler took the Elgar march title literally. It opened the program with all the aplomb of an important event. No high school class ever was graduated to such brass.

The "Mignon" overture received a nice, unhampered performance. The accent was on soulful melody-making in the strings. A "Polonaise" that really rocked and fine solos in clarinet and harp.

Wild hit his Tanglewood stride with the Pops during the past two summers when he played Gershwin's Concerto in F and the "Rhapsody in Blue." He was temperamentally suited to these and had the technical wherewith all to face them squarely.

Brave Approach

Last night he approached the Tchaikovsky concerto as if it were TNT. He was brave about it, but, fortunately or unfortunately, this concerto has been so well played by so many pianists that to almost conquer it is to perish.

Fiedler gave him every advantage. The sonorous orchestral opening was loaded with incentive. Wild pounced on the widespread chords with the vim of a gladiator. His technique is pretty run of the mill (which, in this day, means on the borderline of virtuosity), but the concerto needs much more than that.

Despite its grand standing drama and erotic melodies, it still can tug at the emotions. Last night's performance was for the eyes and ears, rather than for the heart.

Wild did his utmost to extract brilliance from its big moments. The sizzling first-movement cadenza didn't quite come off and what followed was some "mooning" between piano and orchestra, rather than the culmination of a stirring climax.

Monteux Tonight

Fiedler directed a sweeping performance of Strauss' "Emperor Waltz." He was content with a small beginning which blossomed into a foot-enticing dance not in the manner of a concert exhibition.

We've always felt that Bernstein's "West Side" show is better drama than music, but Fiedler made the thing uncommonly palatable by keeping the tunes out front. Willson's "76 Trombones" was, of course, a smash.

Encores were "Mack the Knife," "Never On Sunday," "Pops round-up," "Hey Look," "Tiger" and "Stars and Stripes Forever."

Tonight's Berkshire Festival concert by the Boston Symphony will be conducted by Pierre Monteux. The program: Beethoven's "Fidelio" overture, Richard Strauss' "Dance of the Seven Veils," Sibelius' Second Symphony and the Schumann Piano Concerto with Eugene Istomin as soloist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 7 1961

Campers at Tanglewood

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

I am writing to register a protest against the carnival atmosphere which has become increasingly prevalent at Tanglewood, and which reached a climax at the Boston Pops concert on Aug. 3.

I refer particularly to the campers who occupy large blocks of seats. We were unfortunate enough to be seated in front of two large groups, one of girls and the other of boys, and we certainly did not enjoy the experience. There was constant talking, laughing, rattling paper bags containing food, and endless milling around. There was no adult supervision of either group.

I cannot understand why these youngsters who are bored, restless and unappreciative should be permitted to spoil the evening for people who have come to listen to the music. Most of them are too immature to appreciate even a program of a "popular" nature such as the one Thursday night.

It seems to me that if the practice of selling blocks of seats to the camps in the area is to be continued, certain norms of dress and deportment should be established, to which they should be required to conform. Certainly these groups should have adult supervision, and should be made up of campers who are sufficiently mature to appreciate the type of music played at these concerts.

Every year, there is much publicity about the attendance figures, and much explanation if they drop below those of the previous year. In this connection it might be well to give some thought to correcting situations which are driving people away from the concerts.

MARGARET M. McSWEENEY.
46 Westwood Road,
Pittsfield.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 100,394
JUL 30 1961

MUSIC

Berlin Municipal Opera Is Opening On Sept. 24

By GORDON E. ARMSTRONG

Another "Berlin Crisis," a musical one, will have a happy ending on Sept. 24. On that date, the Berlin Municipal Opera will open its new home which will replace the one destroyed in World War II. The opening of this new opera house in West Berlin will represent something of a personal triumph for Carl Ebert, general manager of the company since 1954. However, it will be sort of a "hail and farewell" for the German impressario who will come to this country shortly after staging his favorite opera, Mozart's "Don Giovanni," for this auspicious event, which he helped to make possible.

Actually, Ebert's association with the Berlin Municipal Opera dates back to 1931. During the next two years his imaginative concepts and bold ideas were hailed by audiences and critics alike and his artistic productions added a new stature to the company. But Hitler's rise to power in 1933 put an end to all this when Ebert resigned his post as a protest against the Nazi regime and its program against the Jews, including a number of his colleagues.

The company survived the troubled years after Ebert went into his self imposed exile. After it was bombed out of its old home productions were staged in a theater on Kantstrasse. Later Berlin became "East and West" and the rivalries between the two sectors even extended into their operatic activities. When the State Opera in East Berlin seemed to be getting the better of things, the Berlin Municipal Opera decided it was time to get its former director back.

Ebert had, of course, found other fertile soil for his directing talents after leaving his Berlin post. Among the institutions which he helped to create was England's Glyndebourne Opera, now internationally famous for its productions. The great director had become an American citizen when he received and accepted the invitation to return to Berlin seven years ago. Since then he has devoted most of his spare time in directing a campaign to raise funds for building the new opera house. The successful outcome is heightened by the happy fact that it was possible to construct the Deutsche Oper Berlin, as the modern structure of marble and glass is named, on the site of the former building on Bismarckstrasse.

Though now 74, Ebert is not quite ready to retire. The Metropolitan Opera has announced that it has engaged him to restage its "Cosi fan tutte" next season and undoubtedly he will accept a limited number of similar engagements before he decides to "ring down the curtain" on an outstanding career in opera. It is known that the venerable director plans to make his permanent home in California. He lived there for some six years at the time when he headed the opera department at the University of Southern California.

FEATURES BOSTON POPS ORCHESTRA

A highlight of the Berkshire Music Festival each year is the concert by conductor Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Orchestra. That annual event comes on Thursday evening when the popular maestro will present a program typical of those which he is currently conducting with the San Francisco Symphony. Fiedler will come East just in time to conduct Thursday's festival concert and then hurry back to the West Coast to finish his annual engagement there. This is his 11th season with the San Francisco Symphony in its summer series.

Thursday's concert will highlight Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto in B-flat minor with Earl Wild as the soloist. The orchestral offerings include the following: Pomp and Circumstance—Elgar; "Mignon" Overture — Thomas; Emperor Waltzes — Strauss; "Gaite Parisienne" Suite—Offenbach; "West Side Story" Selection—Bernstein; 76 Trombones from "The Music Man"—Willson.

Pierre Monteux will make his second podium appearance of the season in Friday evening's concert. The program's feature is to be Schumann's Piano Concerto with Eugene Istomin as soloist. Also listed are Beethoven's Overture to "Fidelio," Dance from "Salome" by Strauss, and the Symphony No. 2 of Sibelius.

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

Another member of the orchestra and its principal violinist, Joseph de Pasquale, is listed as the soloist in next Sunday afternoon's concert (2:30). He will perform Bartok's Viola Concerto. The balance of the program will consist of Respighi's "The Pines of Rome" and Beethoven's Symphony No. 1.

Pasquale will also join the Boston Fine Arts Quartet for the regular chamber music program on Wednesday evening. Silverstein is the first violinist of this group which is composed of members of the Boston Symphony. Wednesday's program will present three quintets by Mozart—C minor (K. 406), D major (K. 593), and E-flat major (K. 614).

Charles Munch will conduct the other two regular weekend concerts. On Saturday evening Joseph Silverstein is to be the soloist in the Violin Concerto No. 2 by Prokofiev. Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn and the Symphony by Cesar Franck will round out the program. The Prokofiev work replaces the composer's Piano Concerto No. 2 originally scheduled for this concert with Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer in the solo role. Silverstein, a member of the Boston Symphony's string section, won the Naumberg Foundation award in 1960 and was the only American to place in the 1959 Queen Elizabeth of Belgium International Music Competition.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 3 1961

Cloudy, No Rain Is Forecast for Tanglewood Pops

Weatherman Howard Haviland of New York, who is substituting for George J. Bulgarelli at the local weather bureau, predicts partly cloudy skies and comfortable temperatures for this evening. Those planning picnics at the Tanglewood Pops may find damp grass, but no more rain is forecast. The temperature will be in the 60s.

More than half an inch of rain has fallen since yesterday, most of it between 2:30 and 3:30 this morning, but tomorrow and the next few days are supposed to be warm and sunny.

A large old maple tree beside the road near 1049 Tamarack Road was found to be down this morning. One branch fell across an overhanging wire, but no damage was done.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
AUG 3 1961

Fiedler to Conduct The Boston Pops At Tanglewood Tonight

Three Mozart string quartets, the C Minor, D Major and the E-flat Major, were played by the Boston Fine Arts Quartet at Tanglewood last night.

Tonight a capacity crowd is expected to be on hand to hear Arthur Fiedler conduct the Boston Pops.

Pierre Monteux will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow night in a varied program in the Music Shed.

It will be comprised of Beethoven's "Fidelio" Overture, a piano concerto by Schumann, Strauss' Dance from "Salome" and Symphony No. 2 by Sibelius.

Saturday night Charles Munch will return to the podium to conduct Variations on a Theme by Haydn, by Brahms; Piano Concerto No. 2, by Prokofiev with Mme. Henriot-Schweitzer as soloist, and a symphony by Franck.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 will begin the Sunday afternoon program, followed by Viola Concerto by Bartok with de Pasquale as soloist, and "The Pines of Rome," by Respighi.

The evening concerts begin at 8:30 p.m. and Sunday's concert will start at 2:30 p.m.

145

Striking a Happy Note

The Knickerbocker News Photo by Bob Paley

HI 'POPS' — Arthur Fiedler embraces his daughters, Deborah, [illegible], and Johanna, 15, who surprised their father, the conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, by meeting him at the Albany County Airport yesterday. The girls had not seen their father, who has been on tour, for over a month. Mr. Fiedler was on his way from Denver to Tanglewood to take part in a radio-television discussion tonight of "The Direction of Music in America." Deborah and Johanna came here from Boston to greet their father.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

AUG 5 1961

Tanglewood Notes

Arthur Fiedler, who made his annual Tanglewood appearance conducting last Thursday's Pops concert is a man of many interests, some non-musical. One of these non-symphonic interests is baseball, and Fiedler is more than willing to go out of his way whenever possible to see a good game. In fact, he flew in early from San Francisco, where he conducts a summer series of pops concerts with the San Francisco Symphony, so that he could attend the All-Star game at Fenway Park, Boston. As it worked out, however, he had to combine his music and baseball interests: the management heard he was coming, and asked him to conduct "The Star-Spangled Banner," before the game, which he did.

Fiedler, by the way, with all his fame gained in playing such pieces as "76 Trombones," is still listed as a member of the Boston Symphony; and he is one with many talents. He has played violin, viola, piano, celesta, and most of the other percussion instruments in the orchestra. He played with the BSO in its first recording concert in 1917.

* * *

Warm afternoons may be fine for sitting on the grass and listening to Respighi, but sunny weather is always sure to rate a few moans from the ushers on lawn duty. One of their jobs is to preserve cultural decorum by making certain that guests wear a certain minimum costume, which by custom seem to be shorts and a shirt. A bare midriff rates a request from an usher for more suitable clothing, and although most listeners will comply, a certain hard core gives the ushers difficulty. Perhaps today's ushers wouldn't feel so bad, if they could recall the proper days seven or eight years ago, when skirts were issued at the gate, and the ushers were supposed to make certain that they were worn. The only remains of that custom are 15 or so skirts, gathering dust in the attic of the main house.

* * *

While the Festival sometimes seems to be a somewhat non-Berkshire affair, featuring a symphony from Boston and catering to visitors largely from New York, the Berkshire Music Center school very definitely invites local as well as national and international people. It has scholarship students from as far away as Japan, but it also has 23 students attending the school on Berkshire Scholarships for residents of Berkshire County. The total value of this local scholarship program is $ 4,875, and since tuition for the full seven weeks at the school is $220, the average grant represents a full tuition scholarship.

* * *

This year, Tanglewood is continuing last year's policy of having two benefit nights for the school. The first was Arthur Fiedler's Pops concert. The second, on Aug. 17, will feature Aaron Copland conducting the student orchestra, chorus, and members of the opera department in scenes from his own piece, the "Tender Land." This second Music Center school benefit is called a "Gala Evening"; the gates open at three in the afternoon.

—Jonathan Middlebrook

JAMAICA, N.Y.
LONG ISLAND PRESS
D. 295,125 S. 374,507

AUG 10 1961

These Days

Its Their Music . . .Their World

By GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY

The other night I found myself surrounded by thousands of shouting, yelling, applauding, singing youngsters who were demanding more and more encores by Arthur Fiedler's Boston Pops Orchestra. It was their music, their night, their world. And it was very different.

George Sokolsky

The most exciting moment was when this magnificent symphony orchestra, somewhat augmented, played "Pop's Round-Up." Being an oldster, I thought what was to come was some kind of medley and I was not disappointed. It was a medley of the theme songs of television showsw.

The older folks could not identify the strange music which has little of Beethoven or Brahms. And I fear that some of the older folks looked down their noses at all this excitement, because at a Boston Symphony concert, or any other, one behaves according to protocol. The applause is usual and sufficient. There are no encores.

Not so on this occasion. The kids shouted the name of each theme song; they applauded during the playing; they even sang the songs.. They had a grand time and any old man or woman who could not cheer along with his grandchildren should admit thgat he has had it and retire to such memories as senility endures. An 80-year-youngster said that her only complaint was that she could not dance!

* * *

EACH GENERATION speaks its own language, whether it is in speech or music, and while it may want to hear what the ancestors had to say, it will reinterpret it. So when Tchaikowsky is done to jazz, it is not, as some say, vulgar stealing. It is rather an idea by another generation which cannot dance to a Strauss waltz but can make its own step, slow, meditative, with a little necking on the dance floor.

Older people always know what is right and what is wrong and they hate to see the world go to the devil. But somehow that never happens. There have been Caesars and Alexanders and Genghis Khans and Hitlers and then the human race catches its breath and goes about its business in its own fashion.

These young people who come to hear a symphony program end with "The Stars and Stripes Forever," as Fiedler always does, are not as frightened as their parents are. They expect to take their chances with life and to laugh at those who, having no daring, resort to petty snobbery as a defense.

Of course, these kids will not become millionaires, as Andrew Carnegie or Al Capone did; they may work in a laboratory for $10,000 a year, saving the human race and enjoying that as they revelled in "Tiger Rag" played as though it had been orchestrated by Ravel.

These kids do not complain about income taxes. They will find a thrill in blowing up a bomb or sitting on a space-ship or skindiving. Theirs is a different world, as their ambitions are different from those of their parents.

* * *

AND SO HERE I sit, under my maples, looking at a house that may be 200 years old or more, if one believes everything he hears, listening to a radio play Haydn. There are no children on this farm this year. One is building his own world far from mine; another has gone to the wars and is in a distant place where he lives in an entirely different civilization; another is at college during the summer studying economics, a very stupid but essential subject.

And so the world moves on and the oldsters shake their heads and wonder what will come of it all. My father wondered about that, I am sure, when I forsook his ideals of life and seized upon my own. And now I am a grandfather and watch a few thousand kids express themselves in their own way about the things they love.

* * *

PALADIN IS no worse than Phil the Fiddler. But you have never heard of Phil the Fiddler! He was a character invented by Horatio Alger with the object of convincing young boys that if they worked hard, spoke truthfully, were loyal to their employer, they would, in the end, marry the boss' daughter and inherit the business.

Today, a young fellow does not want to inherit the business. He wants to know mathematics so that he can work on something that will orbit the earth or something.

Is it bad?

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Saturday, August 5, 1961

Boston Pops Concert Scores at Tanglewood

By Edgar S. VanOlinda

Some 11,000 Arthur Fiedler partisans overflowed the Tanglewood shed for the seventh annual appearance of the Boston Pops under its dynamic, handsome conductor. The program was tailored to the tastes of "The Proper Bostonians" and those who "don't know anything about classical music, but DO know what they like."

For the formal half of the program, Fiedler and his 100-piece orchestra offered the works of Elgar, Thomas, Strauss and Offenbach, in arrangements which cut out some of the repetitious parts without losing the heart of the music.

The guest soloist, Earl Wild, played the Tchaikowsky Piana Concerto No. 1, with the elan of a professional football guard on the offensive. He practically "tore the cover off the ball" with his exciting rendition of one of the show pieces in a pianist's repertory.

But there was a kind of nervous expectancy during the intermission as the audience waited for the famous encores, announced by printed signs held up to view by one of the orchestra's staff.

Following the performance of excerpts from Leonard Bernstein's setting to the "West Side Story" (thereby paying tribute to a former Music Center lad) the brass section really went to town in Meredith Willson's "76 Trombones."

146

CAIRO, N.Y.
HERALD
W. 315

AUG 3 1961

The Music Shed At Tanglewood

The music shed at Tanglewood was constructed in 1938 and seats 6,000 people. The acoustic properties of the shed, amazingly clear when first constructed and constantly being improved upon, allow the music to be clearly heard even far out on the surrounding lawns.

The Berkshire Music Festival is now in the fifth week of its eight-week 1961 season.

Fiedler and Pops At Tanglewood Thur.

Arthur Fiedler, whose appearance at Tanglewood this Thursday, is eagerly awaited by thousands of Fiedler-Fans, has announced his program for the Tanglewood concert.

The special program — to benefit the Berkshire Music Center — will open with Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance", followed by the Overture to "Mignon" by Thomas, Strauss's beloved "Emperor" Waltzes and the suite from Offenbach's "Gaite Parisienne"; Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto in B-flat minor with pianist Earl Wild as soloist, and selections from the Broadway musicals "West Side Story" and "Music Man."

ARTHUR FIEDLER

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

JUL 21 1961

Boston Pops To Perform Aug. 3 At Tanglewood Shed Program

TANGLEWOOD—Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, today announced his program for the benefit performance to be given in the Music Shed Thursday evening, Aug. 3, at 8:30 for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

The program will open with Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance," followed by the overture to "Mignon," by Thomas, Strauss's "Emperor" waltzes and the suite from Offenbach's "Gaite Parisienne"; Tchaikovsky's piano concerto in B-flat minor with pianist Earl Wild as soloist, and selections from the Broadway musicals, "West Side Story," and "Music Man."

Tickets for the "Boston Pops at Tanglewood" concert will be placed on sale at the Festival ticket office here Monday morning beginning at 9. Reserved tickets in the 6,000 seat Music Shed for this benefit performance will be available at $5, $4, $3.50 and $3. Tickets for unreserved seats in the Shed and for admissions to the Tanglewood lawns will be available at $2.50.

The Evening Gazette Worcester, Fri., Aug. 4, 1961

IN BERKSHIRES

Fiedler Aims His Program At the Young

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — The Berkshire Music Center benefited to the tune of $25,000 last night when the Boston Pops Orchestra, under Arthur Fiedler, drew 10,799 to fill the music shed at Tanglewood and spill over onto the surrounding lawns.

Earl Wild was solosit in the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto. Otherwise, the evening was a parade of light orchestral numbers, beamed more and more to the younger element as the program progressed.

Fiedler's varied and sweeping gestures were the most interesting facet of the opening number, Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance" march, which added little to the concert. Instrumental beauties and clever phrasings came into their own in the overture to Thomas' "Mignon." Here the woodwinds, harp and violins sang beautifully.

Johann Strauss' "Emperor Waltzes" glowed in all their glory. Fiedler lingered over them lovingly but not mawkishly and the long sweet, handsome melodies were bewitching.

Offenbach's typical gay double-talk was chattered out with brilliant precision in the eight sections of the suite from "Gaite Parisienne." One could not help associating portions of this music with the ballet repeatedly staged in Worcester by the Monte Carlo dancers.

Wild and Fiedler worked together well to produce a flashing, and at times very romantic, version of the Tchaikovsky concerto. The soloist's confident dexterity had its most impressive feats to accomplish in the first and third movements but I thought the second came nearer, in piano and orchestra, to a standard symphonic result. The glittering smoothness of the performance was often on the superficial side.

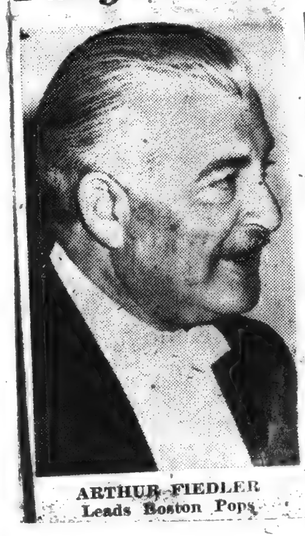
Fiedler gave selections from "The West Side Story" and a version of "76 Trombones" which had too grandiloquent a drum introduction. Then he launched into six encores, ending with "The Stars and Stripes Forever."

The younger set, present in force, howled its delight as "Never on Sunday" was followed by "Hey, Look Me Over," "Mack the Knife," "Pops Roundup" and "Tiger Rag." It is amazing how Fiedler can shift his results from symphony to light classics and then to jazz, with great power to keep contact with his audience.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
Compliments of NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

CITY GAZETTE
August 1, 1961

Arthur Fiedler to Conduct Tanglewood Pops Event



ARTHUR FIEDLER
Leads Boston Pops

Arthur Fiedler, who will conduct the Boston Pops at Tanglewood in a benefit concert on Thursday evening, is a very busy man. Not with pops concerts in Boston in the spring, similar concerts at San Francisco in the summer and world tours in the winter.

* * *

AT THE PRESENT FIEDLER is in San Francisco for his 11th season of pops concerts with the San Francisco Symphony. He comes east from the west coast just in time for the Thursday evening Tanglewood event and then he's off again to finish his San Francisco season. The return trip to California, however, will be made via Miami and the Red Rocks Festival in Denver.

Before Christmas he will have circled the globe to fulfill engagements from Buffalo to San Diego in this country; to conduct at the Hastings Festival in England, radio and television engagements plus a Festival Hall appearance in London, concerts in Dublin and three weeks in Tokyo.

Such a schedule is nothing new to Arthur Fiedler. He has conducted from Norway to Argentina and from Israel to Chile. He has conducted the Orchestre Symphonique de Montreal and the Honolulu Symphony Orchestra. In this country he has conducted from Portland, Maine to Portland, Ore.

* * *

HE HAS CONDUCTED 18 concerts for the Milwaukee Park Commission, 15 concerts with the Seattle Symphony Orchestra, six concerts with the Philharmonic Orchestra of Buenos Aires, five with the Toronto Symphony Orchestra. In his first 10 years in San Francisco he conducted 96 concerts (which included 63 different concerti) with members of the San Francisco orchestra.

The summer festivals also claim Arthur Fiedler. He has conducted a concert to benefit the Berkshire Music Center annually since 1954 at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood; he has conducted the Chicago Symphony at Ravinia and at Grant Park. He has conducted at Hollywood Bowl, the Empire State Music Festival, the French Lick Festival, the Newport Carnival of Music and at Philadelphia's Robin Hood Dell.

Television and radio broadcasts also take up much of Fiedler's time. He has conducted 20 Standard Hour broadcast concerts in San Francisco; six U.S. Steel broadcasts on NBC; the televised Voice of Firestone and "Music for a Spring Night."

This season for the second year Fiedler will conduct four television concerts with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra on its "Great Music from Chicago" series. And in October, 1960, he began his own weekly radio program, sponsored by Time Magazine on CBS in New York. Also there are recordings by Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops for RCA Victor and these take time too.

Program for the Aug. 3 performance at Tanglewood includes "Pomp and Circumstance," Elgar; "Mignon" Overture, Thomas; "Emperor Waltzes," Strauss; "Gaite Parisienne," Suite, Offenbach; Piano Concerto in B flat minor, Tchaikovsky, Earl Wild, soloist; selection from "West Side Story," Bernstein, and "76 Trombones" from "The Music Man," Willson.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

JUL 31 1961

Only Unreserved Seats Are Left For Pops Concert

All reserved seats in the Music Shed at Tanglewood have been sold for the benefit concert to be given Thursday by Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops, the Berkshire Festival box office has announced.

Tickets for unreserved seats in the Music Shed and for admission to the Tanglewood lawns will be sold beginning 9 a.m. on Tursday.

Program Listed

The program for the Boston Pops at Tanglewood includes the Suite from "Gaite Parisienne" by Offenbach, "Pomp and Circumstance" by Elgar, the overture to "Mignon" by Thomas and the Emperor waltzes by Strauss. Pianist Earl Wild will be Mr. Fiedler's guest in a performance of Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto in B-flat minor, and selections from Leonard Bernstein's "West Side Story" will be preformed as well as "76 Trombones," from "The Music Man" by Willson.

The concert, an annual event at Tanglewood since 1954, will be given to benefit the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood.

New England
Box 2078, Boston
Transcript
HOL
Cir
JUL

Benefit Concert Of Boston P Is Gay E

The annual benefit of the Boston Pops wit ur Fiedler at Tanglewo a gay event for the members of the unre and happy audience. Th weather was no deter their spirits.

Heavy applause mar end of every number vastly popular prograr ing with the parade ing "March, Pomp a cumstance" by Elga Pops Orchestra relaxe ty freely under the of Mr. Fiedler, or they were weary of "t old stuff." There was spiration in the Strau peror Waltzes" or "Off Suite from "Gaite Par but the music is, Illt rhythmic even if th cians were not always mood. Thomas' "Ove "Mignon" spoke the quently of these last t

Earl Wild was the soloist for Tschaikow ano Concerto in B fla No. 1 Op. 23, aroust applause at the end first movement and the completion of the ance. There is no dou popularity of this c

Then the really spo don began with "W from Bernstein's Story" and the amu Trombones" from "Music Man." With pected and traditiona from the noisy aud eral encores were with the usual para card announcing tion. As we left Knife" was issuing lowing the appeal on Sunday" and Me Over" fro "Wil side and out everyo to be having a rea and didn't hesitate even during the mu

A correction mus here pertaining to day's concert, Earl not the piano soloi Liszt Concertos, as the review. By played both number

Fiedler P At Tangle A Sellout

All reserved sea Shed at Tangle sold for the B given August and the Bosto shire Festival nounced.

Tickets for the Music She to the Tangle sold beginnin the concert (T

The program Pops at Tang Suite from "Ga Offenbach, "P stance" by El "Mignon" by Emperor Wa Pianist Earl Fiedler's gue of Tchaikov in B-flat m from Leona Side Story" well as "7 "The Music The conce Tanglewood given to b Music Cent summer sc Tanglewood.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
AUG 4 1961

Benefit Concert Of Boston Pops Is Gay Event

The annual benefit concert of the Boston Pops with Arthur Fiedler at Tanglewood was the finest ever for the 10,799 music lovers of the unrestrained and happy audience. The damp weather was no deterrent to their spirits.

Heavy applause marked the end of every number on the vastly popular program, starting with the parade envisioning "March, Pomp and Circumstance" by Elgar. The Pops Orchestra relaxed pretty freely under the direction of Mr. Fiedler, or perhaps they were weary of "the same old stuff." There was little inspiration in the Strauss "Emperor Waltzes" or Offenbach's Suite from "Gaite Parisienne," but the music is lilting and rhythmic even if the musicians were not always in the mood. Thomas' "Overture to "Mignon" spoke the most eloquently of these last three.

Earl Wild was the adequate soloist for Tschaikowsky's Piano Concerto in B flat minor, No. 1 Op. 23, arousing wild applause at the end of the first movement and again at the completion of the performance. There is no doubt of the popularity of this concerto.

Then the really sporting section began with selections from Bernstein's "West Side Story" and the amusing "76 Trombones" from Wilson's "Music Man." With the expected and traditional coaxing from the noisy audience several encores were produced with the usual parade of a card announcing each selection. As we left "Mack the Knife" was issuing forth, following the appealing "Never on Sunday" and "Hey, Look Me Over" frm "Wildcat." Inside and out everyone seemed to be having a real fun-time, and didn't hesitate to show it, even during the music-playing.

A correction must be made here pertaining to last Sunday's concert. Earl Wild was not the piano soloist in the Liszt Concertos, as stated in the review. Byron Janis played both numbers.

—M. deB. B.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 10,542
JUL 29 1961

Fiedler Coming From Frisco to Conduct Pops

The proper New Englander who sees and hears Arthur Fiedler only in Boston will often ask how he occupies his time the nine months of the year when he isn't conducting in the capital city of Massachusetts.

At present Fiedler is in San Francisco for his 11th season of pops concerts with the San Francisco Symphony. He will come east in time to conduct the Boston Pops at Tanglewood next Thursday and then return to San Francisco.

Before Christmas Fiedler will have circled the globe to fulfill engagements from Buffalo to San Diego in this country; and to conduct at the Hastings Festival in England, radio and television appearances in that country — a Festival Hall appearance in London, concerts in Dublin, Ireland, and three weeks in Tokyo.

The following list best tells of Fiedler's activity:

1953: 65 concerts in 68 days in 60 cities in 26 states:

1954: 47 concerts in 52 days in 43 cities in 16 states:

1955: 58 concerts in 53 days in 56 cities in 26 states:

1956: 81 concerts in 83 days in 79 cities in 22 states and Canada:

1957: 71 concerts in 70 days in 67 cities in 24 states and Canada:

1959: 60 concerts in 62 days in 58 cities in 22 states and D. C.

Here is the program for the 8:30 concert next Thursday at Tanglewood:

Pomp and Circumstance ... Elgar
"Mignon" Overture ..... Thomas
Emperor Waltzes ..... Strauss
"Gaite Parisienne," Suite
..... Offenbach
Piano Concerto, B-flat minor
..... Tchaikovsky
Soloist: Earl Wild
"West Side Story," Selection
..... Bernstein
76 Trombones, from "The Music Main"
..... Willson

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
AUG 7 1961

Respighi's Roman Pines Wins Cheers for Munch

By CYRUS DURGIN

LENOX, Aug. 6—A Sunday Berkshire Festival audience of 8488 persons this afternoon burst into prolonged cheers for Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The ovation came after the concluding work of the weekend, Respighi's "The Pines of Rome," which had been given a truly magnificent performance.

The Music Shed at Tanglewood is a perfect place for the brilliant display piece, which, as a knowledgeable listener remarked, made a Roman holiday all 'round.

The large area, and open sides and front of the Shed provide plenty of reverberation for the glories of "The Pines of the Appian Way," and its tone picture of marching Roman Legions.

Yet this performance was not all sounding brass and clashing cymbals, for the orchestra in every section played with both tonal richness and technical finesse.

I have never heard the clarinet solo of "The Pines of the Janiculum" voiced with more sustained beauty of color and phrase than achieved by Gino Cioffi, the orchestra's superb first clarinet.

In one of his numerous recalls to the stage, Dr. Munch appropriately summoned Mr. Cioffi down front to share the applause.

There was an unexpected figure, literally towed on by Dr. Munch at the last recall. That figure was Danny Kaye, who had given one of his comic conducting shows here a few weeks ago, and who had come up from the Carousel Theater at Framingham to hear again the orchestra I suspect he likes best of all.

Earlier, Mr. Kaye had sat in the audience, a peaked baseball cap pulled over his eyes, trying to keep himself unnoticed as he listened. It was to no avail, the crowd saw him and burst into applause at intermission.

This Berkshire Festival weekend emphasized the wealth of solo artists within the ranks of the orchestra. Today, Viola Joseph DePasquale who was soloist in the Concerto by Bartok, that difficult, but very satisfactory and songful work. There is a good deal of folk ability in the background, and Bartok's own invention is basically lyrical over a foundation of cleverly buried rhythm.

Mr. DePasquale may have been thrown by the failure of the printed music he used to stay put as turned the leaf—for a few desperate seconds concertmaster Richard Burgin and Cellist Alfred Zighera were leaping up to assist—but the soloist did not show it. The performance proceeded with complete smoothness.

Saturday night, violinist Joseph Silverstein had been soloist in the G Minor Concerto of Prokofiev, and like Mr. DePasquale today, was warmly applauded for his fine work. The Prokofiev No. 2 has some of a diablerie of its fellow No. 1, but it contains even more lyrical tenderness, and it was that aspect which Mr. Silverstein stressed. Others have played the G minor with more force and a bigger tone; none, as I recall, has done it in finer taste or sensitivity.

It was much finesse from all ends here, not least of all in Arthur Press' dexterity with a rapid stroke of the bass drum, a percussion instrument which, in a rare departure from symphonic practice, replaces the tympani. Come to think of it, Liszt's E-flat Piano Concerto once was dubbed "Triangle Concerto" because of a silvery prominence of that metallic delight, why has no one ever called this Prokofiev the "Bass Drum Concerto"?

Today's concert ended the fifth week of a 1961 Festival, leaving but two more to follow. This afternoon Dr. Munch began with Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, and gave it a reading notable with just the right tempi, clarity, balance and moderation.

Saturday night, he had preceeded Prokofiev with a solidly Brahmsian performance of the Variations of a Theme by Haydn, and had concluded with Cesar Franck's D minor Symphony. Franck, like Beethoven, profited by a complete absence of the hypertension to which the conductor sometimes has subjected the two symphonies.

•TONIGHT thru SATURDAY•

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955
JUL 31 1961

Fiedler Program At Tanglewood A Sellout

All reserved seats in the Music Shed at Tanglewood have been sold for the benefit concert to be given August 3 by Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops, the Berkshire Festival box office has announced.

Tickets for unreserved seats in the Music Shed and for admission to the Tanglewood lawns will be sold beginning 9 a. m. the day of the concert (Thursday).

The program for the Boston Pops at Tanglewood includes the Suite from "Gaite Parisienne" by Offenbach, "Pomp and Circumstance" by Elgar, the Overture to "Mignon" by Thomas and the Emperor Waltzes by Strauss. Pianist Earl Wild will be Mr. Fieldler's guest in a performance of Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto in B-flat minor, and selections from Leonard Bernstein's "West Side Story" will be performed as well as "76 Trombones," from "The Music Man" by Willson.

The concert, an annual event at Tanglewood since 1954, will be given to benefit the Berkshire Music Center, the Orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
AUG 5 1961

Monteux, Istomin Hailed By 7246 at Tanglewood

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—There were 7246 people on hand Friday night to hear a program conducted by Pierre Monteux which featured Eugene Istomin in the Schumann "Piano Concerto in A Minor." Monteux is beloved by Tanglewood audiences and Istomin is a favorite pianist here.

Stunning Rendition

The concert opened with a stunning performance of the overture "Fidelio." Into this overture Beethoven poured in lavish profusion the melodies of the opera. The oft-told tale of the faithful wife, the innocent husband and the villainy which followed them almost to the end provides for many moods, swift contrasts and a sincerity which cannot be denied.

Mr. Istomin and the Schumann piano concerto seemed made for each other. Istomin is a pianist with an elegant style and a sensitive approach to his music. There was nothing bombastic in his performance. It was pure song with only a ruffle here and there to make for contrast.

Sure fingered, Istomin provided everything the music demanded, particularly the long lyric line and myriad colorations. Monteux provided his usual sympathetic, musical accompaniment. The audience was entranced and called conductor and pianist back many times.

Strauss Work Lauded

The first portion of the concert concluded with a dazzling performance of the "Dance of the Seven Veils" from "Salome" by Strauss. The strength of this work lies in its color and rhythm and the Boston players were eloquent purveyors of both. I have never found this music particularly impressive out of context, but Friday night it was given an electrical quality through the virtuosity of its performance.

Mr. Monteux concluded the program with "Symphony No. 2, in D Major" by Jan Sibelius. It has been said that the first movement of this symphony bespeaks an absorption which pervades all things and directs them to a single end. Woodwinds carry the burden of the slow movement. There is stark drama in the andante. The final movement has a church-like, solemn atmosphere. A long and gradual ascent to a magnificent climax is skillfully built up, and on this note the symphony closes.

Monteux, a past master in orchestral excitement, stirred the players to utmost effort, but so quietly, it all seemed to flow from the music itself.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hotel & Restaurant News
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly
AUG 5 1961

What's COOKIN'?

Traveling along the Mass. Turnpike a couple of weekends ago, it was heartening to see the many cars from out-of-state from areas as far away as Texas and Colorado — looks as if New England promotion is finally beginning to take effect . . . The concerts at Tanglewood were as brilliant and enjoyable as ever and this unique music festival is always a good reminder of the uses which can be made of our recreational areas — what could be more fitting than the music of the world's great composers set against the stately hills of the Berkshires?

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
AUG 4 1961

Benefit Concert Of Boston Pops Is Gay Event

The annual benefit concert of the Boston Pops with Arthur Fiedler at Tanglewood was a gay event for the 10,799 members of the unrestrained and happy audience. The damp weather was no deterrent to their spirits.

Heavy applause marked the end of every number on the vastly popular program, starting with the parade envisioning "March, Pomp and Circumstance" by Elgar. The Pops Orchestra relaxed pretty freely under the direction of Mr. Fiedler, or perhaps they were weary of "the same old stuff." There was little inspiration in the Strauss "Emperor Waltzes" or Offenbach's Suite from "Gaite Parisienne," but the music is lilting and rhythmic even if the musicians were not always in the mood. Thomas' "Overture to "Mignon" spoke the most eloquently of these last three.

Earl Wild was the adequate soloist for Tschaikowsky's Piano Concerto in B flat minor, No. 1 Op. 23, arousing wild applause at the end of the first movement and again at the completion of the performance. There is no doubt of the popularity of this concerto.

Then the really sporting section began with selections from Bernstein's "West Side Story" and the amusing "76 Trombones" from Wilson's "Music Man." With the expected and traditional coaxing from the noisy audience several encores were produced with the usual parade of a card announcing each selection. As we left "Mack the Knife" was issuing forth, following the appealing "Never on Sunday" and "Hey, Look Me Over" frm "Wildcat." Inside and out everyone seemed to be having a real fun-time, and didn't hesitate to show it, even during the music-playing.

A correction must be made here pertaining to last Sunday's concert. Earl Wild was not the piano soloist in the Liszt Concertos, as stated in the review. Byron Janis played both numbers.

—M. deB. B.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 10,542
JUL 2[illegible] 1961

Fiedler Coming From Frisco to Conduct Pops

The proper New Englander who sees and hears Arthur Fiedler only in Boston will often ask how he occupies his time the nine months of the year when he isn't conducting in the capital city of Massachusetts.

At present Fiedler is in San Francisco for his 11th season of pops concerts with the San Francisco Symphony. He will come east in time to conduct the Boston Pops at Tanglewood next Thursday and then return to San Francisco.

Before Christmas Fiedler will have circled the globe to fulfill engagements from Buffalo to San Diego in this country; and to conduct at the Hastings Festival in England, radio and television appearances in that country — a Festival Hall appearance in London, concerts in Dublin, Ireland, and three weeks in Tokyo.

The following list best tells of Fiedler's activity:

1953: 65 concerts in 68 days in 60 cities in 26 states:

1954: 47 concerts in 52 days in 43 cities in 16 states:

1955: 58 concerts in 53 days in 56 cities in 26 states:

1956: 81 concerts in 83 days in 79 cities in 22 states and Canada:

1957: 71 concerts in 70 days in 67 cities in 24 states and Canada:

1959: 60 concerts in 62 days in 58 cities in 22 states and D. C.

Here is the program for the 8:30 concert next Thursday at Tanglewood:

Pomp and Circumstance . . . Elgar
"Mignon" Overture . . . . . Thomas
Emperor Waltzes . . . . . Strauss
"Gaite Parisienne," Suite . . . . . Offenbach
Piano Concerto, B-flat minor . . . . . Tchaikovsky
Soloist: Earl Wild
"West Side Story," Selection . . . . . Bernstein
76 Trombones, from "The Music Main" . . . . . Willson

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
AUG 7 1961

Respighi's Roman Pines Wins Cheers for Munch

By CYRUS DURGIN

LENOX, Aug. 6—A Sunday Berkshire Festival audience of 8488 persons this afternoon burst into prolonged cheers for Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The ovation came after the concluding work of the weekend, Respighi's "The Pines of Rome," which had been given a truly magnificent performance.

The Music Shed at Tanglewood is a perfect place for the brilliant display piece, which, as a knowledgeable listener remarked, made a Roman holiday all 'round.

The large area, and open sides and front of the Shed provide plenty of reverberation for the glories of "The Pines of the Appian Way," and its tone picture of marching Roman Legions.

Yet this performance was not all sounding brass and clashing cymbals, for the orchestra in every section played with both tonal richness and technical finesse.

I have never heard the clarinet solo of "The Pines of the Janiculum" voiced with more sustained beauty of color and phrase than achieved by Gino Cioffi, the orchestra's superb first clarinet.

In one of his numerous recalls to the stage, Dr. Munch appropriately summoned Mr. Cioffi down front to share the applause.

There was an unexpected figure, literally towed on by Dr. Munch at the last recall. That figure was Danny Kaye, who had given one of his comic conducting shows here a few weeks ago, and who had come up from the Carousel Theater at Framingham to hear again the orchestra I suspect he likes best of all.

Earlier, Mr. Kaye had sat in the audience, a peaked baseball cap pulled over his eyes, trying to keep himself unnoticed as he listened. It was to no avail, the crowd saw him and burst into applause at intermission.

This Berkshire Festival weekend emphasized the wealth of solo artists within the ranks of the orchestra. Today, Viola Joseph DePasquale who was soloist in the Concerto by Bartok, that difficult but very satisfactory and sonorful work. There is a good deal of folk ability in the background, and Bartok's own invention is basically lyrical over a foundation of cleverly buried rhythm.

Mr. DePasquale may have been thrown by the failure of the printed music he used to stay put as turned the leaf—for a few desperate seconds concertmaster Richard Burgin and Cellist Alfred Zighera were leaping up to assist—but the soloist did not show it. The performance proceeded with complete smoothness.

Saturday night, violinist Joseph Silverstein had been soloist in the G Minor Concerto of Prokofiev, and like Mr. DePasquale today, was warmly applauded for his fine work. The Prokofiev No. 2 has some of a diablerie of its fellow No. 1, but it contains even more lyrical tenderness, and it was that aspect which Mr. Silverstein stressed. Others have played the G minor with more force and a bigger tone; none, as I recall, has done it in finer taste or sensitivity.

It was much finesse from all ends here, not least of all in Arthur Press' dexterity with a rapid stroke of the bass drum, a percussion instrument which, in a rare departure from symphonic practice, replaces the tympani. Come to think of it, Liszt's E-flat Piano Concerto once was dubbed "Triangle Concerto" because of a silvery prominence of that metallic delight, why has no one ever called this Prokofiev the "Bass Drum Concerto"?

Today's concert ended the fifth week of a 1961 Festival, leaving but two more to follow. This afternoon Dr. Munch began with Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, and gave it a reading notable with just the right tempi, clarity, balance and moderation.

Saturday night, he had preceeded Prokofiev with a solidly Brahmsian performance of the Variations of a Theme by Haydn, and had concluded with Cesar Franck's D minor Symphony. Franck, like Beethoven, profited by a complete absence of the hypertension to which the conductor sometimes has subjected the two symphonies.

•TONIGHT thru SATURDAY•

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955
JUL 31 1961

Fiedler Program At Tanglewood A Sellout

All reserved seats in the Music Shed at Tanglewood have been sold for the benefit concert to be given August 3 by Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops, the Berkshire Festival box office has announced.

Tickets for unreserved seats in the Music Shed and for admission to the Tanglewood lawns will be sold beginning 9 a. m. the day of the concert (Thursday).

The program for the Boston Pops at Tanglewood includes the Suite from "Gaite Parisienne" by Offenbach, "Pomp and Circumstance" by Elgar, the Overture to "Mignon" by Thomas and the Emperor Waltzes by Strauss. Pianist Earl Wild will be Mr. Fiedler's guest in a performance of Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto in B-flat minor, and selections from Leonard Bernstein's "West Side Story" will be performed as well as "76 Trombones," from "The Music Man" by Willson.

The concert, an annual event at Tanglewood since 1954, will be given to benefit the Berkshire Music Center, the Orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
AUG 5 1961

Monteux, Istomin Hailed By 7246 at Tanglewood

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—There were 7246 people on hand Friday night to hear a program conducted by Pietre Monteux which featured Eugene Istomin in the Schumann "Piano Concerto in A Minor." Monteux is beloved by Tanglewood audiences and Istomin is a favorite pianist here.

Stunning Rendition

The concert opened with a stunning performance of the overture "Fidelio." Into this overture Beethoven poured in lavish profusion the melodies of the opera. The oft-told tale of the faithful wife, the innocent husband and the villainy which followed them almost to the end provides for many moods, swift contrasts and a sincerity which cannot be denied.

Mr. Istomin and the Schumann piano concerto seemed made for each other. Istomin is a pianist with an elegant style and a sensitive approach to his music. There was nothing bombastic in his performance. It was pure song with only a ruffle here and there to make for contrast.

Sure fingered, Istomin provided everything the music demanded, particularly the long lyric line and myriad colorations. Monteux provided his usual sympathetic, musical accompaniment. The audience was entranced and called conductor and pianist back many times.

Strauss Work Lauded

The first portion of the concert concluded with a dazzling performance of the "Dance of the Seven Veils" from "Salome" by Strauss. The strength of this work lies in its color and rhythm and the Boston players were eloquent purveyors of both. I have never found this music particularly impressive out of context, but Friday night it was given an electrical quality through the virtuosity of its performance.

Mr. Monteux concluded the program with "Symphony No. 2, in D Major" by Jan Sibelius. It has been said that the first movement of this symphony bespeaks an absorption which pervades all things and directs them to a single end. Woodwinds carry the burden of the slow movement. There is stark drama in the andante. The final movement has a church-like, solemn atmosphere. A long and gradual ascent to a magnificent climax is skillfully built up, and on this note the symphony closes.

Monteux, a past master in orchestral excitement, stirred the players to utmost effort, but so quietly, it all seemed to flow from the music itself.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hotel & Restaurant News
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly
AUG 5 1961

What's COOKIN?

Traveling along the Mass. Turnpike a couple of weekends ago, it was heartening to see the many cars from out-of-state from areas as far away as Texas and Colorado — looks as if New England promotion is finally beginning to take effect . . . The concerts at Tanglewood were as brilliant and enjoyable as ever and this unique music festival is always a good reminder of the uses which can be made of our recreational areas — what could be more fitting than the music of the world's great composers set against the stately hills of the Berkshires?

148

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,456
AUG 6 1961

Music: Munch Conducts Brahms and Franck

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Except for Prokovieff's Second Violin Concerto, last night's program at Tanglewood was hardy, but familiar, fare.

Charles Munch conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brahms' "Variations on a Theme by Haydn, opus 56A," and Ceasar Franck's Symphony in D Minor. Soloist in the Prokovieff Concerto was Joseph Silverstein of the orchestra's first violin section.

Apparently familiarity does not always breed contempt, because there was an audience of 8,446.

The Brahms and Franc selections received glowing instrumental performances, each in its own way. Munch's interpretations, particularly of the Brahms, were more subject to debate.

Methodical Approach

Munch certainly was methodical in this approach to the variations. The theme was stated with quiet relish and every indication was that big things were to follow and they did, in many ways. Boundaries between variations were clearly defined, in fact a little too much so, with overly-long pauses.

Each variation received a feeling of unification. Munch also kept the theme out in front—not always a simple matter, because Brahms involved some variations with elaborate ornamentation.

The contrasts in volume were strikingly brought out, giving the work a continual flow of vitality. Last, and of determining importance, the instrumental technique was first class—in fact, it had an extra measure of brilliance.

All of which may sound like perfection, but the almost indefinable thing was missing. When the net result of the Brahms variations is vested in an almost purely intellectual effect, the theme (generating force of the work) becomes the subject of a treatise. It should be a moving force that gathers power as it undergoes manifold treatments.

Silverstein is the most casual-appearin gviolinist we've ever seen on the platform. His easygoing mien is deceptive. He actually made the Prokovieff Concerto seem easy to play, which it most certainly is not.

Prokovieff didn't write this work solely to spotlight the soloist. Through long stretches the status of the soloist is merely equal to the orchestra or secondary. However, the Concerto will not tolerate or bend to technical deficiency.

The first two themes of the opening movement disclosed Silverstein's tonal capacity. It was far from opulent, but of rich quality, and impeccably accurate in pitch.

Bowing was firm and while nothing spectacular happened until the finale, the soloist constantly reminded his listeners of control, command and undisputed capability.

Today's Program

The slow movement was well-invested with tonal warmth. Munch and the orchestra gave Silverstein full freedom where conflict might have arisen between the straightforward solo score and involved background.

Short, jerky phrases were the rhythmic incentive of the finale — established by soloist and faithfully confirmed by orchestra. It resembled the style of the corresponding movement of Prokovieff's great Fifth Symphony and here one noted a greater domination by the soloist.

Munch was most happily disposed toward the Franck Symphony. We've never heard a more integrated performance of the first movement. Munch seemed to build it into an imposing structure, stone by stone. The highest praise is owed to Louis Speyer for his beautifully toned and phrased English Horn solo in the slow movement.

This afternoon's concert will feature Joseph de Pasquale of the Boston Symphony as soloist in the Bartok Viola Concerto. Munch will conduct the orchestra in Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and Respighi's "Pines of Rome."

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 7 1961

Music Review

Home Weekend at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE BOSTON Symphony Orchestra dipped into the resources of its own talent pool to provide the soloists for the last two concerts of the weekend. Yesterday afternoon Joseph De Pasquale played the Bartok concerto for viola and orchestra, and Saturday evening Joseph Silverstein did the violin concerto No. 2 in g minor, Opus 63, of Prokofiev.

If anyone still wonders what makes the Boston the wondrous organization it is universally conceded to be, it becomes obvious when it yields two of its components who are such virtuosi.

* * *

THE BELA BARTOK concerto was not completed at the time of the composer's death, but the major scaffolding had been erected or at least sketched so that a close associate, Tibor Serly, could supply and fill in the orchestral score. The accompaniment is adequate, but it is pared to a stark minimum. The soloist is in the clear almost every instant, in contrast to the Prokofiev of the preceding evening where the solo violin is often but one thread in the orchestral web and thus intentionally not always distinguishable.

Both concertos, strangely enough, fit to a certain extent over the same formula, as different as is the texture of each one. Each starts out with an unaccompanied statement by the solo voice and after a parallel sequence of movements goes into a boisterous finale. De Pasquale played brilliantly. The many sides of his art were confirmed by his beautiful, tender rendition of the short "lento parlando" with which the first movement ends. The center slow movement is almost entirely a soliloquy the soloist must fashion and shape himself. The finale is a swift running perpetual motion which De Pasquale encompassed with agility and facility.

* * *

CHARLES MUNCH conducted both concerts. Yesterday he began with the Beethoven Seventh Symphony and ended with the Respighi symphonic poem, "Pines of Rome." It was a cool, transparent afternoon, and the orchestra's tone and alacrity were vivid and resilient. Munch indulged in wide color and tem- symphony introduction spacious and poised, and maintained the main body of the movement "vivacious" in distinction to the "presto" of the scherzo. He also proved that there is a difference to what Beethoven intends when he specifies "con brio" in the finale which is still not identical with the indictations of the preceding two swifter movements.

The Respighi is a holiday for an orchestra the caliber of the Bostonians. The luminous performance was a trifle blurred in one's memories after the atomic-dimensioned explosion of the percussion section in the coda which was followed by Munch bringing clarinet soloist Gino Cioffi to the front to partake of the demonstration for which he was partially responsible. But the astonishing envoi occurred when the conductor reemerged leading the orchestra's honorary member, baseball-capped Danny Kaye, who had been in the audience all afternoon. The two "conductors" embraced and blew each other osculatory gestures. Most of us have now seen everything.

* * *

SATURDAY NIGHT Munch fenced soloist Silverstein's concerto with the Brahms variations on a theme of Haydn and the Franck symphony.

Prokofiev's concerto has a saccharine savor. Silverstein's extraordinary violinistic equipment was again a gratification in itself. His tone is superlatively silky and smooth and was ideally suited to the nature of the piece. Only in the final movement does it call for a more barbaric ingredient to which the soloist apparently found it difficult to abandon himself fully.

Munch tolerated slight inexactitudes in the oboe in the second sentence of his Brahms, but the variations withstand time and progress with amazing stamina. It has become the fashion in certain quarters to disparage the Franck symphony and to consider it exhausted and exhausting. Its transparent construction is a wonderful lesson in elementary modulation and few composers give the individual instruments a more interesting line of their own.

Munch made it a romantic vehicle. Franck's method of building up climaxes with a long approach needs a strict baton to prevent it from becoming mawkish. Munch was obviously aware of such pitfalls and avoided them with a driving insistence. It aroused a typical demonstration which has become one of the excitements of a Tanglewood concert.

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
AUG 5 1961

Over 7,000 Enjoy Istomin, Monteux, BSO at Tanglewood

Eugene Istomin at the piano and Pierre Monteux conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Schumann's Piano Concerto in A Minor were the feature attractions enjoyed by 7,246 persons at Tanglewood last night.

Charles Munch will be back as conductor tonight and tomorrow afternoon.

Last night's concert opened with the "Fidelio" overture by Beethoven, then followed the Schumann concerto, the "Dance of the Seven Veils" by Strauss and finally the Symphony No. 2 in D Major by Jan Sibelius.

Tonight's program will start at 8:30 o'clock with "Variations on a Theme by Haydn" by Brahms and will continue with Piano Concerto No. 2 by ProKofiev with Henriot-Schweitzer as soloist, and a Cesar Franck's symphony.

Tomorrow's program consists of the Symphony No. 7 by Beethoven, a viola concerto by Bartok with de Pasquale as soloists, and "The Pines of Rome" by Respighi.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
AUG 5 1961

Concert: Vigorous Monteux at Lenox

Conducts Beethoven, Sibelius and Strauss

By RAYMOND ERICSON
Special to The New York Times.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 4 — Clouds, some of them threatening rain, passed across the sun all day at Tanglewood, where the Berkshire Festival is holding forth. By twilight, however, the sky had cleared to provide a benign evening for tonight's concert.

Such uncertain weather has plagued the festival, as it has others in New York and New England, and has caused considerable variation in attendance at individual concerts here. But in the over-all picture, the festival has done just about as well as last year.

The first four week-ends each drew an average of 24,000 persons, and, the figure for tonight's audience was a characteristic 7,200. As one never knows what to expect from the weather, so one never knows what to expect from the musical end of an outdoor summer concert. The program, which opened the fifth week-end here, listed standard works by three German composers and one Finnish: Beethoven's overture to "Fidelio," Schumann's Piano Concerto, The Dance of the Seven Veils from Strauss' "Salome," and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2.

What made this rather conventional program fascinating was the conductor — Pierre Monteux. The 86-year-old Frenchman, still as full of vigor, musically speaking, as a 20-year-old, made a rahter Gallic evening out of it without violating the scores and with quite fascinating results. The "Fidelio" overture, for example, pursued its course with such peppery brilliance that it might have been a work by Auber or Offenbach.

Pierre Monteux

The Schumann concerto, in which Eugene Istomin was the soloist, went like a breeze. The American pianist has been known to play this highly romantic work with a fair share of placidity or with a great deal of warmth. Perhaps inspired by Mr. Monteux, Mr. Istomin ripped through the concerto, emphasizing its virtuoso possibilities whenever he could and handling its lyric moments with a lightness and restraint that almost sounded as if he were playing Mozart.

It was an expert performance, of course, and tonally lovely. But at the beginning of both the first and second movements, the work sounded perfunctory. Mr. Istomin began to play as if he were emotionally engaged by the music when he came to the beautiful slow theme of the first movement, and it seemed significant that whenever he came to the repetition of original thematic material, he played with a great deal more care and variety than he had the first time through. Still, one missed the degree of penetration this pianist is capable of in this music. To repeat, outdoor summer performances are not always what are expected.

Istomin Is Pianist in Schumann Concerto

Tanglewood is not bothered by airplanes and street noises, but it has dogs. One of them yelped — in appreciation or otherwise—after Mr. Monteux lit into the stormy opening of the Dance of the Seven Veils. The performance, which began with so much verve, continued in a quite dazzling vein. The conductor kept the scoring as transparent as possible and whipped the exotic music along, thereby making it quite a heady experience highly benefical in this case.

Mr. Monteux treated the Sibelius with the same kind of lightness and high degree of momentum, which minimized its dour qualities in scoring, its repetitiousness, and its rather empty rhetoric. And, curiously, he gave a beautiful tenderness to some of its quieter passages.

The playing of the Boston Symphony was not impeccable, but it was splendid nevertheless. Given the benefit of its superb acoustical shell, it can be heard clearly without the benefit of amplification far beyond the 6,000-seat theatre in which it plays. It is just one of the elements that keeps the Berkshire Festival the most prestigious among American summer series.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
AUG 7 1961

Attendance Takes Dip At Beaches, Tanglewood

PITTSFIELD — Attendance at public beaches over the week end was considerably less than expected.

Park Department spokesmen said 2000 were at Pontoosuc Sunday for a total of 3500, and about 3500 at Onota Lake for a total of 5500. Some 250 heard the Eagles Band concert.

Tanglewood attendance also was off slightly, 27,539 for the week, including the 10,000 or more who heard the pops concent Thursday night. The Sunday concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Charles Munch directing brought out 8488 music lovers.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
AUG 7 1961

At Tanglewood

Charles Munch Conducts; Two Soloists Featured

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox. Charles Munch, Conductor.

Saturday

Variations on a theme by Haydn — Brahms
Violin Concerto No. 2 — Prokofiev
Soloist Joseph Silverstein
Symphony — Franck

Sunday

Symphony No. 7 — Beethoven
Concerto for Viola and Orchestra — Bartok
Soloist Joseph De Pasquale
Pines of Rome — Respighi

. . . .

By FRANK PATTERSON

If music can be likened to a mathematical pleasure, which lately it has been, there should be little objection to describing the ratio of sound to esthetic intent in music to be optimum at 20 per cent sound to 80 per cent intent. However, there will be an objection, a clamor of mathematical doubt (unless you heard this week's concerts at Tanglewood) that the BSO can hit about 60 per cent sound with 90 per cent intent. The tricky addition can only be solved in a hearing and you have but two weeks to clinch the proof.

Balanced Repast

The Brahms "Variations on a Theme by Haydn" which was written three years before his first Symphony, produces the rhythmic bounce of old world charm. To freshen the somewhat dissonant-hardened ears of today's audience with what would seem, comparatively speaking, fluff, is not at all easy. Saturday's performance resorted to neither cold pork nor spiced herring. It was rather a balanced repast served in fluent supple dishes with impeccable taste.

The contrapuntal skill, the touch and go intimacy of the theme, the moods of each variation were left untampered by revamping extenuations of new ideas. Yet, it was never heard by this reviewer to sound as new or as charming. The symphony played as they have too seldom lately performed, with assertive vitality and precision that, by the way, was part and parcel of most of this and Sunday's concert.

Violinist Joseph Silverstein's performance of the Prokofiev Concert was, after the first movement, an engaging display. The somber second movement with solo theme entrance over pizzicato violas and cellos accompaniment is as juicy as music can get without drowning itself in schmaltz. The last movement of this unexciting work rings of the familiar Prokofiev musical vocabulary, but peppered with an unfamiliar and complex rhythmic series that takes the concentration of both audience and orchestra to keep clear.

No such problems arise in the Franck D Minor dream of vast intentions. However, the piece one usually associates with a hammock or romance was played at a tempo that would have swung a hammock into giant swings. That the tempo helped the tired and worn themes move on, no doubt was the intent of Munch's direction, but the total result must have shattered the many romantic incurables who claim the D Minor as "their song." It might be better, if I may advise, to pin romance onto at least a dozen works to be safe, and works a wee bit more substantial will surely require less maintenance.

Beethoven's Seventh

Beethoven's-Seventh on Sunday was a din of delicious sound. The tempo was, like the Franck, as fast as the incredible orchestra could play it and still maintain its tone, articulation and intent. That the work didn't sound like the old irascible Beethoven was again a fresh change. The first movement still hit the problems squarely, and though the second appeared to be stalling, the whimsical third and exploding fourth were difficult to listen to without exhibiting some improprietory joy.

The Bartok viola concerto has been too infrequently performed in this country to be yet well known by most audiences. It is a difficult work making demands on both orchestra and soloist. The performance was careful and delicate and, but for the deliberate smashing chords at its close, was lightly performed throughout.

The Pines of Rome, a superb work, would I'm sure embarrass no one if the phonograph of that disconcerting bird were someday to be lost.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
AUG 7 1961

Music

Solos Inspiring At Tanglewood

By ROBERT TAYLOR

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox—Lured by serene skies and programs of well-loved, familiar music, 27,359 concert-goers thronged Tanglewood last weekend to hear Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The performances, like the weather, were untroubled.

One speaks for Saturday evening (official attendance 8446) and Sunday afternoon (estimated at 8488) featured by the solo contributions of members from the orchestra's ranks — Joseph Silverstein, who projected the second Prokofiev violin concerto superbly; and Joseph De Pasquale, whose sensitive interpretation of the formidable Bartok Viola concerto disclosed musicianship of a high order.

Reveal Capacity

Once again these artists revealed the capacity of the ensemble to produce players capable of mastering a role in the limelight—a role so contrasting with the normal procedures of a desk-man as to be of another musical order entirely. Mr. Silverstein and Mr. De Pasquale were the pivotal figures in an otherwise bland series of programs on Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

Of the two, I was most impressed by Mr. Silverstein in the Prokofiev concerto. He showed a deeper insight into this music than he displayed at his craftsmanlike performances during the winter. Familiarity has brought with it maturity and interpretive richness. He stresses the lyric qualities of the score, the songful inner movements, the same technical ability, the security of intonation, of stops and unblurred melodic lines; and there is a unity of phrasing and muted ornamentation, too.

It would seem, however, that Mr. Silverstein is more incisive now, that his proportions more truly accord with the creative concept. While he was properly rhapsodic before he adds a dimension of strength and brilliance not as evident hitherto. He received an ovation.

Mr. De Pasquales's treatment was similarly effective, if not quite as pronounced in character. The lovely Bartok concerto requires a different virtuosity since the solo instrument is virtually interwoven with the orchestra. As a separate voice, the viola is required to accomplish dazzling runs of dexterity, nevertheless, ranging from the falling chromatics of the first cadenza to the steady pulse of sixteenths at the close.

Mr. De Pasquale is a musician who possesses the skill and sympathy to encompass this. Playing from the score, he was as authoritative when wind blew the pages to the stage, as in his meticulous treatment of the entire work.

Kaye Creates Stir

The admirable accompaniment of Dr. Munch, in both cases, might serve as a model of its kind. His balance with the solo artists proved poised; indeed.

As for the rest of the program, the results were agreeable if not profound. There was a robust and strongly accented Brahms' Variations on a theme by Haydn, which clearly uttered the themes. There was a suave Franck D minor, which Dr. Munch has toned down since the fall, but which I still find too loud and headlong. The Beethoven Seventh was a French Beethoven, shimmering and transparent, but none the worse for that.

The concerts ended with a resplendent "Pines of Rome" glowing with impressionistic detail and a multitude of bright images that, in the end, sent out the audiences blithely.

And if that were not enough, the presence of the distinguished conductor, Danny Kaye, created a stir, and Dr. Munch brought him on stage to general laughter for a final curtain call.

Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,498
AUG 10 1961

TANGLEWOOD
Friday by G. G. V.

Pierre Monteaux was on the podium in Tanglewood's Music Shed last Friday evening. The noted octogenarian proved to be still the master of his art, although the program itself had its ups and downs.

The soloist of the evening was pianist Eugene Istomin, his vehicle the lovely Schuman Concerto in A minor. Despite a seat on the piano bench which is fidgety to the point of distraction, Mr. Istomin is posessed of a rather formidable technique which served him well in the bravura passages. However, the grace and fluidity necessary to make this romantic music come alive seemed to be lacking. Whatever the reasons (we couldn't pin down any one in particular), we hasten to absolve the Boston Symphony, which we have seldom heard in better form.

Jean Sibelius' Symphony No. 2 in D Major is an oaken work. True, it contains many lovely melodic passages and the writing at all times is that of a first rate craftsman. Nevertheless, it is often heavy-handed and the boredom which settled on us during the long winded final movement might just possibly have been communicated by the orchestra.

Rounding out the program were Beethoven's Fidelio Overture and very effective rendition of the Dance of the Seven Veils from Richard Strauss' opera Salome.

149

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
AUG 7 1961

At Tanglewood

Charles Munch Conducts: Two Soloists Featured

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox. Charles Munch, Conductor.

Saturday

Variations on a theme by Haydn ..... Brahms
Violin Concerto No. 2 ..... Prokofiev
Soloist Joseph Silverstein
Symphony ..... Franck

Sunday

Symphony No. 7 ..... Beethoven
Concerto for Viola and Orchestra ..... Bartok
Soloist Joseph De Pasquale
Pines of Rome ..... Respighi

By FRANK PATTERSON

If music can be likened to a mathematical pleasure, which lately it has been, there should be little objection to describing the ratio of sound to esthetic intent in music to be optimum at 20 per cent sound to 80 per cent intent. However, there will be an objection, a clamor of mathematical doubt (unless you heard this week's concerts at Tanglewood) that the BSO can hit about 80 per cent sound with 90 per cent intent. The tricky addition can only be solved in a hearing and you have but two weeks to clinch the proof.

Balanced Repast

The Brahms "Variations on a Theme by Haydn" which was written three years before his first Symphony, produces the rhythmic bounce of old world charm. To freshen the somewhat dissonant hardened ears of today's audience with what would seem, comparatively speaking, fluff, is not at all easy. Saturday's performance resorted to neither cold pork nor spiced herring. It was rather a balanced repast served in fluent supple dishes with impeccable taste.

The contrapuntal skill, the touch and go intimacy of the theme, the moods of each variation were left untampered by revamping extenuations of new ideas. Yet, it was never heard by this reviewer to sound as new or as charming. The symphony played as they have too seldom lately performed, with assertive vitality and precision that, by the way, was part and parcel of most of this and Sunday's concert.

Violinist Joseph Silverstein's performance of the Prokofiev Concert was, after the first movement, an engaging display. The somber second movement with solo theme entrance over pizzicato violas and cellos accompaniment is as juicy as music can get without drowning itself in schmaltz. The last movement of this unexciting work rings of the familiar Prokofiev musical vocabulary, but peppered with an unfamiliar and complex rhythmic series that takes the concentration of both audience and orchestra to keep clear.

No such problems arise in the Franck D Minor dream of vast intentions. However, the piece one usually associates with hammock or romance was played at a tempo that would have swung a hammock into giant swings. That the tempo helped the tired and worn themes move on, no doubt was the intent of Munch's direction, but the total result must have shattered the many romantic incurables who claim the D Minor as "their song." It might be better, if I may advise, to pin romance onto at least a dozen works to be safe, and works a wee bit more substantial will surely require less maintenance.

Beethoven's Seventh

Beethoven's Seventh on Sunday was a din of delicious sound. The tempo was, like the Franck, as fast as the incredible orchestra could play it and still maintain its tone, articulation and intent. That the work didn't sound like the old irascible Beethoven was again a fresh change. The first movement still hit the problems squarely, and though the second appeared to be stalling, the whimsical third and exploding fourth were difficult to listen to without exhibiting some impropriatory joy.

The Bartok viola concerto has been too infrequently performed in this country to be yet well known by most audiences. It is a difficult work making demands on both orchestra and soloist. The performance was careful and delicate and, but for the deliberate smashing chords at its close, was lightly performed throughout.

The Pines of Rome, a superb work, would I'm sure embarrass no one if the phonograph of that disconcerting bird were someday to be lost.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
AUG 7 1961

Music

Solos Inspiring At Tanglewood

By ROBERT TAYLOR

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox—Lured by serene skies and programs of well-loved, familiar music, 27,359 concert-goers thronged Tanglewood last weekend to hear Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The performances, like the weather, were untroubled.

One speaks for Saturday evening (official attendance 8446) and Sunday afternoon (estimated at 8468) featured by the solo contributions of members from the orchestra's ranks — Joseph Silverstein, who projected the second Prokofiev violin concerto superbly; and Joseph De Pasquale, whose sensitive interpretation of the formidable Bartok Viola concerto disclosed musicianship of a high order.

Reveal Capacity

Once again these artists revealed the capacity of the ensemble to produce players capable of mastering a role in the limelight—a role so contrasting with the normal procedures of a desk man as to be of another musical order entirely. Mr. Silverstein and Mr. De Pasquale were the pivotal figures in an otherwise bland series of programs on Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

Of the two, I was most impressed by Mr. Silverstein in the Prokofiev concerto. He showed a deeper insight into this music than he displayed at his craftsmanlike performances during the winter. Familiarity has brought with it maturity and interpretive richness. He stresses the lyric qualities of the score, the songful inner movements, the same technical ability, the security of intonation, of stops and unblurred melodic lines; and there is a unity of phrasing and muted ornamentation, too.

It would seem, however, that Mr. Silverstein is more incisive now, that his proportions more truly accord with the creative concept. While he was properly rhapsodic before he adds a dimension of strength and brilliance not as evident hitherto. He received an ovation.

Mr. De Pasquales's treatment was similarly effective, if not quite as pronounced in character. The lovely Bartok concerto requires a different virtuosity since the solo instrument is virtually interwoven with the orchestra. As a separate voice, the viola is required to accomplish dazzling runs of dexterity, nevertheless, ranging from the falling chromatics of the first cadenza to the steady pulse of sixteenths at the close.

Mr. De Pasquale is a musician who possesses the skill and sympathy to encompass this. Playing from the score, he was as authoritative when wind blew the pages to the stage, as in his meticulous treatment of the entire work.

Kaye Creates Stir

The admirable accompaniment of Dr. Munch, in both cases, might serve as a model of its kind. His balance with the solo artists proved poised indeed.

As for the rest of the program, the results were agreeable if not profound. There was a robust and strongly accented Brahms' Variations on a theme by Haydn, which clearly uttered the themes. There was a suave Franck D minor, which Dr. Munch has toned down since the fall, but which I still find too loud and headlong. The Beethoven Seventh was a French Beethoven, shimmering and transparent, but none the worse for that.

The concerts ended with a resplendent "Pines of Rome" glowing with impressionistic detail and a multitude of bright images that, in the end, sent out the audiences blithely.

And if that were not enough the presence of the distinguished conductor, Danny Kaye, created a stir, and Dr. Munch brought him on stage to general laughter for a final curtain call.

Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,498
AUG 10 1961

TANGLEWOOD
Friday by G. G. V.

Pierre Monteaux was on the podium in Tanglewood's Music Shed last Friday evening. The noted octogenarian proved to be still the master of his art, although the program itself had its ups and downs.

The soloist of the evening was pianist Eugene Istomin, his vehicle the lovely Schuman Concerto in A minor. Despite a seat on the piano bench which is fidgety to the point of distraction, Mr. Istomin is posessed of a rather formidable technique which served him well in the bravura passages. However, the grace and fluidity necessary to make this romantic music come alive seemed to be lacking. Whatever the reasons (we couldn't pin down any one in particular), we hasten to absolve the Boston Symphony, which we have seldom heard in better form.

Jean Sibelius' Symphony No. 2 in D Major is an oaken work. True, it contains many lovely melodic passages and the writing at all times is that of a first rate craftsman. Nevertheless, it is often heavy-handed and the boredom which settled on us during the long winded final movement might just possibly have been communicated by the orchestra.

Rounding out the program were Beethoven's Fidelio Overture and very effective rendition of the Dance of the Seven Veils from Richard Strauss' opera Salome.

150

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
AUG 7 1961

Music: 2 Modern Works

Concerts by Bartok, Prokofieff at Lenox

By RAYMOND ERICSON

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 6—The only contemporary flavor in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts at the Berkshire Festival this weekend came from the two concertos that figured in the programs last night and this afternoon (though, it must be said, contemporary music is well served by the student organizations and Fromm Foundation series at Tanglewood).

The soloists in the concertos were two string players from the ranks of the orchestra. Last night, Joseph Silverstein left his third-desk post to play Prokofieff's Second Violin Concerto, and today Joseph de Pasquale, the principal violist, played Bartok's Viola Concerto. Charles Munch conducted both concerts.

•

Young Mr. Silverstein, who joined the orchestra six years ago when he was only 23 years old, appeared as soloist with the Boston Symphony last summer in the Berkshire Festival. In the fall he won the important and munificent Naumburg Award in a contest held in New York. Last March he made his first major orchestral appearance in New York, playing with the Boston Symphony the same Prokofieff concerto he was heard in last night.

His performance on this occasion again was impressive for the almost offhand ease with which technical perfection was achieved and for its tonal sweetness. The tone was not large, and Mr. Munch thoughtfully kept the orchestral portion of the score small in scale. The result had a chamber-music quality that suited admirably the delicate lyricism of the first two movements. The final movement went speedily enough but did not give off sparks the way it can.

•

Surrounding the concerto were Brahms' Variations on a Theme of Haydn and the César Franck symphony. Mr. Munch seems to have an affinity for the latter work so that he can conduct it with a kind of a sturdy devotion, as he did in New York last season, or an aggressive grandeur, as he did last night, and make the performances sound equally convincing.

Some of the force of the Tanglewood interpretation came, perhaps, from the brass section's overriding brilliance, which is stepped up by the acoustical shell framing the orchestra. But just as much came from the powerful drive and thrust of Mr. Munch's conducting, which won an enthusiastic reception from the audience.

Joseph Silverstein

Of the interpretation of Brahms' work, less must be said. On a gentle, sentimental statement of the theme, only a rather flaccid musical structure was built.

Mr. de Pasquale's performance of the Bartók concerto this afternoon illuminated the music with a sumptuous play of color and sensitivity of phrasing. His instrument sounded in turn luscious, astringent and mellow, and in the Rumanian-Hungarian dance rhythms of the last movement his playing was full of fire.

•

Mr. Munch prefaced the concerto with Beethoven's Symphony No. 7. The reading was sane and straightforward, by turns grave and joyous, without losing the steady propulsion that gives the work shape. The program ended with Respighi's "Pines of Rome," which seemed tailor-made for the orchestra. Despite its vulgarity as a piece of music, it gave the ensemble a chance to display the beautiful sheen it has in its soft passages and the magnificent splendor of its fortissimos, sounds that few orchestras, if any, can match.

The three week-end concerts, including Friday night's, drew a total of 25,100 persons, maintaining the average the festival had established on the four previous week-ends. Good weather, fortunately, prevailed.

One member of the audience who rated special applause upon his entrance was Danny Kaye. The comedian had been in Tanglewood earlier this summer to conduct the Boston Symphony in a benefit concert. Whether he was present to pick up a few pointers in his burgeoning career as a baton-wielder or just to enjoy the music remains a question.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,498

AUG 10 1961

Saturday, by C. G. E.

TANGLEWOOD

This concert was one of the finest among many notable performances given by this great orchestra and its great conductor this summer.

The program opened with a beautifully molded and relaxed performance of the Brahms Variations on the Theme of Haydn, Op. 56a.

Joseph Silverstein, an extremely talented member of the 1st violin section, was the featured soloist in the Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor, Op. 63 by Serge Prokofiev. Prokofiev has molded the solo line into the orchestral development so that the one compliments the other. The performance tonight was extremely fine. Mr. Silverstein maintained a lovely silken tone throughout, suggestive of Isaac Stern. The rapport between the soloist and Dr. Munch could not have been better.

The final work on the program was the D minor Symphony of Cesar Frank. Munch is without any doubt one of the greatest exponents of this symphony living today. The moving lines were brought out in clear detail, and Dr. Munch evoked all the drama and excitement which this great symphony contains.

TANGLEWOOD
Sunday, by R. G. G.

The Sunday concert was a well balanced one, notable for its dramatic moods and contrasts. It began with the Beethoven Symphony No. 7, in A Major, Op. 92. which was beautifully presented. Dr. Munch concentrated on the varied moods of the work, matching the majesty of the second movement against the vigor of the third.

The Bartok Concerto for Viola and Orchestra with Joseph De Pasquale, soloist, was Bartok's final work and is terribly demanding of the soloist. Mr. De Pasquale turned in a nearly flawless performance. The work is less impressive than Bartok's earlier violin concerto with one exception. The orchestration of this piece is remarkable. The blending of the woodwinds and strings is such that the piece flows effortlessly from theme to theme.

Respighi's Pines of Rome Symphonic Poem brought out the best in the orchestra and Dr. Munch. The dramatic contrast of the nightingale's song in the whispering pines to the final tragic, sound of the army of the consul marching on the Appian Way, brought the audience to its feet expressing appreciation for a memorable afternoon.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal Record
AMHERST, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,928

AUG 3 196

Munch, Monteux and Fiedler Featured at Berkshire Festival

Charles Munch has invited two members of his orchestra to be soloists at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tanglewood concerts this weekend.

Saturday at 8:30 concert violinist Joseph Silverstein — replacing the indisposed Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer—will be soloist in the Violin Concerto No. 2 by Prokofiev; at this concert Doctor Munch will also conduct Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn and the Symphony by Franck. Joseph de Pasquale will be heard at the concert Sunday at 2:30 in a performance of Bartok's Viola Concerto. The balance of this program will consist of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and "The Pines of Rome" by Respighi.

Pierre Monteux makes his second appearance at the 1961 Berkshire Festival to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday at 8:30 when pianist Eugene Istomin will be his guest. The program will include Beethoven's Overture to "Fidelio," Schumann's Piano Concerto, the Dance from "Salome" by Richard Strauss and the Symphony No. 2 by Sibelius.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will make their annual appearance at Tanglewood tonight to give a benefit concert for the Berkshire Music Center. Earl Wild will be Mr. Fiedler's guest at this special concert. The program includes Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto in B-Flat minor plus Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance," the Overture to "Mignon" by Thomas, Strauss's "Emperor" Waltzes and compositions by Offenbach, Bernstein and Willson.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

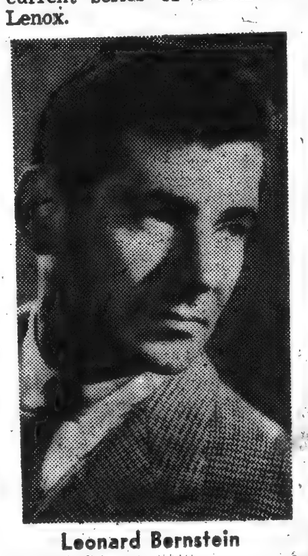
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,185
AUG 12 1961

Music

Bartok Concerto Tops Tanglewood Festival

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL—Dr. Charles Munch conducted the Boston Symphony [illegible] the fifth Sunday program in the current series of events at the Berkshire Festival in Lenox.



Leonard Bernstein

The program provided a list that included Beethoven's Seventh; the Viola Concerto by Bartok with de Pasquale as soloist, and Respighi's "The Pines of Rome."

Bartok's work, or should we say, Serly's, because it was the latter who constructed into one piece what the world today accepts as some of Bartok's finest writing. With the death of the composer came the problem to place into form for performing purposes a manuscript whose content was commissioned by the eminent violoncellist, William Primrose.

However, despite the countless questions that arise at each and every performance of the Concerto, it remains a definite fact that those listening are the recipients, at least partially, of what the composer sought to express. The orchestral parts are definitely a part of Bartok, and at least here, the listener hears what originally was intended.

The soloist was in excellent form. He pursued the music as though he were a disciple of what had been originally intended. This, coupled with a lovely tonal line and execution, offered much for the audience to praise. The orchestra at this time was superb in its intent as well as its technical ability.

Dr. Munch gave a masterful reading of the Beethoven. The Allegretto, one of the most beloved and famous of any symphonic movements was cadanced with style and captured in no ordinary manner the reason for this music's influence on those of the romantic period. The entire symphony was pleasing to experience, and there was little if any doubt that the combine of Munch and the Boston Symphony made Beethoven everything he is expected to be.

This week at the festival has been presented in tribute to Serge Koussevitzky. Possibly the highpoint will be the appearance of Leonard Bernstein as guest conductor tonight.

TOMORROW AT 2:30 o'clock Charles Munch will conduct. His program will include Hanson's Elegy for Serge Koussevitzky; Honegger's Symphony No. 1, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3. At 8:30 in the theater, the BMC group will present a program of opera scenes.

The 16th Bennington composers conference and chamber music center in Vermont will be in session through the 27th of August. The conference opened today.

The Composer's conference presents the opportunity for talented composers to hear their works played and criticized. It performs a unique function in that the participating composers represent the broadest possible cross-section of musical points of view. The absence of an arbitrarily set aesthetic principle assures an open-minded approach to the work of each composer on the part of both his colleagues and the staff performers.

Programs include seminars with the staff composers on technique, contemporary idioms, publishing, and criticism, readings of acceptable works, and public performance of the best works. All reading sessions and public concerts are professionally recorded.

150

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
AUG 7 1961

Music: 2 Modern Works

Concerts by Bartok, Prokofieff at Lenox

By RAYMOND ERICSON

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 6—The only contemporary flavor in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts at the Berkshire Festival this weekend came from the two concertos that figured in the programs last night and this afternoon (though, it must be said, contemporary music is well served by the student organizations and Fromm Foundation series at Tanglewood).

The soloists in the concertos were two string players from the ranks of the orchestra. Last night, Joseph Silverstein left his third-desk post to play Prokofieff's Second Violin Concerto, and today Joseph de Pasquale, the principal violist, played Bartok's Viola Concerto. Charles Munch conducted both concerts.

•

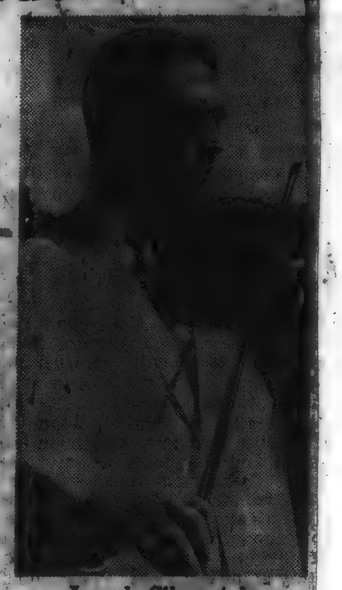
Young Mr. Silverstein, who joined the orchestra six years ago when he was only 23 years old, appeared as soloist with the Boston Symphony last summer in the Berkshire Festival. In the fall he won the important and munificent Naumburg Award in a contest held in New York. Last March he made his first major orchestral appearance in New York, playing with the Boston Symphony the same Prokofieff concerto he was heard in last night.

His performance on this occasion again was impressive for the almost offhand ease with which technical perfection was achieved and for its tonal sweetness. The tone was not large, and Mr. Munch thoughtfully kept the orchestral portion of the score small in scale. The result had a chamber-music quality that suited admirably the delicate lyricism of the first two movements. The final movement went speedily enough but did not give off sparks the way it can.

•

Surrounding the concerto were Brahms' Variations on a Theme of Haydn and the César Franck symphony. Mr. Munch seems to have an affinity for the latter work so that he can conduct it with a kind of a sturdy devotion, as he did in New York last season, or an aggressive grandeur, as he did last night, and make the performances sound equally convincing.

Some of the force of the Tanglewood interpretation came, perhaps, from the brass section's overriding brilliance, which is stepped up by the acoustical shell framing the orchestra. But just as much came from the powerful drive and thrust of Mr. Munch's conducting, which won an enthusiastic reception from the audience.



Joseph Silverstein

Of the interpretation of Brahms' work, less must be said. On a gentle, sentimental statement of the theme, only a rather flaccid musical structure was built.

Mr. de Pasquale's performance of the Bartók concerto this afternoon illuminated the music with a sumptuous play of color and sensitivity of phrasing. His instrument sounded in turn luscious, astringent and mellow, and in the Rumanian-Hungarian dance rhythms of the last movement his playing was full of fire.

•

Mr. Munch prefaced the concerto with Beethoven's Symphony No. 7. The reading was sane and straightforward, by turns grave and joyous, without losing the steady propulsion that gives the work shape. The program ended with Respighi's "Pines of Rome," which seemed tailor-made for the orchestra. Despite its vulgarity as a piece of music, it gave the ensemble a chance to display the beautiful sheen it has in its soft passages and the magnificent splendor of its fortissimos, sounds that few orchestras, if any, can match.

The three week-end concerts, including Friday night's, drew a total of 25,100 persons, maintaining the average the festival had established on the four previous week-ends. Good weather, fortunately, prevailed.

One member of the audience who rated special applause upon his entrance was Danny Kaye. The comedian had been in Tanglewood earlier this summer to conduct the Boston Symphony in a benefit concert. Whether he was present to pick up a few pointers in his burgeoning career as a baton-wielder or just to enjoy the music remains a question.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal Record
AMHERST, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,928
AUG 3 1961

Munch, Monteux and Fiedler Featured at Berkshire Festival

Charles Munch has invited two members of his orchestra to be soloists at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tanglewood concerts this weekend.

Saturday at 8:30 concert violinist Joseph Silverstein — replacing the indisposed Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer—will be soloist in the Violin Concerto No. 2 by Prokofiev; at this concert Doctor Munch will also conduct Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn and the Symphony by Franck. Joseph de Pasquale will be heard at the concert Sunday at 2:30 in a performance of Bartok's Viola Concerto. The balance of this program will consist of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and "The Pines of Rome" by Respighi.

Pierre Monteux makes his second appearance at the 1961 Berkshire Festival to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday at 8:30 when pianist Eugene Istomin will be his guest. The program will include Beethoven's Overture to "Fidelio," Schumann's Piano Concerto, the Dance from "Salome" by Richard Strauss and the Symphony No. 2 by Sibelius.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will make their annual appearance at Tanglewood tonight to give a benefit concert for the Berkshire Music Center. Earl Wild will be Mr. Fiedler's guest at this special concert. The program includes Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto in B-Flat minor plus Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance," the Overture to "Mignon" by Thomas, Strauss's "Emperor" Waltzes and compositions by Offenbach, Bernstein and Willson.

soloist and Dr. Munch could not have been better.

The final work on the program was the D minor Symphony of Cesar Frank. Munch is without any doubt one of the greatest exponents of this symphony living today. The moving lines were brought out in clear detail, and Dr. Munch evoked all the drama and excitement which this great symphony contains.

TANGLEWOOD
Sunday, by R. G. G.

The Sunday concert was a well balanced one, notable for its dramatic moods and contrasts. It began with the Beethoven Symphony No. 7, in A Major, Op. 92. which was beautifully presented. Dr. Munch concentrated on the varied moods of the work, matching the majesty of the second movement against the vigor of the third.

The Bartok Concerto for Viola and Orchestra with Joseph De Pasquale, soloist, was Bartok's final work and is terribly demanding of the soloist. Mr. De Pasquale turned in a nearly flawless performance. The work is less impressive than Bartok's earlier violin concerto with one exception. The orchestration of this piece is remarkable. The blending of the woodwinds and strings is such that the piece flows effortlessly from theme to theme.

Respighi's Pines of Rome Symphonic Poem brought out the best in the orchestra and Dr. Munch. The dramatic contrast of the nightingale's song in the whispering pines to the final tragic, sound of the army of the consul marching on the Appian Way, brought the audience to its feet expressing appreciation for a memorable afternoon.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,498
AUG 10 1961

Saturday, by C. G. E.
TANGLEWOOD

This concert was one of the finest among many notable performances given by this great orchestra and its great conductor this summer.

The program opened with a beautifully molded and relaxed performance of the Brahms Variations on the Theme of Haydn, Op. 56a.

Joseph Silverstein, an extremely talented member of the 1st violin section, was the featured soloist in the Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor, Op. 63 by Serge Prokofiev. Prokofiev has molded the solo line into the orchestral development so that the one compliments the other. The performance tonight was extremely fine. Mr. Silverstein maintained a lovely silken tone throughout, suggestive of Isaac Stern. The rapport between the

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,185
AUG 12 1961

Music

Bartok Concerto Tops Tanglewood Festival

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL—Dr. Charles Munch conducted the Boston Symphony orchestra in the fifth Sunday program in the current series of events at the Berkshire Festival in Lenox.

Leonard Bernstein

The program provided a list that included Beethoven's Seventh; the Viola Concerto by Bartok with de Pasquale as soloist, and Respighi's "The Pines of Rome."

Bartok's work, or should we say, Serly's, because it was the latter who constructed into one piece what the world today accepts as some of Bartok's finest writing. With the death of the composer came the problem to place into form for performing purposes a manuscript whose content was commissioned by the eminent violoncellist, William Primrose.

However, despite the countless questions that arise at each and every performance of the Concerto, it remains a definite fact that those listening are the recipients, at least partially, of what the composer sought to express. The orchestral parts are definitely a part of Bartok, and at least here, the listener hears what originally was intended.

The soloist was in excellent form. He pursued the music as though he were a disciple of what had been originally intended. This, coupled with a lovely tonal line and execution, offered much for the audience to praise. The orchestra at this time was superb in its intent as well as its technical ability.

Dr. Munch gave a masterful reading of the Beethoven. The Allegretto, one of the most beloved and famous of any symphonic movements was cadanced with style and captured in no ordinary manner the reason for this music's influence on those of the romantic period. The entire symphony was pleasing to experience, and there was little if any doubt that the combine of Munch and the Boston Symphony made Beethoven everything he is expected to be.

This week at the festival has been presented in tribute to Serge Koussevitzky. Possibly the highpoint will be the appearance of Leonard Bernstein as guest conductor tonight.

TOMORROW AT 2:30 o'clock Charles Munch will conduct. His program will include Hanson's Elegy for Serge Koussevitzky; Honegger's Symphony No. 1, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3. At 8:30 in the theater, the BMC group will present a program of opera scenes.

The 16th Bennington composers conference and chamber music center in Vermont will be in session through the 27th of August. The conference opened today.

The Composers conference presents the opportunity for talented composers to hear their works played and criticized. It performs a unique function in that the participating composers represent the broadest possible cross-section of musical points of view. The absence of an arbitrarily set aesthetic principle assures an open-minded approach to the work of each composer on the part of both his colleagues and the staff performers.

Programs include seminars with the staff composers on technique, contemporary idioms, publishing, and criticism, readings of acceptable works, and public performance of the best works. All reading sessions and public concerts are professionally recorded.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,783

AUG 7 1961

Music: Dazzling Performance At Berkshire

By RAMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The fifth week of the Berkshire Music Festival ended yesterday afternoon at Tanglewood with a dazzling, super-clangerous performance of Respighi's "Pines of Rome."

Charles Munch also conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 in A Major, Opus 92.

Joseph de Pasquale of the orchestra was soloist in Bela Bartok's Concerto for Vila and Orchestra.

Yesterday's audience numbered 8,488, bringing the weekend total to 27,359, or 735 less than at the corresponding weekend last summer.

Kaye Made Appearance

An unexpected added attraction was Danny Kaye's appearance in the audience. At the conclusion of the concert, Munch invited him on stage to take a bow.

Respighi's "Pines" is useful only to a symphony orchestra of full size and consumate skill. Yesterday's orchestra was supplemented by four additional brass players, and the organ played by Berj Zamkochian.

Munich took the "Villa Borghese" movement (children playing in the park) at a slightly slower speed than usual. There was no loss of tonal dazzle. Descriptive, adolescent sounds were real as life, and Munch closed the turbulent scene with the finality of a bomb.

Antiphonal effects were beautifully extolled in the "Catacombs." There was no mistaking the feeling of literal depth, promulgated by low strings, percussion and organ. A shimmering quality swept through the orchestra in the "Janiculum" episode. Superb soloists were Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Bernard Zighera, Harp; and Samuel Mayes, Cello.

Munch saw to it that the recorded nightingale's song received starring role.

"Appian Way" was a fully-charged performance, arising from distant foot-treads. Timpani, bass drum, cymbals and tam-tam were played with maximum force, adding to boiling-over orchestral sound and fistfuls of organ chords.

Beethoven's Seventh was as interpretively thrilling as the "Pines" was magnetic.

Clear Purpose

Munch compiled the first movement with clear purpose, moving it steadfast through its stanzas of vivacity and meditation. Instead of reading massive wails into the slow movement (funeral march), the conductor pointed out its majesty, interrupted by a lyrical scene in which woodwinds produced expressive sound.

The Scherzo raced full speed ahead — perhaps a little too much so. Trio in winds was accurate and euphonious. The finale became a trifle noisy, which did no great damage to its munificence or pageantry.

Even the most ardent Bartok disciple would have to admit that the first movement of the Viola Concerto is not particularly felicitous for soloist or orchestra. When Bartok died in 1945, the concerto was incomplete to the extent that details and scoring had not been done. The sketches were "deciphered" by Bartok's friend, Tibor Serly.

De Pasquale was heard to admirable advantage in the second and third movements. His tone was pure, technique brilliant and phrasing sensitive. High points of the slow movement were long recitative passages in viola with heavy brass punctuations, expressive (uncomplicated) melody to which the orchestra added rich harmonies. The third movement with its Hungarian flavoring was tuneful and vigorous in solo passages of bristling difficulty.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
AUG 5 1961

Sibelius Symphony No. 2 Exciting From Monteux

By CYRUS DURGIN

LENOX, Aug. 4—For too many years, the Berkshire Festival has run perhaps too much in familiar courses. For the most part the programs have consisted of classics, old and modern from the Winter repertory of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The conducting of them, quite properly according to the policies of this orchestra, have been vested in its music director and a few guests of his inviting.

Nonetheless, the Festival has flourished, drawing a large and heterogeneous public from all over, and from time to time there have been vivid flashes of excitement. One such was the conclusion of the concert tonight in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, as iPerre Monteux conducted the Second Symphony of Sibelius.

Beethoven's "Fidelio" Overture had been vigorous and clear; the Schumann A minor Piano Concerto, with Eugene Istomin as soloist, fluent and a degree poetic. The Dance of the Seven Veils from Richard Strauss' opera "Salome" had been not a little decadent sensuality.

But it remained for the D major Symphony of Sibelius, a dark work of the North created under sunny Italian skies, to rouse this audience of 7246 persons (as against 5336 the same time a year ago) to a sustained roar of cheers and applause.

It was a superb performance by Monteux, one of intense fire flaming out of an interpretation which boasted fine continuity of line and plasticity of phrase.

One is reminded of Koussevitzky, probably the greatest interpreter of the work in this reviewer's memory.

The statement is a compliment, for Monteux, intent upon detail as well as mass, was relatively austere in his changes of speed and reined-in upon the matter of passionate expression. But even for this outwardly calm master of conducting technique, Sibelius arounsed him to exceptional intensity in his hortative gesturing.

To put it mildly, Eugene Istomin can be a rather puzzling keyboard artist, and he was so tonight. His account of what is one of the most tender and poetic among piano concertos was becoming in its clear articulation and rhythmic strength.

But it was puzzling in that every few minutes the penny-plain conventionality of interpretation, which prevailed, would be thrust aside and for an episode or two, Istomin played with the sound and the sense of deep feeling.

Had there been more of this and less perfunctory playing, this account would be very different reading. He was well received, however.

The Festival at Tanglewood has suffered, along with all the rest of us, from adverse weather. The Festival concert, not including specific benefits, show 946 fewer persons attended them than in 1960.

Coming events too cast their shadows. This next season will be the last of Charles Munch as music director. Tonight, backstage at the Music Shed, three conductors of the Boston Symphony stood for a picture—Monteux of the past, Munch of the present and Erich Leinsdorf, who will assume command in the Fall of 1962.

A man conscientious and methodical in administration, Leinsdorf is here visiting for a week or so, observing the operation of the Berkshire Music Center, the school run in connection with the Festival.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263

AUG 7 1961

LENOX THRONG HEARS MUSIC OF BEETHOVEN

8488 Attend Performance by Boston Orchestra, Soloist

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—Along with 8488 people, I thrilled to a magnificent performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 in A Major, conducted by Charles Munch and played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Sunday. This was a perfect Sunday afternoon and the vast lawns of Tanglewood were dotted with groups of music lovers.

"Symphony of Movement"

What a symphony this No. 7 is. It is truly a symphony of movement. To be sure there are tranquil moments, but the feeling of constant motion is always there. Mr. Munch kept the pace brisk. The allegretto never became a funeral march, just an integral part of a huge canvass. The finale does recall Beethoven, the earthy one. It is boisterous and not always polite. Mr. Munch gloried in the sonorities evoked by the players and there was an excitement which almost brought the audience to its feet. This performance may go down as one of the best of the season.

Bartok wrote his Concerto for Viola and Orchestra on commission from the English violist William Primrose. Sunday the soloist was the greatly gifted virtuoso Joseph Di Pasquale. A true virtuoso is needed to play this music.

A first hearing left us wondering where it was headed and if it ever got there. The slow movement has a certain charm and the orchestration is so transparent that the solo instrument is always dominant.

Bartok had practically completed the concerto before his death and it was up to his friend, Tibor Serly, whose integrity seems to have completed the work in the manner Bartok would have desired. Mr. Di Pasquale draws a rich and beautiful tone from his instrument and he has the temperament to make whatever he plays a vital listening experience.

The final work on the program was a tour de force, both in the writing and in the performance by the Boston players. Respighi's tone poem — Pines of Rome—is the sort of work made to order for the virtuoso orchestra. It is an entirely Latin conception, less rigid than the tone poems of Strauss. Its charm lies in its descriptive magic. Its four movements are entitled, "The Pines of the Villa Borghese" "The Pines near a Catacomb," "The Pines of the Janiculum" and "The Pines of the Appian Way." Each episode is an entity. Mr. Munch provided a vital, compelling performance, one rich in detail and color. From the dancing children near the Villa Borghese to the thrill of a full moon in the Gianicolo Hills to the final tragic country of the Appian Way, Respighi carries his listeners through a variety of moods, so vivid they seem to enclose one. It was an admirable performance, perhaps a memorable one. At least it won't be forgotten by this listener for many a day.

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,783
AUG 5 1961

Music:

Monteux Triumphs At Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX—Pierre Monteux conducted the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood last night in the kind of concert that becomes a keepake of memory.

The Berkshire Festival began its fifth weekend with an audience of 7,246.

It was a standard program: Beethoven's "Fidelio" overture, the Schumann Piano Concerto with Eugene Istomin as soloist, "Dance of the Seven Veils" from Richard Strauss' opera, "Salome," and Sibelius Second Symphony in D Major, Opus 43.

The 86-year-old Monteux was in fine fettle, meaning that he obtained maximum musical results with minimum physical effort.

At no time in this festival has there been a clearer disclosure of truth and interpretive honesty than in last night's "Fidelio" overture. It doesn't tell a story but encompasses one of the most vital aspects of Beethoven's philosophy—fierce loyalty to the persecuted.

Creates Clear Image

Obviously the opera puts this across. But so did Monteux' version of the overture and it was done with finesse. Sturggle was there, even between themes and instruments. With this brief overture, Monteux created a clear dramatic image of strife and triumphant result.

Besides this stirring impression there was marvelous instrumental playing. Somehow the Boston Symphony seems obsessed with determination to outdo itself when Monteux faces them.

Salome's "Seven Veils" dance has been horribly mutilated by conductors and orchestras. Since the score is too difficult for a "grade B" orchestra to play in comfort, the danger of misrepresentation increases when the work is dtackled by a highly-skille group.

Gorgeous Sound

Last night's "Salome" was exciting in the extreme. Significantly, there was no lowering of the pulse in the quieter sections. The sensuous melodies and exultant rhythms are by nature untamable. But this performance must have been close to the composer's intent. It was not the westerner's idea of oriental seduction, but an assembly of gorgeous sound, projecting nobility with frenzy.

Monteux didn't make a single superfluous gesture to glamorize the rampage. The only exoticism was in the music itself.

Istomin gave a sensitive, tonally-bright, compelling performance of the Schumann concerto. The young man has all the necessary tchnique to put across his interpretive notions, and high musical intelligence.

It was a blessed relief to hear the Schumann concerto played for its own sake. Istomin settled down to the serious business of playing it, and not playing with it. He didn't have to self-efface himself to accomplish this. There were plenty of brilliant moments—for example, the cascading passages of the first movement, its cadenza, and virtually the entire finale.

Vital Intermezzo

But just as vital was the short intermezzo with its light staccato start,and beautiful second theme shared by the solo instrument and cellos.

Because of illness, Nicole Henriot Schweitzer, pianist, will not appear tonight. She will be replaced by Joseph Silverstein, violinist with the orchestra, in Prokofieff's Second Concerto in G Minor. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Sumphony in Brahm's Variations on a Theme of Haydn, Opus 56A, and Cesar Franck's Symphony in D Minor.

152

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 40,709

AUG 7 1961

~~27,539~~ Hear Concerts At Tanglewood

(Special to The American)

LENOX, MASS. — Berkshire Festival audiences numbering 27,539 for the week-end concerts heard solo performances by a pianist, a violist, and a violinist in colorful music conducted by Pierre Monteux Friday night and by Charles Munch Sunday afternoon and Saturday evening. There were performances of Sibelius not heard in some seven years and a Bartok concerto written just before the composer died. Audiences continue to be enthusiastic and reluctant to leave the Music Shed, calling performers and conductors back for bows.

The Sunday audience of 8,488 heard a full - throated, lyrical reading of Beethoven's "Symphony No. 7, in A Major" by Charles Munch who led the Boston Symphony Orchestra with no slackening to the end which was greeted with a burst of applause and "bravos." Munch's interpretation of Respighi's "Pines of Rome" gave the symphonic poem such a brilliant, almost flamboyant reading, with a terrific crescendo of sound that the audience knew it had heard such a colorful performance as is seldom encountered. The tambourine was played as a drum, there were delicate bird songs, unusual sound effects, and withal such a kaleidescope of brilliance and sound as this brilliant season's programs have not surpassed.

It was, however, Joseph De Pasquale, viola soloist with the Boston Symphony, who gave Sunday's audience something it will long cherish in his exquisitely beautiful performance in Bartok's "Concerto for Viola and Orchestra" which was written at request of William Primrose while Bartok was dying of leukemia. From the opening viola solo, through the lento, and on through the beautiful Hungarian peasant dance music which Bartok incorporated, the audience was enthralled with both composer and soloist.

Violinist Soloist

Joseph Silverstein, young violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, gave Saturday night's audience of 8,446 a talented performance of Prokofiev's "Violin Concerto No. 2, in G minor" following the orchestra's performance of Brahms' "Variations on a Theme of Haydn." Franck's "Symphony in D minor" completed the program.

Pierre Monteux gave Friday night's audience of 7,246 another of those color - filled programs he gave earlier this season. Eugene Istomin, who has pleased Tanglewood audiences in other seasons, gave a lyrical performance of Schumann's "Piano Conceto in A minor," bringing it to a thundering end. Strauss' "Dance of the Seven Veils from the Opera Salome" had a brilliant performance with all the hues of the rainbow as only Monteux can do with dance and ballet music.

For those who have missed the performance of Sibelius at Tanglewood in recent years, and this reviewer is one, there was such an eloquent reading of his "Symphony No. 2, in D Major" in this place so ideal for its majesty and magnificence, that one loved what Monteux did with its sound and fullness of color. The audience gave the 86-year-old conductor an ovation that had such warmth and enthusiasm in it as should warm the cockles of his heart for all his days.

Sunday's audience had an added glimpse of Danny Kaye, sitting in a box with Madame Koussevitsky, and as the returning hero of a recent concert for the pension fund embracing Munch on the platform while everyone applauded like mad.

S.M.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 92,860

AUG 7 1961

Tanglewood Programs Are Well Attended

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — The weekend at Tanglewood drew good but not record, audiences, the largest being 8,488 on yesterday afternoon.

Friday's program conducted by Pierre Monteux, with Eugene Istomin as soloist in the Schumann Piano Concerto in A minor, drew well. Orchestral works included Beethoven's Overture to "Fidelio" "Dance of the Seven Veils" from Richard Strauss' "Salome," and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2 in D major.

Saturday's concert, conducted by Charles Munch, brought forward from the orchestra's ranks Joseph Silverstein, Naumburg Foundation prize winner last autumn, in the Prokofiev Violin Concerto No. 2 in G. minor, the familiar orchestral program consisting of Brahms' Variations on a Theme of Haydn, and the Franck Symphony in D minor.

Viola Player

Charles Munch, conducting yesterday's concert, brought into the limelight another genius from the orchestra, Joseph de Pasquale, first viola player, in the Bartok Concerto for Viola and Orchestra.

It was obvious, from the expressions on Munch's face during the Beethoven Symphony No. 7 and the Respighi "Pines of Rome," that he loved both the music itself and the performance his 104 players were according it.

The Bartok was a somewhat stern task for all concerned, its moments of beauty being trainsitory and its emphasis on rough-spoken thoughts rather in the ascendance. De Pasquale played with vivid and accurate tone, being the master of extremely tricky passages. This was for the most part music to admire with the head rather than the heart.

Gay Rhythms

Munch reveled in the Beethoven Seventh, called the "apotheosis of the Dance." He approached its gay rhythms slowly, through a somewhat austere but grand reading of the long introduction. The lilting triplets were all the more effective when they came, with mounting emphasis and beautifully neat transitions.

The measured and stately memorial dance of the second movement was full of eloquent tribute. After strongly contrasted moods in the third section, the boisterous music of the people in the finale reached its climax in a burst of sound and rhythm which truly painted the dance in gigantic terms.

The various "Pines" in Respighi's tone poem found Munch also at his best, bringing vitality and ebullience to the music of children, rich, shadowy sounds from the lower choirs in the Catacomb scene, and war drums surmounted by a glory of brasses in the dream of Roman legions along the Appian Way.

Gino Cioffi, clarinet, was lauded for beautiful playing of the theme of the nightingale's song in the third movement, it appearing that the other twitterings of the bird were from a recording.

An unscheduled bow was taken by Danny Kaye, fresh from a week at Framingham's Carousel. Danny and Munch embraced with every indication of mutual esteem, to the delight of the audience which recalled Danny's romp as conductor of the orchestra on July 13.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122

AUG 6 1961

VARIED PROGRAM IS HAILED BY 8446 AT TANGLEWOOD

Brahms, Franck, Prokofieff Works Prove Popular

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — A Saturday night audience of 8446 music-lovers was on hand in Tanglewood's music shed and on the lawns to hear an almost popular program conducted by Charles Munch and played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Soloist Gifted

One of the orchestra's youngest members was soloist in Prokofieff's "Violin Concerto No. 2 in G. Minor." He was Joseph Silverstein, a greatly gifted young man who made even this concerto impressive.

The program opened with a clear-cut admirably proportioned performance of Johannes Brahms' magnificent set of "Variations on a Theme by Haydn." What a wealth of imagination and skill he lavished on these variations. Each is different, but throughout the original theme is clearly recognizable. Mr. Munch paid meticulous attention to details and the Boston players responded brilliantly.

Serge Prokofieff's "Second Concerto for Violin and Orchestra" does not have our complete enthusiasm. Its demands on the soloist are great and, being Prokofieff, there are some charming melodies, particularly that of the slow movement. Often the solo violin plays against the lower strings and sometimes it becomes a part of the ensemble. Mr. Silverstein's tone is not large but it is skillfully projected, so that with the careful dynamics offered by Mr. Munch, it was always heard.

Always Skillful

Silverstein is a skillful violinist, one of the best of the contemporary professionals in his age group. He seems untroubled by any excess of temperament and goes about the business of making music in an easy, business-like manner.

It takes a Frenchman to probe the depths of Cesar Franck's only symphony and Saturday night this "Symphony in D Minor" received a sympathetic, beautiful wrought performance. Every beauty in it was made known and was perhaps enhanced by the playing of the Boston Symphony virtuosi. The English horn solo with harp obbligato was played with exquisite beauty of tone and phrasing by Louis Speyer. There is eloquence in every phrase of this symphony, eloquence which Mr. Munch realized and communicated to the rapt audience.

The applause which followed the conclusion of the work was long, loud and entirely sincere: the voice of an audience truly happy.

Sunday afternoon Mr. Munch will conduct, offering Beethoven's "Symphony No. 7 in A Major," Respighi's "Pines of Rome" and, with Joseph de Pasquale as soloist, Bartok's "Concerto for Viola and Orchestra."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Citizen (e)
LACONIA, N. H.
Circ. 5,848

AUG 22 1961

Bernstein's Conducting

By ALICE HUGHES

In tribute to the tenth anniversary of the passing of Serge Koussevitzky at the ripe age of 77, with his hand wielding the baton over his famed Boston Symphony Orchestra almost to the minute of his death, the Berkshire Festival concerts invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct this mid-August event at Stockbridge, Mass. Bernstein, who has now made an enviable reputation conducting the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, was Koussevitzky's protege and disciple. He faithfully programs this annual concert with the music Koussy loved best, including such Russian composers as Stravinsky, Rachmaninoff, Tchaikovsky and also Finland's Sibelius. In connection with these July and August concerts, which came to a close Sunday, there is an established school of music composition, singing and conducting, whose pupils contribute a youthful gaiety to this highly rated Tanglewood musical center.

Leonard Bernstein is acknowledged by musicians and laymen as one of the most proficient persons in the field of American music. He is a highly successful composer; a dramatic conductor; a talented concert pianist; a musical television personality second to none. His success in every phase of music is the envy of all, and has earned him both fame and fortune. However, it has also subjected him to criticism for his unique manner of conducting. In some opinions, he is more vigorous than the dignity of the musical podium requires. Others say of Bernstein that his television exposure has made him a showman rather than a conductor. He is charged with playing to the grandstand, rather than merely playing the music. However, the young folks in the music school adore him. Handsome, emotional, romantic and nearer their own age, his rehearsals of the chorus for the Stravinsky Symphony of Psalms at the Memorial concert had the teenage girl choristers in a tizzy.

The mother of one of these impressionable young misses told of her daughter, age 17, who had obtained an autograph from Bernstein. Upon telling him how much she enjoyed rehearsals when he was there, he shook her hand and said. "You're sweet. Thank you." She walked into her home in dazed delight, and when her mother asked her to wash some dishes in the sink, she burst into tears and said, "Do you think I'm going to put my hand into dishwater, when I've just shaken hands with Leonard Bernstein?

I watched him arrive at the music shed the night of the concert. He stepped out of his automobile wearing a long cape, and someone remarked, "He looks like Zoro." After the concert, which he conducted with considerable body gyration — shaking, twirling and even dancing — one of the orchestra men said to another, "Half the time I thought it was Danny Kaye conducting." Another player in the Boston Symphony group said, "I admit he knows his music, but he conducts like a highbrow Elvis Presley." Despite the criticism, Bernstein drew the biggest attendance of the season and is certain to be invited for next year's 11th annual Koussevitzky memorial concert.

153

Sixth Week - Aug. 7 - 13

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 12 1961

Bernstein Conducts Tonight In Tribute to Koussevitzky

TANGLEWOOD—Leonard Bernstein, a protege of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will take over the podium in the Music Shed tonight in the second weekend concert arranged as a tribute to the memory of the late musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Bernstein, now conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, was the first student in Dr. Koussevitzky's conducting class in 1940 at the Berkshire Music Center which he founded.

Boston Symphony Orchestra officials expect one of the largest crowds of the 1961 season to attend the performance tonight when Mr. Bernstein will direct the BSO in works by Shapero, Stravinsky and Tchaikovsky, with the Festival Chorus taking part in the latter.

Ovation for Burgin

Last night's attendance at the Festival was the smallest of the season, but the guest conductor, Richard Burgin, was given the most enthusiastic ovation this summer after a performance by the BSO, two vocal soloists and the mixed Festival Chorus. A crowd of 4,663 attended the concert.

Tomorrow afternoon at 2:30, Dr. Charles Munch will conduct the final of the weekend memorial concerts, presenting Hanson's "Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky," Honegger's Symphony No. 1 and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3.

On the following weekend, the last of the 1961 Berkshire Festival season, Dr. Munch will conduct the Friday evening and Sunday afternoon concerts, and Pierre Monteux will return as guest conductor Saturday night.

Piano Soloists

At Friday's concert Claudio Arrau will appear as piano soloist in a performance of Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4 in G major. Also on the program will be Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings and Debussy's "La Mer." Pianist Gary Graffman will appear as a guest soloist Saturday night with Pierre Monteux in a performance of Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2. The remainder of the program will consist of the Suite from "Petrouchka" by Stravinsky and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

For the final concert Sunday afternoon, Aug. 20, Dr. Munch has chosen Hector Berlioz's dramatic symphony "Romeo and Juliet." At this performance his guests will be contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm, plus the Festival Chorus.

Montreal Chorus Coming

The BSO conductor has invited 50 members of the University of Montreal Chorus to join the Festival Chorus for this performance. The Montreal Chorus has been prepared by its director, Fernard Graton, a former student at the Berkshire Music Center.

Wednesday evening Claudio Arrau will present a recital, a Liszt sesquicentennial program, at Tanglewood.

Thursday night the students of the Berkshire Music Center will participate in several programs to benefit the Center's scholarship funds. The "Gala Evening," for which the grounds will be opened at 3:30 p.m., will include performances by every department of the school.

This morning at 10 the rehearsal of the Boston Symphony will be open to the public for the benefit of the musicians' pension fund. The composers' forum, scheduled Monday evening at 8:30, has been cancelled.

Whitestone

LEONARD BERNSTEIN, conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, rehearses the Boston Symphony Orchestra for his appearance as guest conductor tonight in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, as a tribute to the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. A protege of Dr. Koussevitzky in the years when the Berkshire Music Center was founded, Mr. Bernstein will conduct the BSO and Festival Chorus tonight.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,498
AUG 10 1961

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
AUG 12 1961

Tanglewood Concerts Honor Koussevitzky

This weekend at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood the three concerts are in tribute to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky who died June 4, 1951. Doctor Koussevitzky's grave is within a few miles of the Tanglewood grounds where he conducted the orchestra for many years and where he directed the first years of the orchestra's school, the Berkshire Music Center.

DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES
D. 20,636
AUG 12 1961

To Koussevitzky Tanglewood To Pay Tribute

This weekend at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., the three concerts scheduled will be in tribute to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky who died June 4, 1951. Dr. Koussevitzky's grave is within a few miles of the Tanglewood grounds where he conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra for many years and where he directed the first years of the Orchestra's School, the Berkshire Music Center.

Leonard Bernstein and Richard Burgin, both friends and collegues of Dr. Koussevitzky, and Charles Munch, who succeeded Serge Koussevitzky as the orchestra's music director in 1949 are sharing the podium for the weekend. Mr. Bernstein was the conductor last night and tonight Mr. Burgin will be the concert director. Dr. Munch will conduct tomorrow's concert, which will also mark the 26th anniversary of the first Boston Symphony Orchestra concert in the Berkshires.

The orchestra's first concert, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, and given on the grounds of a Berkshire estate, was held on August 13, 1936. At this concert Serge Koussevitzky conducted Bach Chorale Prelude, "Komm Gott, Schopfer, heiliger Geist" and three compositions by Beethoven: the "Egmont" Overture, and the Symphonies No. 7 and 2.

At tomorrow's concert Charles Munch will conduct Hanson's "Elegy for My Friend Serge Koussevitzky," Honegger's Symphony No. 1 and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3.

Bernstein At Tanglewood

Charles Munch has designated this weekend's Boston Symphony Orchestra programs (Friday, Saturday and Sunday, August 11-12-13) at Tanglewood as a tribute to Serge Koussevitzky (1874-1951). Because of their close association with Serge Koussevitzky — the orchestra's former Music Director and first Director of the Berkshire Music Center — Charles Munch has asked Leonard Bernstein and Richard Burgin to join him as conductors of the special programs.

Mr. Burgin, whom Serge Koussevitzky appointed Assistant Conductor in 1935 and Associate Conductor in 1943, will conduct the Friday concert. He has scheduled the Symphony No. 88 by Haydn, a favorite composition of Dr. Koussevitzky's, and the Symphony No. 2 subtitled Resurrection, by Gustav Mahler. Soprano Nancy Carr, contralto Eunice Alberts — a former Berkshire Music Center student — and the Festival Chorus will participate in the performance of the Resurrection Symphony.

Leonard Bernstein was Serge Koussevitzky's pupil in the first year of the Berkshire Music Center (1904) and later Mr. Bernstein headed the Center's conducting department. For his tribute to Dr. Koussevitzky, on Saturday evening Mr. Bernstein will conduct the Adagietto by Shapero which was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation during Dr. Koussevitzky's lifetime, the Symphony of Psalms of Stravinsky which Dr. Koussevitzky and the Orchestra commissioned for the Orchestra's 50th anniversary, and the Fifth Symphony by Tchaikovsky which Serge Koussevitzky often conducted.

Charles Munch will conduct the final concert of the three in tribute to Serge Koussevitzky. Dr. Munch will open his program on Sunday afternoon with the Elegy for My Friend Serge Koussevitzky by Howard Hanson. This work was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the Orchestra's 75th anniversary. Dr. Munch last conducted the "Elegy" on June 1st in London when with the London Philharmonic Orchestra he presented a concert at Royal Festival Hall in memory of Serge Koussevitzky. The Sunday program will also include the Symphony No. 1 by Honegger, commissioned by Serge Koussevitzky and the Orchestra for the Orchestra's 50th anniversary, and the Symphony No. 3 by Beethoven.

LEONARD BERNSTEIN . . . former pupil of Koussevitzky, will conduct a concert in his honor Saturday evening at Tanglewood.

153

Sixth Week - Aug. 7 - 13

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 12 1961

Bernstein Conducts Tonight In Tribute to Koussevitzky

TANGLEWOOD—Leonard Bernstein, a protege of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will take over the podium in the Music Shed tonight in the second weekend concert arranged as a tribute to the memory of the late musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Bernstein, now conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, was the first student in Dr. Koussevitzky's conducting class in 1940 at the Berkshire Music Center which he founded.

Boston Symphony Orchestra officials expect one of the largest crowds of the 1961 season to attend the performance tonight when Mr. Bernstein will direct the BSO in works by Shapero, Stravinsky and Tchaikovsky, with the Festival Chorus taking part in the latter.

Ovation for Burgin

Last night's attendance at the Festival was the smallest of the season, but the guest conductor, Richard Burgin, was given the most enthusiastic ovation this summer after a performance by the BSO, two vocal soloists and the mixed Festival Chorus. A crowd of 4,663 attended the concert.

Tomorrow afternoon at 2:30, Dr. Charles Munch will conduct the final of the weekend memorial concerts, presenting Hanson's "Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky," Honegger's Symphony No. 1 and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3.

On the following weekend, the last of the 1961 Berkshire Festival season, Dr. Munch will conduct the Friday evening and Sunday afternoon concerts, and Pierre Monteux will return as guest conductor Saturday night.

Piano Soloists

At Friday's concert Claudio Arrau will appear as piano soloist in a performance of Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4 in G major. Also on the program will be Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings and Debussy's "La Mer." Pianist Gary Graffman will appear as a guest soloist Saturday night with Pierre Monteux in a performance of Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2. The remainder of the program will consist of the Suite from "Petrouchka" by Stravinsky and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

For the final concert Sunday afternoon, Aug. 20, Dr. Munch has chosen Hector Berlioz's dramatic symphony "Romeo and Juliet." At this performance his guests will be contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm, plus the Festival Chorus.

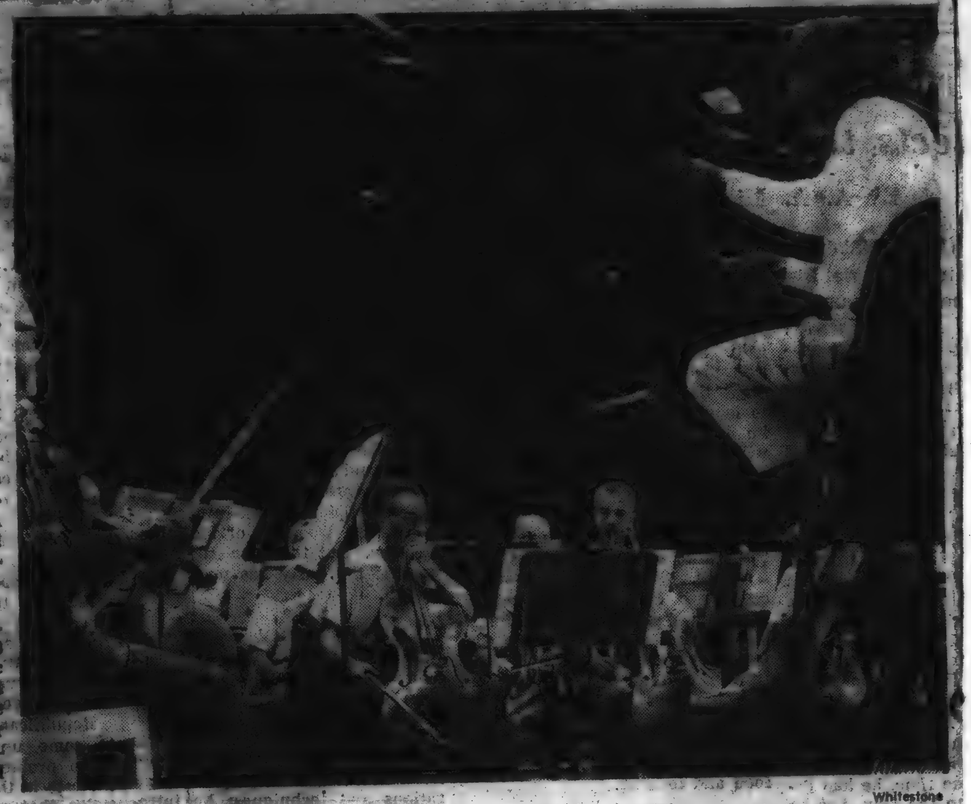
Montreal Chorus Coming

The BSO conductor has invited 50 members of the University of Montreal Chorus to join the Festival Chorus for this performance. The Montreal Chorus has been prepared by its director, Fernand Gracton, a former student at the Berkshire Music Center.

Wednesday evening Claudio Arrau will present a recital, a Liszt sesquicenteannial program, at Tanglewood.

Thursday night the students of the Berkshire Music Center will participate in several programs to benefit the Center's scholarship funds. The "Gala Evening," for which the grounds will be opened at 3:30 p.m., will include performances by every department of the school.

This morning at 10 the rehearsal of the Boston Symphony will be open to the public for the benefit of the musicians' pension fund. The composers' forum, scheduled Monday evening at 8:30, has been cancelled.



Whitestone

LEONARD BERNSTEIN, conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, rehearses the Boston Symphony Orchestra for his appearance as guest conductor tonight in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, as a tribute to the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. A protege of Dr. Koussevitzky in the years when the Berkshire Music Center was founded, Mr. Bernstein will conduct the BSO [illegible] Festival Chorus [illegible]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-420
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,498
AUG 10 1961

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
AUG 12 1961

Tanglewood Concerts Honor Koussevitzky

This weekend at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood the three concerts are in tribute to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky who died June 4, 1951. Doctor Koussevitzky's grave is within a few miles of the Tanglewood grounds where he conducted the orchestra for many years and where he directed the first years of the orchestra's school, the Berkshire Music Center.

DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES
D. 20,636
AUG 12 1961

To Koussevitzky Tanglewood To Pay Tribute

This weekend at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., the three concerts scheduled will be in tribute to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky who died June 4, 1951. Dr. Koussevitzky's grave is within a few miles of the Tanglewood grounds where he conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra for many years and where he directed the first years of the Orchestra's School, the Berkshire Music Center.

Leonard Bernstein and Richard Burgin, both friends and colleagues of Dr. Koussevitzky, and Charles Munch, who succeeded Serge Koussevitzky as the orchestra's music director in 1949 are sharing the podium for the weekend. Mr. Bernstein was the conductor last night and tonight Mr. Burgin will be the concert director. Dr. Munch will conduct tomorrow's concert, which will also mark the 26th anniversary of the first Boston Symphony Orchestra concert in the Berkshires.

The orchestra's first concert, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, and given on the grounds of a Berkshire estate, was held on August 13, 1936. At this concert Serge Koussevitzky conducted Bach Chorale Prelude, "Komm Gott, Schopfer, heiliger Geist" and three compositions by Beethoven: the "Egmont" Overture, and the Symphonies No. 7 and 2.

At tomorrow's concert Charles Munch will conduct Hanson's "Elegy for My Friend Serge Koussevitzky," Honegger's Symphony No. 1 and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3.

Bernstein At Tanglewood

Charles Munch has designated this weekend's Boston Symphony Orchestra programs (Friday, Saturday and Sunday, August 11-12-13) at Tanglewood as a tribute to Serge Koussevitzky (1874-1951). Because of their close association with Serge Koussevitzky — the orchestra's former Music Director and first Director of the Berkshire Music Center — Charles Munch has asked Leonard Bernstein and Richard Burgin to join him as conductors of the special programs.

Mr. Burgin, whom Serge Koussevitzky appointed Assistant Conductor in 1935 and Associate Conductor in 1943, will conduct the Friday concert. He has scheduled the Symphony No. 88 by Haydn, a favorite composition of Dr. Koussevitzky's, and the Symphony No. 2 subtitled Resurrection, by Gustav Mahler. Soprano Nancy Carr, contralto Eunice Alberts — a former Berkshire Music Center student — and the Festival Chorus will participate in the performance of the Resurrection Symphony.

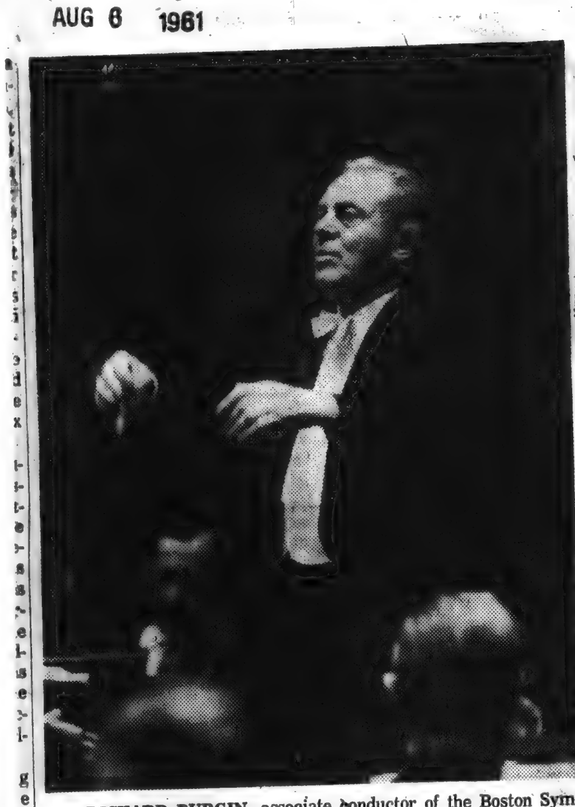
Leonard Bernstein was Serge Koussevitzky's pupil in the first year of the Berkshire Music Center (1904) and later Mr. Bernstein headed the Center's conducting department. For his tribute to Dr. Koussevitzky, on Saturday evening Mr. Bernstein will conduct the Adagietto by Shapero which was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation during Dr. Koussevitzky's lifetime, the Symphony of Psalms of Stravinsky which Dr. Koussevitzky and the Orchestra commissioned for the Orchestra's 50th anniversary, and the Fifth Symphony by Tchaikovsky which Serge Koussevitzky often conducted.

Charles Munch will conduct the final concert of the three in tribute to Serge Koussevitzky. Dr. Munch will open his program on Sunday afternoon with the Elegy for My Friend Serge Koussevitzky by Howard Hanson. This work was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the Orchestra's 75th anniversary. Dr. Munch last conducted the "Elegy" on June 1st in London when with the London Philharmonic Orchestra he presented a concert at Royal Festival Hall in memory of Serge Koussevitzky. The Sunday program will also include the Symphony No. 1 by Honegger, commissioned by Serge Koussevitzky and the Orchestra for the Orchestra's 50th anniversary, and the Symphony No. 3 by Beethoven.

LEONARD BERNSTEIN . . . former pupil of Koussevitzky, will conduct a concert in his honor Saturday evening at Tanglewood.

154

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 153,116
AUG 6 1961



RICHARD BURGIN, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its concertmaster, has been invited to conduct the first concert of the sixth week of the Berkshire Festival (Friday Aug. 11, 8:30). Burgin will conduct Haydn's Symphony No. 88 and Mahler's Symphony No. 2 with Nancy Carr and Eunice Alberts as soloists. The Festival Chorus, trained by Alfred Nash Patterson, will also participate.

Concerts at Tanglewood To Honor Koussevitzky

Charles Munch has designated next weekend's Boston Symphony Orchestra programs (Friday, Saturday and Sunday, August 11-12-13 at Tanglewood as a tribute to Serge Koussevitzky (1874-1951). Because of their close association with Serge Koussevitzky — the Orchestra's former music director and first director of the Berkshire Music Center—Charles Munch has asked Leonard Bernstein and Richard Burgin to join him as conductors of the special programs.

Burgin, whom Serge Koussevitzky appointed assistant conductor in 1935 and associate conductor in 1943, will conduct the Friday concert (Aug. 11, 8:30). He has scheduled the Symphony No. 88 by Haydn, a favorite composition of Doctor Koussevitzky's, and the Symphony No. 2, subtitled "Resurrection," by Gustav Mahler. Soprano Nancy Carr, contralto Eunice Alberts — a former Berkshire Music Center student—and the Festival Chorus will participate in the performance of the "Resurrection" Symphony.

Leonard Bernstein was Serge Koussevitzky's pupil in the first year of the Berkshire Music Center (1940) and later Bernstein headed the Center's conducting department. For his tribute to Doctor Koussevitzky, (Aug. 12, 8:30) Bernstein will conduct the Adagietto by Shapero which was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation during Doctor Koussevitzky's life - time, the Symphony of Psalms of Stravinsky which Doctor Koussevitzky and the Orchestra commissioned for the Orchestra's 50th anniversary, and the Fifth Symphony by Tchaikovsky which Serge Koussevitzky often conducted.

Munch to Conduct 'Elegy'

Charles Munch will conduct the final concert of the three on tribute to Serge Koussevitzky. Dr. Munch will open his program on Sunday afternoon (Aug. 13, 2:30) with the "Elegy for My Friend Serge Koussevitzky" by Howard Hanson. This work was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the Orchestra's 75th anniversary. Doctor Munch last conducted the "Elegy" on June 1st in London when with the London Philharmonic Orchestra he presented a concert at Royal Festival Hall in memory of Serge Koussevitzky. The Sunday program will also include the Symphony No. 1 by Honegger, commissioned by Serge Koussevitzky and the Orchestra for the Orchestra's 50th anniversary and the Symphony No. 3 by Beethoven.

The American premiere of "King Theodore in Venice" by Giovanni Paisiello will be presented at Tanglewood Monday and Tuesday evenings (August 7 and 8 at 8:30) by members of the Berkshire Music Center's Opera Department. Friends of the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center, those who contribute to the Opera Department Scholarship Fund, are invited to attend.

First produced in 1784, the comic "King Theodore" was applauded by musical Vienna and even by Mozart — Paisiello's contemporary — who said of the composer: "Nobody better can be recommended for those who seek light music." Marie Antoinette was fond of the opera and it was her foresight in ordering an engraving made of the orchestral score that has made it possible for Boris Goldovsky to reconstruct the parts and to produce the Tanglewood premiere.

The sixth concert of the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music Series will be given in the Tanglewood Theater Wednesday (Aug. 9, 8:30) by the Kroll Quartet. The program will consist of Beethoven's Quartet in F minor, Op. 95, David Diamond's Quartet No. 2 and the Quartet in A major, Op. 41, No. 3 by Schumann.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 16 1961

London Symphony Calls Monteux, 86

Pierre Monteux

Pierre Monteux, the celebrated 86-year-old, French-born American conductor, last night was appointed as principal conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Monteux will appear at Tanglewood Saturday evening as guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed, his third appearance of the 1961 season. He is en route today from his summer home in Maine to Tanglewood, where he will rehearse with the BSO tomorrow for Saturday night's concert.

In announcing Mr. Monteux' appointment as conductor of the London orchestra, Ernest Fleischmann, general secretary of the orchestra, said: "His age in no way impairs his powers. He is much younger, both in spirit and physically, than many men younger in years."

Mr. Monteux is recognized as one of the world's great conductors. He has directed nearly 100 orchestras in Europe and the United States, including seasons with the Metropolitan Opera House in New York. He will conduct the London Symphony in October for the first time as principal conductor—a post left vacant since 1954. The orchestra will continue to give concerts and make recordings with other conductors as well.

Last year Mr. Monteux celebrated his 85th birthday by conducting the BSO in a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund at Symphony Hall in Boston. At his final Festival concert at Tanglewood Saturday night, Mr. Monteux will lead the BSO in Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" Suite; Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2, with Gary Graffman as piano soloist; and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

Mr. Monteux's career has been distinguished not only by its length but also by its musical accomplishments. In Paris, where he was born April 4, 1875, he found the Societé des Concerts Populaires and was conductor at the opera.

He appeared throughout Europe before he first toured the United States in 1916-17 (as conductor) with the Russian Ballet. He preceded the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as music director of the BSO, and since his retirement in 1952 as conductor of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra, he has been a frequent guest conductor at the invitation of Dr. Charles Munch with the BSO at the Festival concerts at Tanglewood.

At Dr. Munch's request, Mr. Monteux was guest conductor on the orchestra's transcontinental tour in 1953, as well as on both of the orchestra's foreign tours in 1952 and 1956.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 81,815
JUL 29 1961

Memorial Service Sunday For Serge Koussevitsky

LENOX—The annual memorial service for Dr. Serge Koussevitsky will be Sunday at 11 at the Church on the Hill, Congregational, with the pastor, Rev. David E. Moore, conducting the service.

For 25 years Dr. Koussevitsky was conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and was a founder of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. He died June 4, 1951, a short time before the opening of the Berkshire Festival.

Since that time, memorial services have been held at the Church on the Hill near the anniversary of his birthday, June 26.

Henry Portnoi will play "Chanson Triste," by Dr. Koussevitsky, on the Amati doublebass used by Koussevitsky during his career as doublebass virtuoso. The instrument is being loaned by Mrs. Koussevitsky for the performance.

Included in the musical program will be the following selections by the Tanglewood Choir: "Te Deum Laudamus" by Mozart, conducted by Alfred Nash Patterson; "Christe qui lux," (Christ Who Art the Light) by Byrde; "Ecce, quomodo moritur justus" (Behold, How The Just Man Must Die) by Ingegneri, conducted by Willis Becket; Revelation Mote "What Are These" by M. Frank; Magnificat "My Soul Doth Magnify the Lord" by Lamartini, conducted by Hugh Ross.

John Rodland organist, will play the organ preludes: "Lord, Jesus Christ, With Us Abide," "I Call To Thee, Lord Jesus Christ," and "In Thee is Gladness," by J. S. Bach. The offertory will be "Lord, Keep Us Steadfast In Thy Word," and for the organ postlude he will play "Processional," by M. Shaw.

After the service, the "Alleluia," by Randall Thompson will be sung at Dr. Koussevitsky's grave.

155

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127

JUL 29 1961

Memorial to Koussevitzky At Tanglewood Aug. 11-13

The orchestra that he conducted for 25 years, students from the music school which he directed and three conductors closely associated with him will pay tribute to Serge Koussevitzky (July 26, 1874 - June 4, 1951) in three concerts at Tanglewood Aug. 11, 12 and 13.

At these concerts the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be conducted by Charles Munch, Leonard Bernstein and Richard Burgin in programs of music identified with Dr. Koussevitzky, the soloists will include a former pupil of the Berkshire Music Center plus the Festival Chorus which consists of Berkshire Music Center students.

Richard Burgin will conduct the Friday concert. A member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for half of the orchestra's lifetime, Richard Burgin was appointed assistant conductor in 1935 by Serge Koussevitzky and in 1943 Dr. Koussevitzky invited him to become associate conductor. Mr. Burgin's concert will include the Symphony No. 88 by Haydn of which Serge Koussevitzky was fond and often conducted and a performance of the "Resurrection" Symphony by Gustav Mahler in which soprano Nancy Carr and contralto Eunice Alberts—a former student at the Berkshire Music Center—and the Festival Chorus, consisting of Berkshire Music Center students, will participate.

Leonard Bernstein, who will conduct Saturday evening, was 22 and little known when he entered Serge Koussevitzky's class in conducting the first year of the Berkshire Music Center (1940). He remained a pupil of Dr. Koussevitzky, who became his friend and mentor, until the Center closed during the war years. In 1946 Mr. Bernstein assisted Dr. Koussevitzky in the direction of the student orchestra and he remained on the faculty, later as head of the orchestra department, through the 1955 season. During this period Dr. Koussevitzky invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra both in Boston and at the Berkshire Festival; he also invited Mr. Bernstein to conduct his own music and to participate as piano soloist on several occasions.

For his tribute to Serge Koussevitzky, Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Adagietto movement from The Symphony for Classical Orchestra by Harold Shapero; the symphony was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation during Dr. Koussevitzky's lifetime. Mr. Bernstein will also conduct the Symphony of Psalms by Igor Stravinsky—with the Festival Chorus participating—which Serge Koussevitzky and the orchestra commissioned for the orchestra's 50th anniversary season. Mr. Bernstein will conclude his concert with a performance of a symphony long identified with Serge Koussevitzky: Tchaikovsky's No. 5.

Charles Munch, who succeeded Serge Koussevitzky as music director of the orchestra in 1949, conducted a Koussevitzky Memorial Concert in London's Royal Festival Hall on June 1. The program included Howard Hanson's "Elegy for My Friend Serge Koussevitzky" with which Munch will open the Sunday program. It will also include Honegger's Symphony No. 1 and Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, No. 3.

VALATIE, N.Y.
ROUGH NOTES
W. 1,488

AUG 11 1961

Koussevitzky Tribute At Lenox This Week

Charles Munch, Leonard Bernstein, and Richard Burgin will conduct three weekend concerts dedicated to the memory of the late Serge Koussevitsky, former music director of the Boston Symphony and first music director of the Berkshire Music Symphony.

Mr. Burgin, whom Serge Koussevitzky appointed Assistant Conductor in 1935 and Associate Conductor in 1943, will conduct the Friday concert, August 11, at 8:30. He has scheduled the Symphony No 88 by Haydn, a favorite composition of Doctor Koussevitsky's, and the Symphony No. 2, subtitled "Ressurrection", by Gustav Mahler. Soprano Nancy Carr, contralto Eunice Alberts—a former Berkshire Music Center student—and the Festival Chorus will participate in the performance of the "Resurrection" Symphony.

Leonard Bernstein was Serge Koussevitzky's pupil in the first year of the Berkshire Music Center (1940) and later Mr. Bernstein headed the Center's conducting department. For his tribute to Doctor Koussevitzky, Mr. Bernstein will conduct the Adagietto by Shapero which was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation during Doctor Koussevitzky's lifetime, the Symphony of Psalms of Stravinsky which Doctor Koussevitzky and the Orchestra commissioned for the Orchestra's 50th anniversary, and the Fifth Symphony by Tchaikovsky which Serge Koussevitzky often conducted.

LEONARD BERNSTEIN, conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its Saturday night tribute to Serge Koussevitzky.

Charles Munch will conduct the final concert of the three in tribute to Serge Koussevitzky. Doctor Munch will open his program on Sunday afternoon, August 13, 2:00, with the "Elegy for My Friend Serge Koussevitzky" by Howard Hanson.

The Sunday program will also include the Symphony No. 1 by Honnegger, commissioned by Serge Koussevitzky and the Orchestra for the Orchestra's 50th anniversary, and the Symphony No. 3 by Beethoven.

SCHENECTADY UNION STAR
Monday, August 7, 1961

Tanglewood Will Feature Symphony

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 7—Richard Burgin will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert Friday at 8:30 p.m. at the Berkshire Music Festival, Tanglewood.

The program will include Haydn's "Symphony No. 88" and Mahler's "Symphony No. 2." Soprano Nancy Carr and contralto Eunice Alberts will take part in the Mahler work.

Leonard Bernstein will conduct the concert Saturday at 8:30 p.m. The program will consist of Shapero's "Adagietto," Stravinsky's "Symphony of Pslafs" and Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 5."

The concert Sunday at 2:30 p.m. will be conducted by Charles Munch. It will open with Howard Hanson's "Elegy for My Friend Serge Koussevitzky" and will include Honegger's "Symphony No. 1" and Beethoven's "Symphony No. 3."

This week's program will be a tribute to Koussevitzky who died in 1951.

Members of the center's opera department will present the American premiere of "King Theodore in Venice" by Giovanni Paisiello tonight and tomorrow at 8:30. Friends of the opera department, those who contribute to the deparmen's scholarship fund, have been invied to attend.

The Kroll Quartet will give the chamber music concert Wednesday at 8:30 p.m. The program will include Beethoven's "Quartet in F Minor, Op. 95," David Diamond's "Quartet No. 2" and Schuhann's "Quartet in A Major, Op. 41, No. 3."

NEWS BUREAU
NEW YORK
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
SERVICE

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Tuesday, August 8, 1961

Tribute to Koussevitzky Scheduled at Tanglewood

Charles Munch has designated this weekend's Boston Symphony Orchestra programs at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., as a tribute to Serge Koussevitzky (1874-1951).

* * *

DR. MUNCH has asked Leonard Bernstein and Richard Burgin to join him as conductors of the special programs. Both Burgin and Bernstein were close associates of Dr. Koussevitsky, the orchestra's former music director and the first director of the Berkshire Music Center.

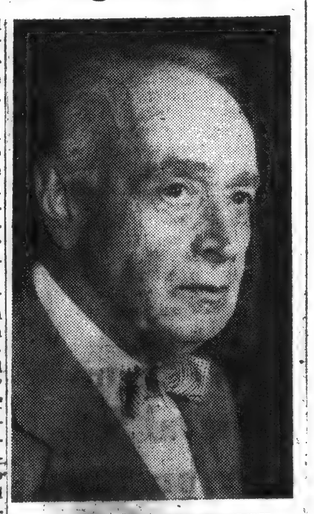
Burgin, whom Dr. Koussevitsky appointed assistant conductor in 1935 and associate conductor in 1943, will conduct the Friday evening concert. He has scheduled the "Symphony number 88," Haydn, a favorite composition of Dr. Koussevitsky; and the "Symphony number 2," subtitled "Resurrection" by Gustav Mahler. Soprano Nancy Carr and contralto Eunice Alberts and the Festival Chorus will participate in the performance of the "Resurrection" Symphony.

* * *

BERNSTEIN, Dr. Koussevitzky's pupil in the first year of the Berkshire Music Center (1940), will conduct the "Adagietto" by Shapero, which was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation during Dr. Koussevitzky's lifetime; the "Symphony of Psalms" of Stravinsky which Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra commissioned for the orchestra's 50th anniversary; and the "Fifth Symphony" by Tchaikovsky which Dr. Koussevitzy often conducted.

* * *

DR. MUNCH'S Sunday afternoon program will include "Elegy for My Friend Serge Koussevitzky," by Howard Hanson, a work commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the orchestra's 75th anniversary.



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY
Famed Music Director

The program will also include the "Symphony number 1" by Honegger, commissioned by Dr. Koussevitzky and orchestra for the orchestra's 50th anniversary; and the "Symphony number 3," Beethoven.

* * *

THE SIXTH CONCERT of the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series will be given in the Tanglewood Theater tomorrow at 8:30 p.m. by the Kroll Quartet. The program will include the Beethoven "Quartet in F minor, opus 95," David Diamond's "Quartet number 2" and the "Quartet in A major, opus 41, number 3," Schumann.

Evening concerts at Tanglewood are at 8:30 p.m. and afternoon concerts at 2:30 p.m.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263

AUG 12 1961

Tanglewood in Tribute To Koussevitzky

This week end at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, three concerts have been scheduled in tribute to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky, who died June 4, 1951. Koussevitzky's grave is within a few miles of the Tanglewood grounds where he conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra for many years and where he directed the first years of the orchestra's school, the Berkshire Music Center.

Leonard Bernstein and Richard Burgin—both friends and colleagues of Koussevitzky—are conductors of the first two concerts (Friday night and tonight) and Charles Munch, who succeeded Koussevitzky as the orchestra's music director in 1949, will conduct Sunday's concert. In addition to being a tribute to Koussevitzky, Sunday's concert will mark the 26th anniversary of the first Boston Symphony Orchestra concert in the Berkshires.

The orchestra's first concert, conducted by Koussevitzky and given on the grounds of a Berkshire estate, was on Aug. 13, 1936.

At Sunday's concert Munch will conduct Hanson's "Elegy for My Friend Serge Koussevitzky," Honegger's Symphony No. 1 and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3.

* * *

Last Two Weekends At Tanglewood

There are only two more weekends this season of music by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood.

The orchestra that he conducted for 25 years, students from the music school which he directed and three conductors closely associated with him will pay tribute to Serge Koussevitzky (1874-1951) in concerts tonight, tomorrow night and Sunday afternoon.

Richard Burgin, Associate Conductor, will conduct tonight's concert featuring soloists Nancy Carr and Eunice Alberts and the Festival Chorus.

Leonard Bernstein conducts Saturday and Musical Director Charles Muach on Sunday.

Dr. Munch and Pierre Monteux will conduct the final full orchestra concerts next weekend.

Pianist Claudio Arrau will present a Liszt Sesquicentnnial recital Wednesday, August 16, at 8:30 p. m. at the Tanglewood Theatre. He will be guest artist at the concert on August 18.

Dr. Munch, Aaron Copland and Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra Thursday evening in the final event of the Center's annual Gala Evenings.

Participating in the Gala which opens with a program of one act operas at 4 p. m. will be 284 students from 36 states and 10 foreign countries. A chamber music concert will be given at 6, a Tanglewood Choir supper concert at 7 and the orchestral concert in the Music Shed at 8:30.

REGISTER STAR
August 11, 1961

156

Our Berkshires

Tanglewood on the Air

By Katharine H. Annin

RICHMOND.

IN CASE anyone has reported that Mrs. Annin has taken leave of her senses I feel I had best explain why I was hastening along the highway near my house at a very early (for me) hour last Thursday morning with a coffee cup in my hand. It seemed like a perfectly natural thing to be doing at the time but as I look back I realize I must have looked a little odd to passers-by on their way to work.

* * *

IT ALL came about because our television set was out of order (as it always is when there is any program I particularly want to watch) and my neighbor had kindly invited me over to see with her the Tanglewood scenes on "Today" from 7 to 9 a.m. Since I am always loath to move before my first cup of coffee I was half through it in my own kitchen when I noticed it was after 7 and realized I must be missing the Danish Ballet from Jacob's Pillow. So I dashed out, cup in hand and sipping as I went. A glance at the intervening lawn showed it to be soaked with early morning dew—hence my circuitous route via both driveways and a stretch of road.

I arrived in time for the end of the dances (I didn't miss any commercials) and enjoyed greatly the Haydn played by the Boston Fine Arts Quartet. Nothing lends itself quite so well to outdoor performance as classical chamber music, unless of course you like a brass band. Then came interviews, against a background of clipped hemlock, with Arthur Fiedler, and with Rosario Mazzeo, who never let on that he knows as much about birds as about his clarinet.

* * *

BUT WHAT interested me most (as my hostess plied me with more coffee and toast and marmalade) was the conversation with Mme. Koussevitsky, who told of the Koussevitsky Music Foundation which commissions young composers to produce special works, sometimes for special occasions, and of the activities of the Music Center. I wished the time allotted to her had been sufficient to do justice to this fine school for advanced young musicians, dreamed of for years by Serge Koussevitsky and founded by him in 1940, which is a major part of Berkshire summer life. As I listened to her beautiful voice (while hoping the grass under her feet was drier than that around my house) I filled in from memory some of the stimulating musical experiences that the school has brought to Berkshire music lovers over the years.

There are the Thursday night concerts by the student orchestra, made up from the 300 or more students who gather every summer from all over the world. It is always astonishing that any group, no matter how individually proficient, that has been together such a short time can perform with such skills, especially under student conductors. If your taste runs to chamber music, choral work or opera there are performances to delight you, and if you seriously want to explore the mysteries of contemporary music there are opportunities for that.

* * *

IT HAS BEEN thrilling to many Berkshirites follow the careers of former Tanglewood students as they have gone on to triumphs in the musical world. Leonard Bernstein's amazing versatility and breadth of intellect was first revealed to me at a panel discussion sponsored by the Friends years ago; it has been no surprise that he has reached the top not only as a conductor, but as pianist, composer, author and television star as well. Lukas Foss, Seymour Lipkin, Adele Addison, Eunice Alberts developed their talent here and seem like old friends when we encounter their names year after year in the metropolitan papers. Then there are the distinguished members of the faculty whom we recognize with pleasure in the aisles of the Shed at concerts—Aaron Copland, Wallace Woodworth, Hugh Ross, Boris Goldovsky, Eleazar de Carvalho and many members of the Boston Orchestra.

It is a pity that the Music Center does not receive the local publicity and support it used to have. It is hardly explained to transient visitors what the cryptic word "Friends" after many of the program notices means. It means, of course, "Open only to holders of the season ticket issued to Friends of the Music Center." But lately the privilege of being a Friend has been priced out of reach of many who come only for a short stay or those who would like to have several memberships in the family.

* * *

GRANTED THAT we used to receive too much for far too little, we wish some compromise could be arranged whereby a smaller contribution might admit us to a limited number of the school's offerings, or that tickets were transferable within a family.

The Festival in general encourages local support through its Berkshire Nights Friday concerts at special rates for local residents, but all that many of us hear of the students is when the admirable chorus performs with the orchestra in the Shed. However, we all have an opportunity to get in touch with the Center and its various departments next Thursday if we attend the Gala Night which offers a rich program by the students from 4 o'clock on through the evening.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ALBANY KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
Saturday, August 19, 1961

Nor Did He:

Editor of The Knickerbocker News:

I was very much interested in reading your review in The Knickerbocker News the other night of Bernstein's performance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and I agree thoroughly with your appraisal of his work on the podium. His giving vent to sensationalism and extreme over-acting must be disgusting to an orchestra such as the Boston Symphony.

I knew Mr. Bernstein as a young fellow just out of college, as a student at Tanglewood. In fact, he visited me a couple of times at home where we were jointly working on a youth orchestra project here in Albany (which nothing came of, unfortunately).

I was extremely impressed with his potential, at the time, and naturally have been disappointed with his career. I have seen him conduct a few times and sometimes I wonder if he ranks with anyone of the score of top flight men I have heard. I can't associate the sound coming from the orchestra with his antics on the platform, so it is difficult to really judge.

All of this, in my opinion, is really too bad, because he undoubtedly does have great talent and has undeniably done much to promote good music through his television show in a way that no other conductor has attempted—and probably few of them could do, perhaps.

One of the things most difficult to understand about the man is that his first conductor-teacher was Fritz Reiner, a conductor of truly first-rank who uses an incredible minimum, as you know, of gestures.

Your review above mentioned and others of yours I have read in the past have been most interesting reading, far above anything of its kind in this area—in my opinion.

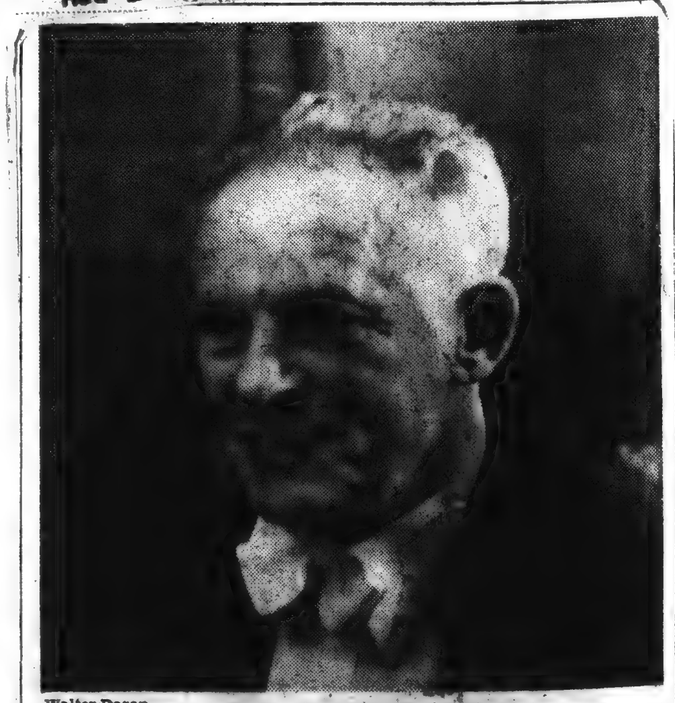
REID CALLANAN.

Loudonville.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
AUG 12 1961

Leonard Bernstein leads the Boston Symphony Orchestra in rehearsal for his concert tonight at Tanglewood in the Music Shed in memory of Serge Koussevitsky.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
AUG 10 1961

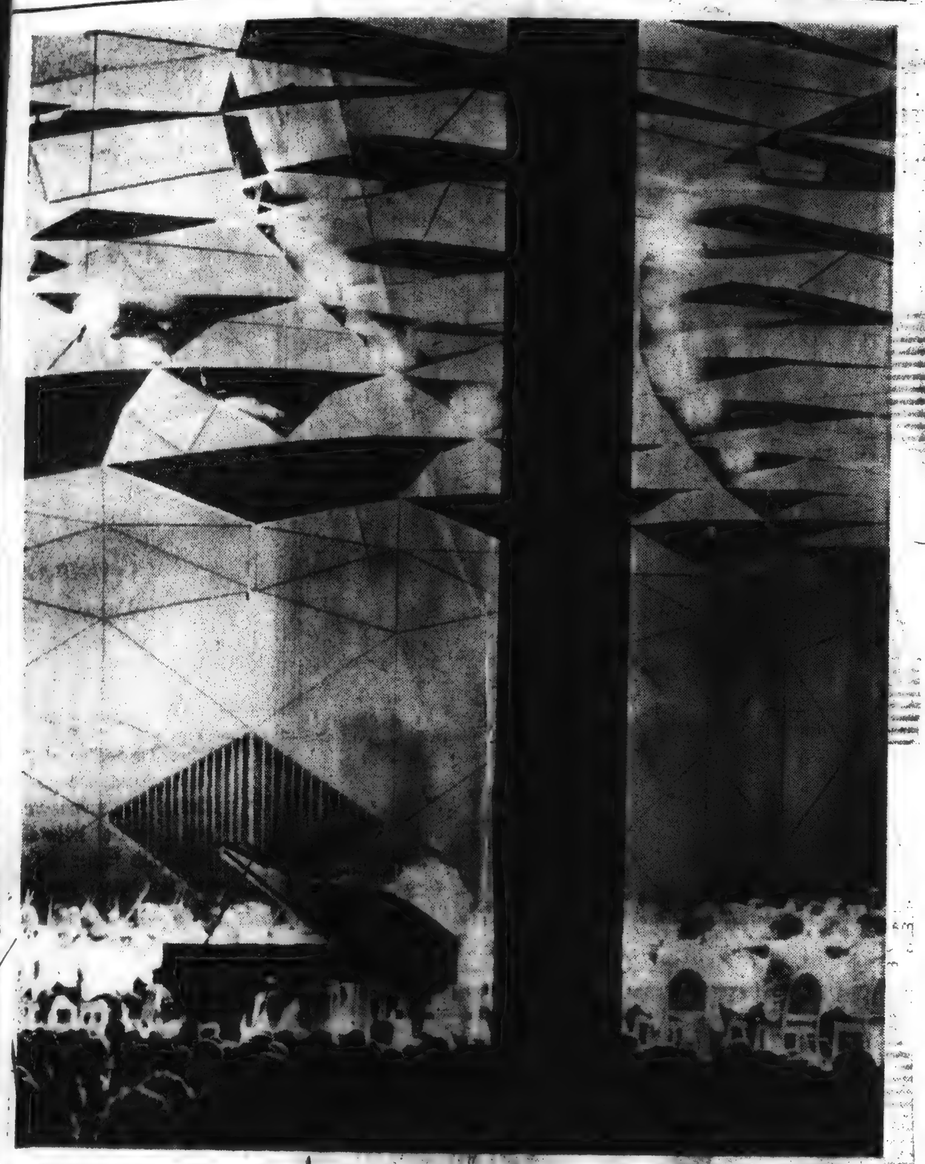


Walter Daran

Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, will be on the podium Friday night at Tanglewood.

157

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 19 1961



Conductor Pierre Monteux leads the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Tanglewood Shed

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
JUL 30 1961

3 Tanglewood Concerts To Honor Koussevitzky

LENOX — The orchestra that he conducted for 25 years, students from the music school which he directed and three conductors closely associated with him will pay tribute to Serge Koussevitzky in three concerts at Tanglewood next week end.

At these concerts Friday, Saturday and Sunday the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be conducted by Charles Munch, Leonard Bernstein and Richard Burgin in programs of music identified with Dr. Koussevitzky; the soloists will include a former pupil of the Berkshire Music Center plus the Festival Chorus which consists of Berkshire Music Center students.

Richard Burgin will conduct the Friday concert. A member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for half of the orchestra's lifetime, Richard Burgin was appointed assistant conductor in 1935 by Serge Koussevitzky, and in 1943 Dr. Koussevitzky invited him to become associate conductor.

Burgin's concert will include the Symphony No. 88 by Haydn, of which Serge Koussevitzky was fond and often conducted, and a performance of the "Resurrection" Symphony by Gustav Mahler in which soprano Nancy Carr and contralto Eunice Alberts—a former student at the Berkshire Music Center — and the Festival Chorus, will participate.

Leonard Bernstein, who will conduct Saturday evening, was 22 and little known when he entered Serge Koussevitzky's class in conducting the first year of the Berkshire Music Center (1940).

He remained a pupil of Dr. Koussevitzky, who became his friend and mentor, until the Center closed during the war years.

In 1946 Mr. Bernstein assisted Dr. Koussevitzky in the direction of the student orchestra and he remained on the faculty later as head of the orchestra department, through the 1955 season.

During this period Dr. Koussevitzky invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra both in Boston and at the Berkshire Festival; he also invited Bernstein to conduct his own music and to participate as piano soloist on several occasions.

For his tribute to Serge Koussevitzky, Leonard Bernstein will conduct the adagietto movement from The Symphony for Classical Orchestra by Harold Shapero; the symphony was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation during Dr. Koussevitzky's lifetime.

Bernstein will also conduct the Symphony of Psalms by Igor Stravinsky—with the Festival Chorus participating — which Serge Koussevitzky and the orchestra commisioned for the orchestra's 50th anniversary season.

Bernstein will conclude his concert with a performance of a symphony long identified with Serge Koussevitzky: Tchaikovsky's No. 5.

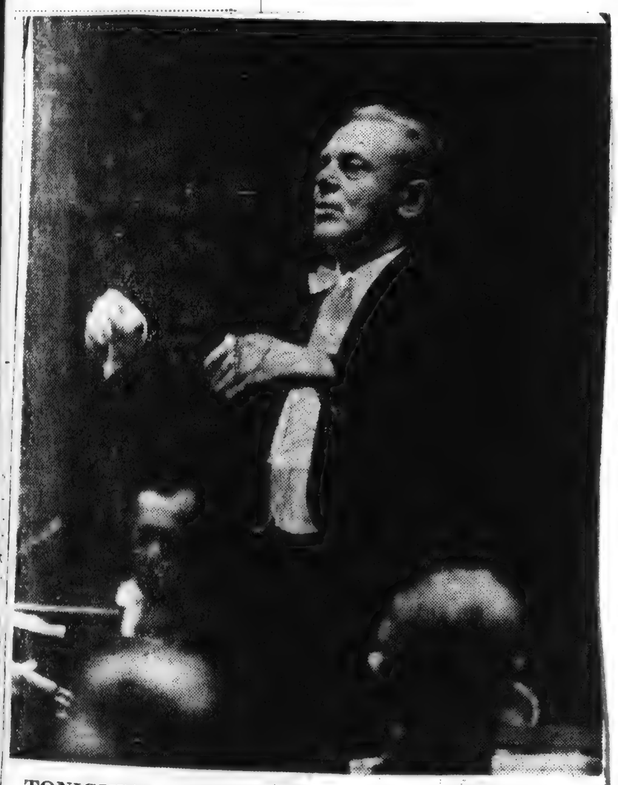
Charles Munch, who succeeded Serge Koussevitzky as music director of the orchestra in 1949, conducted a Koussevitzky Memorial Concert in London's Royal Festival Hall on June 1. The program included Howard Hanson's "Elegy for My Friend Serge Koussevitzky," with which Munch will open the Sunday program. It will also include Honegger's Symphony No. 1 and Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony. No. 3.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Review
DARIEN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,147
AUG 10 1961

Conductor

Leonard Bernstein, Conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, has been invited by Charles Munch to conduct one of the Koussevitzky's most promising conducting students in the early concerts during the week of the Berkshire Festival dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky. Mr. Bernstein was one of Dr. years of the Berkshire Music Center. The concert will be on Saturday, August 12.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 11 1961



TONIGHT'S CONDUCTOR at the opening of the sixth weekend concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed at Tanglewood will be Richard Burgin, concertmaster of BSO. Leonard Bernstein will conduct tomorrow night and Dr. Charles Munch will return to podium Sunday.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Eagle (e)
CLAREMONT, N. H.
Circ. 8,224
AUG 8 1961

LEONARD BERNSTEIN, conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, has been invited by Charles Munch to conduct one of the concerts during the week of the Berkshire Festival dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky. Mr. Bernstein was one of Dr. Koussevitzky's most promising conducting students in the early years of the Berkshire Music Center. The concert will be on Saturday, August 12 at 8:30.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
D. 80,615 S. 71,160
AUG 8 1961

FROM TANGLEWOOD

Aaron Copland, American composer, will be among the guests to be interviewed on NBC-TV's "Today" show tomorrow when a major part of the program (7 to 9 a.m.) will be devoted to live coverage of the Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Mass.

John Chancellor, host of "Today," will interview Copland, who is chairman of the Berkshire Music Center faculty and head of the composition department. Other guests on the program that morning will be Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra since 1930, and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, wife of the late conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The program will include music by the Boston Fine Arts Quartet, four members of the Boston Symphony who have formed a string ensemble, and a performance by the Royal Danish Ballet, featuring prima ballerina Inga Sand and Jorn Madson.

158
New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
AUG 6 1961

Tanglewood Plans Tribute To Serge Koussevitsky

Richard Burgin, Leonard Bernstein Are Invited To Conduct Memorial Musical Concerts

LENOX—Joseph de Pasquale, principal viola of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be heard as soloist in a performance of the Bartok Viola Concerto this afternoon at 2.30 in the Music Shed at Tanglewood. Dr. Charles Munch will conduct the orchestra in Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 and Respighi's "The Pines of Rome."

Guest Conductors

Dr. Munch has designated next week-end's concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a musical, memorial tribute to Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's former music director and the first director of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. Because of their close association with Dr. Koussevitzky, Dr. Munch has invited Richard Burgin and Leonard Bernstein to be guest conductors at the special concerts Friday and Saturday, respectively.

Mr. Burgin, whom Serge Koussevitzky appointed assistant conductor in 1935 and associate conductor in 1943, will conduct the Friday concert at 3.30 p. m. in the Music Shed. He has scheduled the Symphony No. 88 by Haydn, a favorite composition of Dr. Koussevitzky's, and the Symphony No. 2, subtitled "Resurrection," by Gustav Mahler. Soprano Nancy Carr, contralto Eunice Alberts—a former Berkshire Music Center student—and the Festival Chorus will participate in the performance of the "Resurrection" Symphony.

Leonard Bernstein was Serge Koussevitzky's pupil in the first year of the Berkshire Music Center (1940) and later Mr. Bernstein headed the center's conducting department. For his tribute to Dr. Koussevitzky Saturday night at 8.30 in the Music Shed Mr. Bernstein will conduct the Adagietto by Shapero which was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation during Dr. Koussevitzky's lifetime; the Symphony of Psalms by Stravinsky which Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra commissioned for the orchestra's 50th anniversary, and the Fifth Symphony by Tchaikovsky which Serge Koussevitzky often conducted.

Dr. Munch will conduct the final concert of the three in tribute to Serge Koussevitzky. Dr. Munch will open his program next Sunday afternoon at 2.30 with the "Elegy for My Friend Serge Koussevitzky" by Howard Hanson. This work was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the orchestra's 75th anniversary. Dr. Munch last conducted the "Elegy" on June 1 in London when, with the London Philharmonic Orchestra, he presented a concert at Royal Festival Hall in memory of Serge Koussevitzky. The Sunday program will also include the Symphony No. 1 by Honegger, commissioned by Serge Koussevitzky and the orchestra for the orchestra's 50th anniversary, and the Symphony No. 3 by Beethoven.

American Premiere

The American premiere of "King Theodore in Venice" by Giovanni Paisiello will be presented at Tanglewood Monday and Tuesday evenings at 8.30 by members of the Berkshire Music Center's Opera Department. Friends of the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center, those who contribute to the Opera Department Scholarship Fund, are invited to attend.

First produced in 1784, the comic "King Theodore" was applauded by musical Vienna and even by Mozart—Paisiello's contemporary—who said of the composer: "Nobody better can be recommended for those who seek light music." Marie Anoinette was fond of the opera and it was her foresight in ordering an engraving made of the orchestral score that has made it possible for Boris Goldovsky to reconstruct the parts and to produce the Tanglewood premiere.

The sixth concert of the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music Series will be given in the Tanglewood Theater Wednesday at 8.30 p. m. the Kroll Quartet. The program will consist of Beethoven's Quartet in F minor, Op. 95, David Diamond's Quartet No. 2 and the Quartet in A major, Op. 41, No. 3 by Schumann.

Among Notables at Tanglewood This Week

Famous personalities in the music world will be at the Berkshire Music Festival this week. Top row, left, Leonard Bernstein of the New York Philharmonic, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra Saturday evening; center, Eunice Alberts, contralto, Friday soloist; right, Richard Burgin, Friday conductor; lower row, left, Boris Goldovsky, head of the Opera Department, will present "King Theodore in Venice" Monday and Tuesday evening; center, the Kroll Quartet, who will present a chamber concert Wednesday; and right, Nancy Carr, soprano, Friday soloist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
AUG 16 1961

Pierre Monteux, 86, Gets London Symphony Baton

PIERRE MONTEUX

LONDON (AP)—At age 86, the French-born American conductor Piere Monteux was appointed Tuesday night as principal conductor in the London Symphony Orchestra.

Age No Hindrance

"His age in no way impairs his powers," said Ernest Fleischmann, general secretary of the orchestra.

"He is much younger, both in spirit and physically, than many men younger in years."

Monteux is recognized as one of the world's great conductors. He has waved the baton over nearly 100 orchestras in Europe and the United States, including seasons with the Metropolitan Opera House in New York. He is a frequent guest conductor of the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood.

Tanglewood Topics

Sunday, 10 a. m., Music Hall, Berkshire Chamber Music; 2.30 p. m., Music Shed, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conductor, Joseph de Pasquale soloist.

Monday, 8.30 p. m., Music Hall, Opera Department's presentation of "King Theodore in Venice."

Tuesday, 8.30 p. m., Music Hall, Opera Department's presentation of "King Theodore in Venice."

Wednesday, 8.30 p. m., Theater, Kroll Quartet.

Thursday, 8.30 p. m., Berkshire Music Center Orchestra.

Friday, 3.15 p. m., Music Hall, Seminar in Contemporary Music; 8.30 p. m., Music Shed, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Richard Burgin conductor, Festival Chorus, Nancy Carr and Eunice Alberts soloists.

Saturday, 10 a. m., Music Shed, Boston Symphony Orchestra rehearsal; 8.30 p. m., Music Shed, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Leonard Bernstein conductor.

American Premiere

The Opera Department of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center will present the American premiere of Giovanni Paisiello's "King Theodore in Venice" in the Theater at Tanglewood Monday and Tuesday at 8.30 p. m. Boris Goldovsky, Opera Department head, is in charge of the production which will be performed by students in the department. Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make a voluntary contribution to the Opera Department Scholarship Fund, are invited to attend the performances.

Although the composer of more than 100 operas, many of which held high favor with musicians of the day, Giovanni Paisiello (1740-1816) is seldom represented on the United States opera stage today. "King Theodore" has, according to Mr. Goldovsky, never been performed in this country; it has had no performances anywhere for perhaps 150 years.

Described by Mr. Goldovsky as "a comic opera with a sad ending, sad because the king is put in jail," the Tanglewood production of "King Theodore" will include a small orchestra, with instrumentation of the period, conducted by Maurits Sillem.

In addition to Mr. Sillem other members of Mr. Goldovsky's staff who have participated in the production include Arthur Schoep, who, with Mr. Goldovsky, prepared the English version of the Giambattista Casti libretto and assisted Mr. Goldovsky in the staging; Aristides Gazetas who designed the settings and lighting; and Leo Van Witsen who designed the costumes.

Members of the cast include Junetta Jones, Peggy Skarry, Colleen Bischoff, Janice Sullivan, James Wainner, Eric Davis, Alan Cathcart, David Clatworthy, Sherrill Milnes and Justino Diaz.

Guest Conductors

The orchestra that he conducted for 25 years, students from the music school which he directed and three conductors closely associated with him will pay tribute to Serge Koussevitzky (July 26, 1874-June 4, 1951) in three concerts at Tanglewood, Friday, Saturday and next Sunday. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be conducted by Charles Munch, Leonard Bernstein and Richard Burgin in programs of music identified with Dr. Koussevitzky.

Richard Burgin will conduct the Friday concert. A member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for half of the orchestra's lifetime, Richard Burgin was appointed assistant conductor in 1935 by Serge Koussevitzky and in 1943 associate conductor.

Leonard Bernstein, who will conduct Saturday evening, was 22 and little known when he entered Serge Koussevitzky's class in conducting the first year of the Berkshire Music Center (1940). He remained a pupil of Dr. Koussevitzky, who became his friend and mentor, until the center closed during the war years. In 1946 Mr. Bernstein assisted Dr. Koussevitzky in the direction of the student orchestra and he remained on the faculty, later as head of the orchestra department through the 1955 season. During this period Dr. Koussevitzky invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra both in Boston and at the Berkshire Festival; he also invited Mr. Bernstein to conduct his own music and to participate as piano soloist on several occasions.

Charles Munch, who succeeded Serge Koussevitzky as music director of the orchestra in 1949, conducted a Koussevitzky Memorial Concert in London's Royal Festival Hall on June 1.

159

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 25,933
AUG 12 1961

DOUBLE MURDER OR ACCIDENT? — Nope, nothing like that. These are music lovers resting between concerts at the Tanglewood Music Festival in the Berkshires. The photo was taken by YOUR WEEKEND GUIDE editor who gives you a full-page report on what's doing in the Berkshires on Page 34. Don't miss it.

Second Thoughts On Music

Ormandy Brilliant Star Of Tanglewood Concert

Philadelphia Conductor Puts Boston Symphony Through Musical Paces in Admirable Fashion

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, was the bright, particular star of last week's concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed at Tanglewood. It was his first appearance at a Berkshire Festival. He brought to the festival the electric impulse, absent since the days of Koussevitzky and thrilled a large audience, more than 8000 persons, with the vitality of his conducting and the intensity of his readings.

Day in Sun

Aaron Copland had his day in the sun during the week. As dean of the Berkshire Center, it seems a foregone conclusion that his works must be played. These days he also conducts. There is no doubt that the American composer is one of the most significant names in music in this country and he appears to have a large and loyal following.

Charles Munch, regular conductor of the Boston Symphony, conducted the last of the three Music Shed concerts by the full orchestra. He brought to his readings the aristocratic manner, sympathetic understanding of the music which characterizes his conducting. Everyone is speculating on what Leinsdorf will bring to the festival when he assumes direction of the Boston orchestra. How many heads will fall? The general opinion is that Leinsdorf is a capable conductor and an outstanding conductor in the Wagnerian field. The doubt seems to be mainly whether or not he is a big enough figure to head the Boston Symphony schedule. We shall have to wait to see.

Tough Fare

Like any visiting conductor, Ormandy provided the kind of program he does best. It opened with a stunning reading of the Strauss Tone Poem, "Don Juan" and ended with an admirable realization of the "Symphony No. 2, in D Major" by Brahms. Between these two works were Roy Harris' "Symphony No. 3" and Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane," the second suite for orchestra.

All this entailed some tough fare for the musicians. I do not remember ever seeing them work so hard, but the results were magnificent. Ormandy's tempi were fast and his climaxes overpowering. Each performance was a show as well as a musical experience. Roy Harris, once one of the most significant names in American music, wrote his third symphony in a single movement. During the work, Harris explores every segment of the orchestra, using every resource with incomparable skill and effect. It called for a virtuoso performance and that is what it got.

Considerable Charm

Roussel's ballet is a work of great strength and considerable charm, Brahms' secodn symphony is a warm, glowing work, rich in melody and depth of feeling. Ormandy, who conducts without score, provided an eloquent performance; the kind one remembers long after it is over.

Aaron Copland opened the week-end concerts conducting two of his works, the "Preamble for a Solemn Occasion" and his "Appalachian Spring." Mr. Copland lacks grace in his conducting, but he made his points, particularly in the "Appalachian Suite," one of his most admired creations. The "Preamble for a Solemn" was written for the first anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration of Human Rights by the United Nations. It is a strong piece, sincere and often moving.

One of Best

Charles Munch concluded the concert with his own special brand of performance of French music, in this case the "Daphne et Chloe" ballet by Ravel. The Festival Chorus had been prepared by Hugh Ross and Willie Beckett. It sang well and there was a admirable integration of vocal and orchestra tone. In fact, the performance was one of the best of the season.

The final program of the week end brought back to the Music Shed one of Tanglewood's favorite pianists, Byron Janis in two Liszt concertos, the Piano Concerto No. 2 in A Major and the "Piano Concerto No. 1 in E-flat Major." In addition there was th eBeethoven fourth symphony and "Three New England Sketches" by Walter Piston. As was to be expected, Janis stole the show with his brilliant, powerful pianism, which seemed just made for these concertos. The orchestra collaboration under Munch was admirable. Janis has a formidable technique and the assurance of one who has had vast experience. If brilliance was what Liszt demanded, he got it in large quantities. In the lyrical passages Janis brought a delicacy of touch which floated to the furthest seat.

Applause Terrific

Liszt could weave beautiful melodies, slightly "corny" at times, but always seeming to fit into the picture. Janis provided finely wrought performances which the audience relished. The applause was terrific.

The weather has been both bad and good but the total audiences to the three concerts was some 26,000, only 300 less than attended the same time last year.

Orchestra to Honor Serge Koussevitzky

8/15/61

The orchestra that he conducted for 25 years, students from the music school which he directed, and three conductors closely associated with him will pay tribute to Serge Koussevitzky in three concerts at the Berkshire Music Festival in Lenox next weekend.

At three concerts beginning at 8:30 next Friday and Saturday evenings and 2:30 Sunday afternoon the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be conducted by Charles Munch, music director of the unit, Leonard Bernstein, regular conductor of the New Yorl. Philharmonic, and Richard Burgin, concert master and first violin of the Boston orchestra.

Burgin's program Friday evening includes Symphony No. 88 by Haydn and the Resurrection Symphony by Gustav Mahler, featuring soprano Nancy Carr and contralto Eunice Alberts.

Bernstein, who will conduct the Saturday evening concert, was 22 years old and little known when he entered Koussevitky's class in conducting the first year of the Berkshire Music Center in 1940.

For his tribute to the late Koussevitzky, Bernstein will conduct the adagietto movement from the Symphony for Classical Orchestra by Harold Shapero, the Symphony of the Psalms by Igor Stravinsky with the festival chorus participating, and Symphony No. 5 by Tchaikovsky.

Munch, who succeeded Koussevitzky as music director of the Boston orchestra in 1949, will lead the group through Howard Hanson's Elegy for My Friend Serge Koussevitzky, Honegger's Symphony No. 1 and Beethoven's Eroica Symphony, otherwise known as the symphony No. 3.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

AUG 13 1961

Koussevitzky Memorial at Tanglewood

This weekend at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, three concerts were scheduled in tribute to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky who died June 4, 1951. Doctor Koussevitzky's grave is within a few miles of the Tanglewood grounds where he conducted the orchestra for many years and where he directed the first years of the orchestra's school, the Berkshire Music Center.

Leonard Bernstein and Richard Burgin—both friends and colleagues of Doctor Koussevitzky—conducted the first two concerts on Friday and Saturday nights and Charles Munch, who succeeded Serge Koussevitzky as the orchestra's music director in 1949, will conduct today's concert.

160 "King Theodore" - Opera - Aug. 7 -

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
AUG 8 1961

Paisiello Opera Revival By Berkshire Students

By CYRUS DURGIN

LENOX, Aug. 7—"King Theodore in Venice, a real operatic novelty by Giovanni Paisiello, was revived at Tanglewood tonight by students of the Berkshire Music Center. Very likely this was the American premiere of a work not only unfamiliar but utterly forgotten. Even Boris Goldovsky, who conceived this project and staged it, was put to much trouble to find a complete score that could be copied.

Who was Paisiello? A Neapolitan, born 1740 (and therefore 16 years older than Mozart) and the composer of the first "Barber of Seville," which was the rage in Italy years before Rossini created a better opera upon the same play by Beaumarchais.

Paisiello stopped in Vienna, upon his way back to Naples after some years in the service of Catherine the Great of Russia, and there wrote "King Theodore," whose premiere in 1784 was attended by Mozart.

From Paisiello, as the music tonight proved, Mozart learned something of comic opera procedures, the craft of large and extended finales and the knack of symmetrical, flowing vocal melody. In Paisiello, Rossini learned the secrets of the early 19th Century Italian equivalent of the fast patter song over the rum-tum-tum-tum harmonic basis of tonic-and-dominant.

Sir Arthur Sullivan perpetuated the device, and, indeed, "King Theodore" in the mechanical close-rhyming of the English translation by Mr. Goldovsky and Arthur Schoep, sounds very much like Savoy operettas.

The original librettist, Giambattista Casti, wrote a book here that was based upon factual history of but 40 years earlier. There had been a real King Theodore who went to Venice to raise money for his realm of Corsica, exhausted after long wars with the Republic of Genoa, and who succeeded only in running up a record amount of debt, and who finally died in an English debtors' prison. Theodore, a remarkable smothie, had been Baron von Neuhoff, who got himself elected and crowned hereditary King of Corsica.

The opera plot embroiders upon the Venetian episode, setting the King, upon the advice of his Prime Minister Gafforio, to wooing Lisetta, daughter of the inn keeper Taddeo, so that the large hotel bill might never have to be paid and Taddeo could be induced, on being created a Field Marshal, to advance a loan.

Meanwhile Theodore's sister Belisa, unseen by him these many years, turns up and catches the eye of Acmet, deposed Sultan of Turkey. Belisa also exercises the family talent by working upon the infatuated Turk for money. Meanwhile, the merchant Sandrino, in love with Lisetta, endures the usual comic opera woes of a lover in trouble.

Mr. Goldovsky merits our thanks for a story even to a student stage so rare if also not so very substantial a divertissement as "King Theodore."

It had been a hit 177 years ago, which is justification enough. Unfortunately, some things went wrong in an otherwise commendable student production. The orchestral parts, as Mr. Golovsky explained, arrived late and badly smudged; there was not enough timet to re-copy and the orchestral players did not master their parts. So Maurits Sillem, who would have conducted provided accompaniment upon a piano, but not always intempo with the singers, who also sang out of tune a good bit.

Substitution of a piano for orchestra quite naturally changed the whole character of the instrumental portion of the opera.

Sherrill Milnes as King Theodore, and Justino Diaz as Taddeo, were the only members of the cast who came anywhere near professional competence in both singing and acting. The Lisetta of Peggy Skarry was conventionally vivacious, and in part well sung, but all too often she was sharp of the pitch. James Wainner displayed a good tenor voice as Samdrino. The others sang, spoke and acted with amateurish high spirit.

No musical changes were effecte dfrom Paisiello's original, save that recitatives were converted to spoken dialogue and shortened. The unit settings ranging from a hotel room to a brace of gardens and a prison for the last scene, did credit to designer and lighter Aristides Gazetas. They were the best I ever have seen at Berkshire operatic ventures.

A second performance will be given tonight, with some alternate singers.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SARATOGA SARATOGIAN
Friday, August 4, 1961

'King Theodore in Venice' Set at Tanglewood Theater

The American premiere of Giovanni Paisiello's "King Theodore in Venice" will be given by the Berkshire Music Center opera department Monday and Tuesday in the theatre at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Boris Glodovsky, department head, is in charge of the produciton which will be performed by students.

Friends of the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center have been invitd to attnd the performances. "Friends" are those who make a voluntary contribution to the department's scholarship fund.

Paisiello (1740-1816), who composed more than 100 operas, is seldom represented on the United States opera stage today.

According to Goldovsky, "King Theodore" has never been performed in this country and has had no performances anywhere for perhaps 150 years.

Goldovsky learned of "King Theodore" through an essay by the late Alfred Einstein in his "Essays on Music."

His interest aroused, Goldovsky discovered that Marie Antoinette's affection for this opera had caused her to have an engraving made of the orchestral score.

This score Goldovsky compared with an original manuscript he found in Naples plus a piano-vocal score he located in Vienna.

From the material he was able to prepare the English version which will be presented at Tanglewood.

Described by Goldovsky as "a comic opera with a sad ending because the king is put in jail," the Tanglewood production of "King Theodore" will include a small orchestra, with instrumentation of the period, conducted by Maurits Sillem.

Goldovsky's production of "King Theodore" will be presented before the American Musicological Society at their meetings in New York this September.

New England Newsclip Agency Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4207
Review
DARIEN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,147
AUG 10 1961

At Tanglewood

Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center, is in charge of the major operatic production to be presented by the opera students at Tanglewood this season. The Paisiello opera, "King Theodore in Venice," has never been performed in the United States and not in the world for the past 150 years. Following a reading of an essay by the late Alna before he was able to collect the complete manuscript. The opera will be in English, based upon a translation of the Giambattista Casti libretto which was accomplished by Mr. Goldovsky and Arthur Schoep.

KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
D. 16,291
JUL 31 1961

SOCIAL ACTIVITIES

SOCIETIES • CLUBS • PERSONALS

American Premiere of Paisiello Opera Is Scheduled for Tanglewood August 7

The Opera Department of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center will present the American premiere of Giovanni Paisiello's "King Theodore in Venice" in the Theatre at Tanglewood Monday and Tuesday, August 7 and 8. Boris Goldovsky, Opera Department head, is in charge of the production which will be performed by students in the department. Friends of the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make a voluntary contribution to the Opera Department Scholarship Fund, are invited to attend the performances.

Although the composer of more than one hundred operas, many of which held high favor with musicians of the day, Giovanni Paisiello (1740-1816) is seldom represented on the United States opera stage today. "King Theodore" has, according to Mr. Goldovsky, never been performed in this country; it has had no performances anywhere for perhaps 150 years.

Known for his investigations to unearth interesting and significant operas for production at Tanglewood, Mr. Goldovsky learned of "King Theodore" through an essay on this opera by the late Alfred Einstein in his "Essays on Music." His interest aroused, Mr. Goldovsky discovered Marie Antoinette's affection for this opera has caused her to have an engraving made of the orchestral score. This score Mr. Goldovsky compared with an original manuscript he found in Naples plus a piano-vocal score he located in Vienna. From this material Mr. Goldovsky was able to prepare the English version which will be presented at Tanglewood.

Described by Mr. Goldovsky as "a comic opera with a sad ending, sad because the King is put in jail," the Tanglewood production of "King Theodore" will include a small orchestra, with instrumentation of the period, conducted by Maurits Sillem. In addition to Mr. Sillem, other members of Mr. Goldovsky's staff who have participated in the production include Arthur Schoep who, with Mr. Goldovsky, prepared the English version of the Giambattista Casti libretto and assisted Mr. Goldovsky in the staging; Aristides Gazetas who designed the settings and lighting; and Leo Van Witsen who designed the costumes.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 47,136
AUG 2 1961

Tanglewood to Offer Opera by Paisiello

By DOROTHY RITZ
Music Editor

The American premiere of Giovanni Paisiello's "King Theodore in Venice" will be given by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center on Monday and Tuesday in the theater at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

* * *

BORIS GOLDOVSKY, department head, is in charge of the production which will be performed by students. Friends of the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center have been invited to attend the performances. "Friends" are those who make a voluntary contribution to the Opera Department Scholarship fund.

Paisiello (1740-1816), who composed more than 100 operas, is seldom represented on the United States opera stage today. According to Goldovsky, "King Theodore" has never been performed in this country and has had no performances anywhere for perhaps 150 years.

Goldovsky learned of "King Theodore" through an essay by the late Alfred Einstein in his "Essays on Music." His interest aroused, Goldovsky discovered that Marie Antoinette's affection for this opera had caused her to have an engraving made of the orchestral score.

* * *

THIS SCORE Goldovsky compared with an original manuscript he found in Naples plus a piano-vocal score he located in Vienna. From the material he was able to prepare the English version which will be presented at Tanglewood.

BORIS GOLDOVSKY
. . . Charge of Production

Described by Goldovsky as "a comic opera with a sad ending because the king is put in jail," the Tanglewood production of "King Theodore" will include a small orchestra, with instrumentation of the period, conducted by Maurits Sillem.

Goldovsky's production of "King Theodore" will be presented before the American Musicological Society at their meetings in New York this September.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
CHARLES MUNCH
Music Director

THEATRE-CONCERT HALL — TANGLEWOOD

Monday and Tuesday Evenings, August 7 and 8, 1961

The Opera Department and the Orchestra

of the
BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER

PRESENT

KING THEODORE IN VENICE

(Il Re Teodoro in Venezia)

Opera in two acts and seven scenes

Music by GIOVANNI PAISIELLO Libretto by GIAMBATTISTA CASTI
English version by ARTHUR SCHOEP and BORIS GOLDOVSKY

Conducted by . . . . . MAURITS SILLEM
Staged by . . . BORIS GOLDOVSKY and ARTHUR SCHOEP
Settings & Lighting by . . . . ARISTIDES GAZETAS
Costumes by . . . . . LEO VAN WITSEN

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
AUG 6 1961

Whitestone Photo

ARBOREAL REHEARSAL—Eric Davis, left, Cohleen Bischoff and Sherrill Milnes, students of the Berkshire Music Center Opera Department at Tanglewood, Mass., prepare for the American premiere tomorrow night of Paisiello's "King Theodore in Venice."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

AUG 8 1961

Music Review

Opera at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE OPERA Department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood presented its first formal program of the season last night in the theater-concert hall. "Il Re Teodoro in Venezia" ("King Theodore in Venice") of Giovanni Paisiello, a comic opera in two acts and seven scenes, was presented by a cast selected from the students of the school who performed and sang to professional standards.

Boris Goldovsky, the head of the department, gave his customary and, as usual, brilliantly lucid, short talk before each act to explain the background and action of the plot. The opera was sung in English, translated and adapted by Goldovsky and Arthur Schoep, one of his assistants at Tanglewood.

* * *

PAISIELLO preceded Mozart by nearly two decades. Adhering to the custom by which composers and musicians either sank or swam in that era, Paisiello found employment and protection in royal and feudal establishments far and wide in Europe. During a music intendantship in the household of the Empress Catherine in St. Petersburg he wrote a "Barber of Seville" after Beaumarchais' book which became so popular that the composer's supporters strongly objected to an attempt to use the same source for an opera again 35 years later by a youngster named Rossini.

"Il Re Teodoro" was written in Vienna in 1784 for Joseph II. The English version used last night exposed the plot till its farcical infantilism interfered with our credulity. Quickly, it has to do with the impasses and obstacles met by royal personnages traveling incognito in foreign lands. There appears, as expected, a pretty innkeeper's daughter and other alluring females also on location for undisclosed reasons. This was ammunition for any who oppose opera in English. We are sure we would not have giggled at some phrases if they were in a foreign language.

* * *

THE VOICES were excellent and on a thoroughly professional standard. The direction was natural and therefore a distinctly pleasureable factor in the enjoyment of the evening. The accompaniment, scheduled for an orchestra of instrumentalists of the school, was supplied by the extremely competent Goldovsky at the piano. The orchestra had to be abandoned after the dress rehearsal proved it was not feasible for a variety of reasons.

The title role was sung by Sherrill Milnes, lodging in a Venetian inn as Count Alberto; his prime minister by Eric Davis (disguised as a servant); the innkeeper and his daughter were Justino Diaz and Peggy Skarry; a Venetian merchant by James Wainner; Acmet, a deposed sultan of Turkey (!) by Allen Cathcart; Belisa, Teodoro's sister, by Cohleen Bischoff (who was astounded to run into her royal brother under such circumstances); and a varied number of servants, gondoliers, police and a quintet of lovely Venetian ladies, all members of the school's opera department. The opera will be repeated tonight with alternates singing several roles.

* * *

THE MUSIC has simplicity and grace and many arias have considerable charm. There are many occasions for concerted singing and these were outstandingly effective. The first act closes with an extraordinary septet in which the seven principals maintained a clarity and coherence quite remarkable. Unfortunately, they were assigned short, punchy phrases applicable to the situation but in repetition becoming slightly risible, such as "Who is he" or "Who is she" and "Let me be." Vexatious incidents were magnified to affairs of global importance and all details were exaggerated for theatrical purposes. This could well explain the work's neglect for near centuries.

The stage setting by Aristides Bazetas was a symmetrical perspective cleverly and attractively adaptable to interiors and outdoor situations. The costumes by Leo Van Witsen were colorful and gaudy, and, we are willing to believe, authentic. Paisiello's "Barber" preceded Mozart's "Figaro" by four years so that a first inclination to place the Italian in the wake of the Salzburg genius becomes anachronistic. They both wrote for similar audiences in the style of their day, and, as music, Goldovsky did a highly commendable service in reviving such an estimable vehicle to display the splendid voices used last night.

Show Goes On

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

MAY 7 1961

USA Premiere at Tanglewood Of Paisiello 'King Theodore'

Boris Goldovsky will conduct the first performances in this country of a little-known opera of Paisiello, at Tanglewood in the Berkshires, Aug. 7 and 8.

This is "King Theodore in Venice", written in Vienna in 1784 when Paisiello was on his way back to Naples from service at the court of Catherine the Great in St. Petersburg. The opera was produced in Vienna that year, and on the word of Mrs. Julian Marshall and Alfred Loewenberg, in Grove's Dictionary, contains "some of his best music."

Mr. Goldovsky became interested in the work when he read an allusion to it in a book of essays by the late Alfred Einstein. In pursuit of the score he found there was neither a vocal-and-piano reduction nor orchestral parts in existence. Then he discovered a partial manuscript in Vienna, which he compared with a full score which had been engraved in Paris on command of Marie Antoinette.

These performances of "King Theodore in Venice" may also be the first anywhere in something like 150 years. The American Musicological Society will sponsor a third performance in New York in September.

NOTE ON THE TANGLEWOOD PRODUCTION

In the present production (which is very likely the first in the western hemisphere) all the orchestrally accompanied numbers will be heard in the original form and in the order given in Paisiello's original manuscript, a microfilm of which could fortunately be obtained from the composer's native city of Naples. The only major change is the substitution of spoken dialogue for the secco recitatives of the original version. The uninspired sequence of harmonies in these recitatives creates a strong suspicion that these sections of the score had been entrusted to one of Paisiello's pupils, a common practice in the eighteenth century when composers were expected to fashion full-length works on extremely short notice.

Paisiello's score has many features of extraordinary interest. Especially remarkable are the two extended finales, the one to the first act being a worthy precursor of the great second-act finale of Mozart's The Marriage of Figaro. In this connection it is worth mentioning that Mozart was present at the first performance of King Theodore in Venice in Vienna and was obviously greatly impressed by the work. When listening to King Theodore, opera lovers will be reminded of many a musical and dramatic idea normally associated with The Marriage of Figaro (1786), Don Giovanni (1787), and Così fan tutte (1790). Should they be tempeted to accuse Paisiello of borrowing from Mozart, they are respectfully reminded that the shoe is really on the other foot, since King Theodore was produced in 1784.

Even more striking than the finale of the first act of King Theodore is the one which concludes the opera. This extended fugato describing the rotation of the wheel of fortune is prophetic in feeling of the justly famous final fugue of Verdi's Falstaff, which was written more than a century after King Theodore.

Thanks are due Arthur Schoep, a doctoral student at the University of Colorado, whose scholarship and diligence in assembling and collating the many conflicting versions made this production possible. The ornamentation of the vocal line, an essential stylistic feature in the performance of Paisiello's music, was provided by Maurits Sillem. The Berkshire Music Center wishes to express its gratitude to the American Musicological Society and to the University of Colorado Libraries for assistance in locating and microfilming musical manuscripts not available in the United States. B.G.

NOTE ON KING THEODORE

The plot which the Abbate Giambattista Casti fashioned for Giovanni Paisiello was based on historical events which had actually occurred just about fifty years earlier. The real-life Theodore of Casti's libretto was unquestionably one of the most colorful figures of his time. In the century which produced such renowned charlatans and adventurers as Cagliostro,

CAST
(in Order of Appearance)

Gafforio—Prime Minister of Corsica, disguised as a servant	ERIC DAVIS
Theodore—King of Corsica, lodging at Taddeo's inn under the name of Count Alberto	SHERRILL MILNES / JUSTINO DIAZ
Taddeo—Venetian innkeeper	PEGGY SKARRY / JUNETTA JONES
Lisetta—Taddeo's daughter	JAMES WAINNER
Sandrino—Venetian merchant	ALLEN CATHCART / DAVID CLATWORTHY
Acmet—deposed Sultan of Turkey, lodging at Taddeo's inn under the name of Niceforo	COHLEEN BISCHOFF / JANICE SULLIVAN
Belisa—Theodore's sister	RICHARD GOLDEN
A Venetian court official

Servants, gondoliers, police officials, Venetian ladies and gentlemen — members of the Opera Department

(Where two singers are listed for the same role, those whose names appear first sing on Monday; those listed second sing on Tuesday.)

* * *

The action takes place in Venice about the year 1740.

Synopsis of Scenes

ACT I

SCENE 1—King Theodore's Apartments in Taddeo's Inn
SCENE 2—Garden of Taddeo's Inn

ACT II

SCENE 1—King Theodore's Apartments
SCENE 2—Garden facing the Grand Canal
SCENE 3—King Theodore's Apartments
SCENE 4—Garden facing the Grand Canal
SCENE 5—A prison

There will be a twenty-minute intermission between acts and short pauses between scenes.

The Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center: BORIS GOLDOVSKY, assisted by ROBERT K. EVANS, THOMAS PHILIPS, FREDRIC POPPER, ARTHUR SCHOEP, FELIX WOLFES.

PRODUCTION STAFF

Stage Manager: Norman Womack
Musical Preparation: Anthony Addison, Peggy Donovan, Robert Larsen, Ross Reimueller
Technical Director: Aloysius Petrucelli
Master Carpenter: Nick Bellini
Master Electrician: Kim Brandt
Assistant to Mr. Gazetas: Paul Marantz
Assistant to Mr. Van Witsen: Norman Womack
Properties: Michael Skarry
Stage Crew: Michael Rodgers, Cara Shubin
House Staff:

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
AUG 6 1961

Whitestone Photo

ARBOREAL REHEARSAL—Eric Davis, left, Cohleen Bischoff and Sherrill Milnes, students of the Berkshire Music Center Opera Department at Tanglewood, Mass., prepare for the American premiere tomorrow night of Paisiello's "King Theodore in Venice."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

AUG 8 1961

Music Review

Opera at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE OPERA Department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood presented its first formal program of the season last night in the theater-concert hall. "Il Re Teodoro in Venezia" ("King Theodore in Venice") of Giovanni Paisiello, a comic opera in two acts and seven scenes, was presented by a cast selected from the students of the school who performed and sang to professional standards.

Boris Goldovsky, the head of the department, gave his customary and, as usual, brilliantly lucid, short talk before each act to explain the background and action of the plot. The opera was sung in English, translated and adapted by Goldovsky and Arthur Schoep, one of his assistants at Tanglewood.

* * *

PAISIELLO preceded Mozart by nearly two decades. Adhering to the custom by which composers and musicians either sank or swam in that era, Paisiello found employment and protection in royal and feudal establishments far and wide in Europe. During a music intendantship in the household of the Empress Catherine in St. Petersburg he wrote a "Barber of Seville" after Beaumarchais' book which became so popular that the composer's supporters strongly objected to an attempt to use the same source for an opera again 35 years later by a youngster named Rossini.

"Il Re Teodoro" was written in Vienna in 1784 for Joseph II. The English version used last night exposed the plot till its farcical infantilism interfered with our credulity. Quickly, it has to do with the impasses and obstacles met by royal personnages traveling incognito in foreign lands. There appears, as expected, a pretty innkeeper's daughter and other alluring females also on location for undisclosed reasons. This was ammunition for any who oppose opera in English. We are sure we would not have giggled at some phrases if they were in a foreign language.

* * *

THE VOICES were excellent and on a thoroughly professional standard. The direction was natural and therefore a distinctly pleasureable factor in the enjoyment of the evening. The accompaniment, scheduled for an orchestra of instrumentalists of the school, was supplied by the extremely competent Goldovsky at the piano. The orchestra had to be abandoned after the dress rehearsal proved it was not feasible for a variety of reasons.

The title role was sung by Sherrill Milnes, lodging in a Venetian inn as Count Alberto; his prime minister by Eric Davis (disguised as a servant); the innkeeper and his daughter were Justino Diaz and Peggy Skarry; a Venetian merchant by James Wainner; Acmet, a deposed sultan of Turkey (!) by Allen Cathcart; Belisa, Teodoro's sister, by Cohleen Bischoff (who was astounded to run into her royal brother under such circumstances); and a varied number of servants, gondoliers, police and a quintet of lovely Venetian ladies, all members of the school's opera department. The opera will be repeated tonight with alternates singing several roles.

* * *

THE MUSIC has simplicity and grace and many arias have considerable charm. There are many occasions for concerted singing and these were outstandingly effective. The first act closes with an extraordinary septet in which the seven principals maintained a clarity and coherence quite remarkable. Unfortunately, they were assigned short, punchy phrases applicable to the situation but in repetition becoming slightly risible, such as "Who is he" or "Who is she" and "Let me be." Vexatious incidents were magnified to affairs of global importance and all details were exaggerated for theatrical purposes. This could well explain the work's neglect for near centuries.

The stage setting by Aristides Bazetas was a symmetrical perspective cleverly and attractively adaptable to interiors and outdoor situations. The costumes by Leo Van Witsen were colorful and gaudy, and, we are willing to believe, authentic. Paisiello's "Barber" preceded Mozart's "Figaro" by four years so that a first inclination to place the Italian in the wake of the Salzburg genius becomes anachronistic. They both wrote for similar audiences in the style of their day, and, as music, Goldovsky did a highly commendable service in reviving such an estimable vehicle to display the splendid voices used last night.

Show Goes On

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

MAY 7 1961

USA Premiere at Tanglewood Of Paisiello 'King Theodore'

Boris Goldovsky will conduct the first performances in this country of a little-known opera of Paisiello, at Tanglewood in the Berkshires, Aug. 7 and 8.

This is "King Theodore in Venice", written in Vienna in 1784 when Paisiello was on his way back to Naples from service at the court of Catherine the Great in St. Petersburg. The opera was produced in Vienna that year, and on the word of Mrs. Julian Marshall and Alfred Loewenberg, in Grove's Dictionary, contains "some of his best music."

Mr. Goldovsky became interested in the work when he read an allusion to it in a book of essays by the late Alfred Einstein. In pursuit of the score he found there was neither a vocal-and-piano reduction nor orchestral parts in existence. Then he discovered a partial manuscript in Vienna, which he compared with a full score which had been engraved in Paris on command of Marie Antoinette.

These performances of "King Theodore in Venice" may also be the first anywhere in something like 150 years. The American Musicological Society will sponsor a third performance in New York in September.

162

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D: 2,021,895 S: 3,221,861
AUG 1 1961

First Time

The American premiere of Giovanni Paisiello's opera, "King Theodore in Venice," will be presented by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., next Monday and Tuesday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
AUG 5 1961

Next Week at the Berkshire Festival

6-61

U.S. Première Monday Of Opera by Paisiello

The opera department of the Boston Symphony's Berkshire Music Center will present the American première of Giovanni Paisiello's "King Theodore in Venice" in the Theater at Tanglewood Monday and Tuesday, Aug. 7 and 8. Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department, is in charge of the production, to be performed by students in the department. Friends of the opera department—those who make a voluntary contribution to the scholarship fund—are invited to attend the performances.

Although the composer of more than 100 operas, many of which held high favor with musicians of the day, Paisiello (1740-1816) is seldom represented on the United States opera stage today. "King Theodore" has, according to Mr. Goldovsky, never been performed in this country; it has had no performances anywhere for perhaps 150 years.

Mr. Goldovsky learned of "King Theodore" through an essay on this opera by the late Alfred Einstein in his "Essays on Music." His interest aroused, Mr. Goldovsky discovered that Marie Antoinette's affection for this opera caused her to have an engraving made of the orchestral score. This score Mr. Goldovsky compared with an original manuscript he found in Naples, plus a piano-vocal score he located in Vienna.

Described by Mr. Goldovsky as "a comic opera with a sad ending, sad because the King is put in jail," the Tanglewood production of "King Theodore" will include a small orchestra, with instrumentation of the period, conducted by Maurits Sillem. In addition to Mr. Sillem other members of Mr. Goldovsky's staff who have participated in the production include Arthur Schoep who, with Mr. Goldovsky, prepared the English version of the Giambattista Casti liberetto and assisted Mr. Goldovsky in the staging; Aristides Gazetas who designed the settings and lighting; and Leo Van Witsen who designed the costumes.

Koussevitzky Memorial

Charles Munch has designated next weekend's Boston Symphony programs (Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, Aug. 11-12-13) at Tanglewood as a tribute to Serge Koussevitzky (1874-1951). Because of their close association with Koussevitzky—the Orchestra's former music director and first director of the Berkshire Music Center — Dr. Munch has asked Leonard Bernstein and Richard Burgin to join him as conductors of the special programs.

Mr. Burgin, whom Koussevitzky appointed assistant conductor in 1935 and associate conductor in 1943, will conduct the Friday concert (Aug. 11, at 8:30). He has scheduled the Symphony No. 88 by Haydn, and the Symphony No. 2, subtitled "Resurrection," by Gustav Mahler. Nancy Carr, soprano, Eunice Alberts, contralto, and the Festival Chorus will participate in the "Resurrection" Symphony.

Leonard Bernstein was Koussevitzky's pupil in the first year of the Berkshire Music Center (1940) and later Mr. Bernstein headed the Center's conducting department. For his tribute (Aug. 12, 8:30) Mr. Bernstein will conduct the Adagietto by Shapero, commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, the Symphony of Psalms of Stravinsky, which Koussevitzky and the orchestra commissioned for the orchestra's 50th anniversary, and the Fifth Symphony by Tchaikovsky.

Dr Munch will conduct the final concert of the three. He will open his program on Sunday afternoon (Aug. 13, 2:30) with the "Elegy for My Friend Serge Koussevitzky" by Howard Hanson. This work was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and the Boston Symphony for the orchestra's 75th anniversary. The program will also include the Symphony No. 1 by Honegger, commissioned by Koussevitzky and the orchestra for the orchestra's 50th anniversary, and the Symphony No. 3 by Beethoven.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
AUG 1 1961

Paisiello Opera Set for Tanglewood

The Opera Department of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center will present the American premiere of Giovanni Paisiello's "King Theodore in Venice" in the Theater at Tanglewood August 7 and 8. Boris Goldovsky, is in charge of the production which will be performed by students in the Department.

The composer of more than one hundred operas, many of which held high favor with musicians of the day, Giovanni Paisiello (1740-1816) is seldom represented on the United States opera stage today. "King Theodore" has, according to Mr. Goldovsky, never been performed in this country and has had no performances anywhere for perhaps 150 years.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
KINGSTON FREEMAN
Monday July 31, 1961

American Premiere of Paisiello Opera Is Scheduled for Tanglewood August 7

The Opera Department of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center will present the American premiere of Giovanni Paisiello's "King Theodore in Venice" in the Theatre at Tanglewood Monday and Tuesday, August 7 and 8. Boris Goldovsky, Opera Department head, is in charge of the production which will be performed by students in the department. Friends of the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make a voluntary contribution to the Opera Department Scholarship Fund, are invited to attend the performances.

Although the composer of more than one hundred operas, many of which held high favor with musicians of the day, Giovanni Paisiello (1740-1816) is seldom represented on the United States opera stage today. "King Theodore" has, according to Mr. Goldovsky, never been performed in this country; it has had no performances anywhere for perhaps 150 years.

Known for his investigations to unearth interesting and significant operas for production at Tanglewood, Mr. Goldovsky learned of "King Theodore" through an essay on this opera by the late Alfred Einstein in his "Essays on Music." His interest aroused, Mr. Goldovsky discovered Marie Antoinette's affection for this opera has caused her to have an engraving made of the orchestral score. This score Mr. Goldovsky compared with an original manuscript he found in Naples plus a piano-vocal score he located in Vienna. From this material Mr. Goldovsky was able to prepare the English version which will be presented at Tanglewood.

Described by Mr. Goldovsky as "a comic opera with a sad ending, sad because the King is put in jail," the Tanglewood production of "King Theodore" will include a small orchestra, with instrumentation of the period, conducted by Maurits Sillem. In addition to Mr. Sillem other members of Mr. Goldovsky's staff who have participated in the production include Arthur Schoep who, with Mr. Goldovsky, prepared the English version of the Giambattista Casti libretto and assisted Mr. Goldovsky in the staging; Aristides Gazetas who designed the settings and lighting; and Leo Van Witsen who designed the costumes.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
AUG 6 1961

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SCHENECTADY UNION STAR
Thursday, August 3, 1961

Lenox to Revive 'King Theodore'

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3 — The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center will present the American premiere of Giovanni Paisiello's "King Theodore in Venice" at Tanglewood Monday and Tuesday. Friends of the opera department, those who make a voluntary contribution to the department's scholarship fund, have been invited. Paisiello, born in 1740, died in 1816. His "King Theodore" has had no performances anywhere for perhaps 150 years.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
AUG 6 1961

'King Theodore' At Tanglewood

The American premiere of "King Theodore in Venice," by Giovanni Paisiello will be presented at Tanglewood tomorrow and Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. by members of the Berkshire Music Center's Opera Department. Friends of the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center and those who contribute to the Opera Department Scholarship Fund, are invited to attend.

Paisiello's American Premiere

The American premiere of "King Theodore in Venice" by Giovani Paisiello will be presented at Tanglewood Monday and Tuesday evenings at 8:30 by members of the Berkshire Music Center's Opera Department.

First produced in 1784, the comic "King Theodore" was applauded by musical Vienna and even by Mozart—Paisiello's contemporary—who said of the composer: "Nobody better can be recommended for those who seek light music." Marie Antoinette was fond of the opera and it was her foresight in ordering an engraving made of the orchestral score that has made it possible for Boris Goldovsky to reconstruct the parts and to produce the Tanglewood premiere.

SYRACUSE, N.Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
SUN. 202,215
AUG 6 1961

Opera Is Feature At Tanglewood

The American premiere of the opera "King Theodore in Venice" will be presented tomorrow and Tuesday in the theater of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass.

Boris Goldovsky, whose opera company has performed in Syracuse several times, is in charge of production of the Giovanni Paisello opera.

The Kroll Quartet visits Tanglewood Wednesday for a concert at 8:30 p.m. in the theater-concert hall. They will present music by Beethoven, Schumann and David Diamond.

Tribute will be paid to the late Serge Koussevitsky, former conductor of the Boston Symphony, in a trio of concerts scheduled for the weekend.

Richard Burgin conducts Friday at 8:30 p.m. in the shed in a program of music by Haydn and Mahler. Burgin, associate conductor of the orchestra, has been with it half of its lifetime.

Guest conductor for the Saturday evening performance of the Shapero Adagietto from Symphony for Classical Orchestra will be Leonard Bernstein, a former pupil of Koussevitsky's orchestra class at the center.

Charles Munch, who succeeded Dr. Koussevitsky, comes to the podium next Sunday to conduct Hanson's Elegy for Serge Koussevitsky and works by Honegger and Beethoven.

CHARLOTTE, N.C.
OBSERVER

CHARLOTTE, N.C.
OBSERVER
D. 161,914 S. 178,913
JUL 23 1961

SIGHTS AND SOUNDS

Opera Gets A Shot Of Vitality At College

By DICK BANKS
Observer Arts Editor

TANGLEWOOD, Mass. — Opera has taken refuge in colleges and other educational institutions — and there it is experiencing vitality and creativity, according to quick-tongued, alert, musicianly Boris Goldovsky.

Goldovsky's name is synonymous with opera at Tanglewood, Charles Munch's school in the rolling green Berkshire hills for youngsters with unusual musical talents and advanced training.

The Russian - born pianist and conductor handles his student singers and conductors at stage managers at Tanglewood in stubborn privacy.

You feel you're riding in limitation certainly and deportation possibly if you venture into Goldovsky's domain at one side of Tanglewood. He works in an unadorned shape with one like opera, a frame structure where sets are built, and with rehearsal halls for individual coaching scattered through the unexplored hinterlands of his captive territory.

You bet pleasant voices, and it's like Ulysses except that in your case there is no wax in your ears and you're not bound to a mast.

If you get those, you find Goldovsky there in one capacity or another, joining his students in having a good time talking, practicing, rehearsing, arguing — polishing their skill in the complex variety of arts that make up modern opera.

Opera in colleges and universities, said Goldovsky in an interview, "has certain economic advantages which explain in part why there are now more than 600 opera workshops in institutions in the United States.

"You don't pay the singers, the young conductors, the musicians, or the stagehands. Quite a few of these workshops are awfully good.

"As for Tanglewood, I think at least half of all the outstanding American singers don't get to see them all. . . Almost every well known contemporary composer has written opera.

"Sets? For many years I have been experimenting with substitutes for wood and canvas.

"Although they have certain advantages, we have found sets of aluminum or fibre glass not lighter than the traditional materials.

"A great advantage acoustically is in fibre glass. It is marvelous for sound, especially if you have a fibre glass ceiling.

"Translucency is also one of its qualities. Instead of building a window in the wall of a room, you can leave a portion of the fibre glass unpainted.

"Fibre glass is absolutely indestructible. It can be reused indefinitely. I know that I have used fibre glass flats over and over in 15 operas.

"Stage hands don't object to these. They like aluminum flats framed in wood, since wood slides better.

"Can I conceive of a work of high artistic merit in which visual dramatic action would transcend in importance orchestral music and singing?

"No.

"I think that opera is what it is. The main aesthetic stimulus comes from the music. When you get away from that, you get into musical comedy and movies with music in the background."

BORIS GOLDOVSKY

"It is true, there are times when the music does not give the performer enough information."

"As for variety of interpretation under the method, it calls for an enormously unified attitude. Nowadays we have available large numbers of gifted artists. We think of singers as artists in their own right. At one time all singers were considered stupid.

"It's like ensemble or chamber music. The other night you heard the Budapest String Quartet, all leading, all following. These people hear and understand each other so well.

"So it is with our opera. If one of our singers one night is led to give his role a new interpretation, the conductor and the other singers must be responsive to this.

"But all this requires certain conditions. You must have only brilliant people around: actors — intelligent, well trained, healthy people.

"I have been experimenting with a small electronic device for each performer to wear — to convey the beat by sense of touch from conductor to performer.

"My experience is that the ear is more sensitive than the eye. Even when choruses do watch the conductor, you find them sometimes falling to be in tempo with the leading singers.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
AUG 8 1961

Music: A Comic Opera

Whitestone Photo

Cohleen Bischiff and Sherrill Milnes appearing in the U. S. première of the opera "King Theodore in Venice."

Paisiello's 'King Theodore in Venice' Has Its American Premiere at Tanglewood

By RAYMOND ERICSON
Special to The New York Times.

LENOX Mass., Aug 7—Successful scoundrels generally make good subjects for comedy. Take, for example Baron Theodore von Neuhoff, an eighteenth-century personage who by guile and charm got himself elected King of Corsica. He had a field day creating a court around him by blithely handing out titles of nobility. When bankruptcy threatened and he was forced to leave Corsica, he had no trouble finding other backers to finance his next schemes, Real life, for once. Following Hollywood's and television's moral code, brought him his comeuppance. He died in a debtors' prison.

On this character, Giambattista Casti built an amusingly and shrewdly foolish libretto for "Il Re Teodoro in Venezie" ("King Theodore in Venice"), a comic opera by the eighteenth-century Neapolitan composer, Giovanni Paisiello. A highly successful work in its day, it went the rounds of Europe and then apparently disappeared.

•

Works of this nature, however, are not likely to escape the eagle eye of Boris Goldovsky, who can be counted on to bring before the American public one operative novelty after another, whether in Boston, where he functions during the regular season, or at Tanglewood, where in the summer he heads the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center.

"King Theodore," accordingly, became this year's operatic project at Tanglewood. It was given its American première tonight in the Theater Concert Hall and will be repeated tomorrow night. The production is also scheduled for presentation in New York in September before the American Musicological Society.

It must be quickly noted that "King Theodore" is a real charmer. More than just a work of historical interest and importance, it should delight most audiences, as it did tonight's. It deserves a wide hearing, and groups throughout this country should find it worth producing.

Divided into two acts and seven scenes, the opera concerns itself with Theodore as he is hiding out in Venice under an assumed name, his need for money, his romantic inclinations toward the innkeeper's daughter, the latter's lover, Theodore's long-lost sister and her lover, a Turkish Sulttan posing as an Armenian.

•

The plotting is quite carefully meshed, but of course it is Paisiello's music that makes the opera. As one of the leading composers of neapolitan comic opera, which dominated Europe during part of the eighteenth century, Paisiello served at various times two well-known despots—Catherine the Great, in St. Petersburg, and Napoleon, in Paris. But it was in Vienna that "King Theodore" had its premiere, in 1784. performance, and undoubtedly was influenced by it. There are in "King Theodore" an amazing number of anticipations of stylistic devices in "The Marriage of Figaro." These lie principally in the freedom with which Paisiello moves from one mood to another, expressing a high degree of musical wit and lyric inspiration, and in his ability to build up over a long period of time a concerted finale that involves all the characters in the opera and that is both dramatically logical and musically sound.

Particularly pleasureable in the first act were a long, formal and beautiful soprano aria, sung by Lisetta, the heroine; a delightful duet for her and her lover, Sandrino, a tenor, to which was added a small women's chorus, and the finale, which the seven leading characters joined in and then left one by one just before the curtain came down.

164

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 614,169
AUG 9 1961

Music: A Comic Opera

Paisiello's 'King Theodore in Venice' Has Its American Premiere at Tanglewood

By RAYMOND ERICSON
Special to The New York Times.

LENOX Mass., Aug 7—Successful scoundrels generally make good subjects for comedy. Take, for example, Baron Theodore von Neuhoff, an eighteenth-century personage who by guile and charm got himself elected King of Corsica. He had a field day creating a court around him by blithely handing out titles of nobility. When bankruptcy threatened and he was forced to leave Corsica, he had no trouble finding other backers to finance his next schemes. Real life, for once following Hollywood's and television's moral code, brought him his comeuppance. He died in a debtors' prison.

On this character, Giambattista Casti built an amusingly and shrewdly foolish libretto for "Il Re Teodoro in Venezia" ("King Theodore in Venice"), a comic opera by the eighteenth-century Neapolitan composer, Giovanni Paisiello. A highly successful work in its day, it went the rounds of Europe and then apparently disappeared.

Works of this nature, however, are not likely to escape the eagle eye of Boris Goldovsky, who can be counted on to bring before the American public one operatic novelty after another, whether in Boston, where he functions during the regular season, or at Tanglewood, where in the summer he heads the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center.

"King Theodore," accordingly, became this year's operatic project at Tanglewood. It was given its American première Monday in the Theatre Concert Hall and will be repeated tomorrow night. The production is also scheduled for presentation in New York in September before the American Musicological Society.

It must be quickly noted that "King Theodore" is a real charmer. More than just a work of historical interest and importance, it should delight most audiences, as it did tonight's. It deserves a wide hearing, and groups throughout this country should find it worth producing.

Divided into two acts and seven scenes, the opera concerns itself with Theodore as he is hiding out in Venice under an assumed name, his need for money, his romantic inclinations toward the innkeeper's daughter, the latter's lover, Theodore's long-lost sister and her lover, a Turkish Sultan posing as an Armenian.

The plotting is quite carefully meshed, but of course it is Paisiello's music that makes the opera. As one of the leading composers of Neapolitan comic opera, which dominated Europe during part of the eighteenth century, Paisiello served at various times two well-known despots—Catherine the Great, in St. Petersburg, and Napoleon, in Paris. But it was in Vienna that "King Theodore" had its première, in 1784.

Mozart heard the first performance, and undoubtedly was influenced by it. There are in "King Theodore" an amazing number of anticipations of stylistic devices in "The Marriage of Figaro." These lie principally in the freedom with which Paisiello moves from one mood to another, expressing a high degree of musical wit and lyric inspiration, and in his ability to build up over a long period of time a concerted finale that involves all the characters in the opera and that is both dramatically logical and musically sound.

Particularly pleasurable in the first act were a long, formal and beautiful soprano aria, sung by Lisetta, the heroine; a delightful duet for her and her lover, Sandrino, a tenor, to which was added a small women's chorus, and the finale, which the seven leading characters joined in and then left one by one just before the curtain came down.

According to Mr. Goldovsky, the Tanglewood production presented all the orchestrally accompanied numbers in the original and in the order of the original manuscript. The "Secco" recitatives were dropped in favor of spoken dialogue, representing the only major change in the score.

The colloquial and quite often amusing English translation was made by Mr. Goldovsky and Arthur Schoep, who helped the former in both the preparation of the score and in the staging. It had been expected to present the opera with orchestral accompaniment, but circumstances dictated otherwise, and Maurits Sillem, the scheduled conductor, accompanied the performance on the piano. He also wrote in the ornamentation of the vocal line, following the stylistic practice in Paisiello's time.

Aristides Gazetas devised the simple, airy and excellently proportioned sets, which he also lighted. Leo Van Witsen was responsible for the costumes.

While the performance was more serviceable than polished, as might be expected from a student production, it had the merit of making clear what Paisiello's score sounded like. Peggy Skarry, as Lisetta, sang with a pretty voice and with fluency in the fioriture that marked her role. James Wainner, as Sandrino, managed his tenor aria with a pleasant tone and a fine legato line.

In the title role, Sherrill Milnes used his handsome baritone voice with ease and power, and Justino Diaz, in the bass role of Taddeo, Lisetta's father, handled his comic patter song with facility.

In other roles were Cohleen Bischoff, soprano, as Belisa, Theodore's sister; Allen Cathcart, baritone, as Acmet, the Sultan; Eric Davis, tenor, as Gafforio, and Richard Golden, baritone, as a Venetian court official.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
AUG 13 1961

Paisiello Operas Merit Attention

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Until Boris Goldovsky went to the trouble of reviving "Il Re Teodoro" as "King Theodore in Venice," at Tanglewood last week, I did not have the privilege of hearing a performance of an opera by Giovanni Paisiello. Such are the rigors of reviewing, I have yet to hear a complete Paisiello opera. Which is unfortunate since he was probably the first to introduce the concerted finale into serious opera.

Paisiello's position in the history of music is uncertain. He was a great innovator; but, like many artistic pioneers, others brought his discoveries to flower. He was born nearly two decades before Mozart (1741), and died long afterward (1816), and would seem to maintain his place for the influence he exerted rather than for his innate achievement.

Howling Claque

Mozart and Rossini went to school at Paisiello's operas. It is perhaps not too audacious to assert that one can detect in the latter the stirrings of an urge toward the symphonization of opera that quickened with Mozart, gained impetus with Rossini, emerged clearly with Beethoven and came to dominate with Wagner and Strauss. Paisiello deserved a larger recognition than posterity has been willing to bestow.

He composed 100-odd operas of diverse form, of which "King Theodore" is esteemed the best. This is not a verdict shared by his contemporaries. To them he was the composer of the "Barber of Seville. Writing an opera on the same subject required immense self-confidence on the part of Rossini. The Paisiello "Barber" was already the rage of Europe.

Indeed, one of the clearest glimpses of Paisiello against the backdrop of his time comes to us through description of the opening night of Rossini's "Barber." The apprehensive composer had titled his work "Almaviva" to avoid comparison. Unfortunately the premiere was held in Rome, and the aged and indignant Paisiello was supported by a claque who venerated him. Not only was he in failing health, stricken by the loss of his wife the previous year, but the hero of all Naples.

When the tenor, Manuel Garcia, paused to tune his guitar onstage, Paisiello's claque bayed at the moon. Rossini rushed home convinced that he had created two flops in Rome. One cannot help but think that the stage business sounds very like a modern Goldovsky touch—but audience tastes change.

Paisiello appears to have been the kind of man who could brook no artistic rivals. He wws vain and jealous. He was provincial. He was petty. Such were his limitations. Yet if he was ego-ridden, his music is of singular modesty. The lack of fioriture may be due to the custom of allowing the singers to supply their own embellishment; nevertheless Paisiello was more conscious of the opera as an integrated experience than either Donizetti or Bellini who wrote for virtuoso vocal display.

Italian Maestro

Moreover, if he was provincial, he exceeded the possibilities of the provincial opera house of his day. Paisiello, after all, had been imported by Catherine the Great for an eight-year stay in Petersburg. At heart, though, he reminded the maestro of a typical Italian troupe, Stendhal — whose heroes resemble Paisiello (Napoleon's favorite composer, incidentally) in their ups and downs of fortune — leaves an amusing description of this world:

"The mechanism of an Italian theater is as follows. The manager is frequently one of the most wealthy and considerable persons of the little town he inhabits. He forms a company, consisting of a prima donna, tenore, basso cantante, basso buffo, a second female singer and a third basso. He engages a maestro, or composer, to write a new opera, who has to adapt his own airs to the voices and capacities of the company. The libretto, or poem, is purchased at the rate of from 60 to 80 francs from some unlucky son of the Muses, who is generally a half-starved abbe, the hanger-on of some rich family in the neighborhood . . ."

To lift this poignant and absurd environment to the level where it inspired Mozart demands a talent of high order. Although the Tanglewood production did not do it justice, we can again be grateful to Mr. Goldovsky for his Paisiello revival.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
D. 66,353
AUG 1 1961

Tanglewood Airs Opera

The opera department of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood will present the American premiere of Giovanni Paisiello's "King Theodore in Venice," Monday and Tuesday.

Boris Goldovsky, opera department head, is in charge of the production, which will be performed by students in the department. Friends of the opera department, those who make a voluntary contribution to the scholarship fund, are invited to attend the performances.

Although he was the composer of more than 100 operas, Giovanni Paisiello (1740-1816) is seldom represented on the United States opera stage today. "King Theodore in Venice" has been described as a "comic opera with a sad ending." The Tanglewood production will include a small orchestra under the direction of Maurits Sillem.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
AUG 8 1961

U. S. PREMIERE OF OPERA GIVEN IN BERKSHIRES

Paisello's 'King Theodore' Presented by Music Center

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — A world premiere always is exciting, but a United States premiere can be just as exciting, as was proven Monday night when the Berkshire Music Center Opera Department put on the first American performance of the opera "King Theodore in Venice" by Giovanni Paisello, to a libretto by Giambattista Casti. The English version, and a very fine one, was prepared by Arthur Schoep and Boris Goldovsky, who also staged the opera.

Piano Accompaniment

There was supposed to have been an orchestra composed of the instruments of the time of Paisello, but for some reason it did not materialize. An admirable piano accompaniment was played by Maurits Sillem.

Paisello was 17 years older than Mozart. It is said that Mozart attended the premiere in Vienna and was vastly impressed. This seems a reasonable assumption when one finds passage after passage of similar music in Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro," "Don Giovanni" or "Cosi Fan Tutti."

In other words, it was Mozart who did the borrowing, not Paisello.

King Theodore really existed; a man of lofty ambitions and always in debt, his glory was short-lived and he ended up in jail, but the efforts he made to recoup his fortunes form the backbone of the libretto.

Humorous Ideas

The work is replete with melodies and humorous ideas. Mr. Goldovsky had a fine singing cast to put over this music. Taking them in order, one heard a fine tenor, Eric Davis as the prime minister of Orsica, disguised as a servant. A big bass-baritone voice and impressive stature characterizing the portrait of King Theodore as played by Sherrill Milnes.

Beautiful singing and exceptional enunciation marked the portrayal of Lisetta by Peggy Skarry. Miss Skarry is lovely to look at and knows how to handle an exceptional lyric soprano voice. Practically every aria in the opera had a bit of a cadenza, some of them far from easy.

An exceptionally fine characterization of innkeeper Taddeo was provided by Justino Diaz. Allen Cathcart was a ferocious, big-voiced deposed sultan of Turkey, and the lovely blond Colleen Bishoff vocalized the music of Belisa, King Theodore's sister, but her enunciation left something to be desired from where we sat.

Settings Impressive

Another dependable tenor, James Wainner, was heard in the role of Sandrion, a servant.

The settings were impressive, large scaled and spacious. The garden of the inn was exceptionally beautiful, and so were the young women who tended the flowers. Settings and lighting were attributed to Ristides Gazetas and the handsome costumes were designed by Leo Van Witsen.

Every scene had delightful solo and ensemble and the verve with which all were sung gave this old opera a thorough vitalizing. Under the tutelage of Goldovsky, there is no frantic looking at the conductor. Everyone knows his or her part and the parts of the other singers. The performance Monday night seemed to flow smoothly.

The opera will be repeated tonight. There will be more about this, opera in our Sunday column.

165

SPRINGFIELD REPUBLICAN August 13, 1961

4E

Second Thoughts On Music

'King Theodore' Set High Among Center Productions

Demanding Opera Reveals Delightful Solo, Ensemble Moments by Goldovsky's Students

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX— We have had an interesting week here at Tanglewood. There is always something going on. Perhaps the most interesting occurrence was the Western Hemisphere premiere of an opera by Giovanni Paisiello given by the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Boris Goldovsky, who with Arthur Schoep wrote the admirable translation of the libretto by Giambattista Casti. Thus came "King Theodore in Venice" to the Western Hemisphere. As far as is known the opera had not had a production in 150 years.

Delightful Moments

As an opera, this one was a charmer, replete with delightful solo and ensemble moments. No wonder Paisiello was the rage all over Europe. He was some 20 years Mozart's senior and it is related that Mozart was present at the premiere of "King Theadore" in Vienna and was much impressed. So much so in fact that it incorporated the style and idiom of Paisiello when writing such operas as "The Marriage of Figaro," "Don Giovanni" and "Cosi Fan Tutti." Traces of Paisiello's style are also to be found in operas by Rossini. So they were the borrowers.

The story deals with the trials and tribulations of Count Alberto, in reality King Theodore of Corsica who is a lodger in the inn of one Taddeo in Venice. Theodore was a rascal who owed everyone and his reign in Corsica had been short. It was his efforts to get more money that make up the story of this opera.

There were some excellent voices to sing the music, much of which was demanding. Practically every solo had a cadenza of sorts and the ensemble numbers called for great accuracy. Sherill Milnes as King Theodore displayed a handsome baritone voice and fine presence. His opposite was Lisetta, daughter of the inn keeper. In this role, Peggy Skarry, a winsome little person, displayed a pretty, light lyric voice and a technique which could handle all ornamentations of which there were many. Incidentally, the enunciation of the English text by all concerned was admirable and having been coached by Mr. Goldovsky, each singer knew not only his or her part, but the parts of all others. There were no frantic glances at the conductor. In fact, Mr. Sillem at the piano was both accompanist and conductor.

The role of Taddeo, Venetian Inn keeper, was handsomely sung and acted by Justino Diaz. As a deposed sultan of Turkey staying at the inn, Allen Cathcart gave a vivid portrayal. He was partnered by pretty, blonde Cohleen Bischoff.

Everything went smoothly on stage. The settings were simple, imaginative and functional. Movement on stage was fluid and costumes were colorful and attractive.

For a student production this one ranked high on the list of the many the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center has produced under the direction of Goldovsky.

Orchestra Music

The annual visit of Arthur Fiedler to conduct a pops concert drew a fair-sized audience to the Music Shed. With Earl Wild on hand to play the familiar Tschaikovsky piano concerto, the audience got its money's worth. Every child from every camp in the vicinity was on hand which made listening to the music a bit hectic. Fiedler worked his magic on the audience, revitalizing much well-worn music and saving what many had come especially to hear, music from "West Side Story" and "76 Trombones" until the last. A medley of five popular hits was added as an encore.

Friday night brought Pierre Monteux to the podium and he offered a program of wide range including the "Fidelio" overture by Beethoven, the Schumann piano concerto beautifully played by Eugene Istomin; "Dance of the Seven Veils" from "Salome" by Strauss and the second symphony of Sibelius. The old maestro was in top form and so was the orchestra. Monteux sought and got impressive sonorities and his communication of all of the music was of the standard one has learned to expect from him. He received a tremendous welcome from audience and orchestra players.

Charles Munch took over Saturday offering the Brahms Variations on a Theme by Haydn; Cesar Franck's only symphony and, with violinist Joseph Silverstein, Prokofieff's second violin concerto.

Munch offered carefully designed and detailed performances of the Variations. Everything was in the right place. It takes a Frenchman to give full meaning to the music of Cesar Franck. Indeed, it had been a long time since we had listened to so convincing a reading of the Franck symphony. Joseph Silverstein, a member of the orchestra, is a gifted violinist and his playing of the Prokofieff concerto was a tour de force. What was lacking in temperment was made up by his musicality and the fine tone which came from his instrument. Technical problems seemed not to exist.

Sunday, Mr. Munch again mounted the podium to give a heroic account of Beethoven's seventh symphony, one of the best we have heard from him, and a brilliant and colorful performance of "The Pines of Rome" by Respighi. Joseph De Pasquale, first violinist of the orchestra was on hand to provide a magnificent performance of Bartok's viola concerto, one of the best we have heard. The work still eludes us and probably always will.

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 9, 1961

Fans Find 'Theodore' Opera Fit for a King

By D. E. RITZ
Gazette Music Editor

"King Theodore in Venice" (Il Re Teodoro in Venezia), comic opera by Giovanni Paisiello first performed in Vienna in 1784, was given in an English version Monday evening and last night at Tanglewood, by members of the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center. The two Tanglewood performers are listed on the program "as very likely the first in the western hemisphere.

* * *

THE ENGLISH version of the opera is by Arthur Schoep and Boris Goldovsky and it was conducted by Maurits Sillem who at the same time presented the piano accompaniment.

Staged by Goldovsky, head of the opera department at the Berkshire Center, and Schoep with settings and lighting by Aristides Gazetas and costumes by Leo Van Witsen, the opera is a gem.

In two acts and seven scenes, the opera lasted a good three hours, even in its present shortened form. Evidently opera in the days of Paisiello was entertainment on a grand scale. Translated into modern idiom, the opera might almost be sub-titled "The Status Seekers."

* * *

KING THEODORE, a delightful charlatan, was in real life the Baron Theodore von Neuhoff who not only managed to amass a record collection of unpaid debts but had succeeded in getting himself elected and crowned as the legitimate, hereditary king of Corsica. Titles of nobility were sold to replenish the king's purse but a debtor's prison eventually caught up with his majesty.

Principal characters in addition to Theodore include Taddeo, the Venetian innkeeper, whom the king makes his field marshal (in return for money); the charming Lisetta, Taddeo's daughter, who is to become the Queen (on papa's money); Gafforio, prime minister of Corsica, disguised as the king's servant— also the king's able abettor; Sandrino, Venetian merchant and true love of Lisetta (love wins of course); the colorful Acmet, deposed Sultan of Turkey, lodging at the same inn and most amorous of Belisa, Theodore's sister, who arrives to complicate the plot.

* * *

THERE IS ALSO the Venetian court official who finally catches up with the king and sends him to prison, in addition to the grotesquely masked Venetian ladies and gentlemen; servants, gondoliers and police officials.

The translation of a comic opera of the 18th century into present-day English, yet retaining the flavor of an earlier era is an achievement of the first order.

We found the preponderance of solo, duo, trio and quartet numbers in the work one of its outstanding features. There were only three scenes with seven or more persons on stage. We also were favorably impressed with the scenic changes—king's apartment of one scene became a garden by the addition of flowers, the sunken orchestra pit of the theater became the Grand canal of Venice; and the prison scene was created by the use of bars and the addition of a door and back wall to the apartment scene.

Extended finales of stretto character conclude both movements with the second act fugato describing the rotation of the wheel of fortune.

* * *

THE VOICES were outstanding and the lovely airs of Paisiello were furnished with the embellishments of the period.

According to Grove's "Dictionary" the list of Paisiello's compositions "embrace 94 operas; 103 masses and other church pieces; and 51 instrumental pieces."

The music of Paisiello is "music" and an opportunity to hear "King Theodore," which has according to Goldovsky "had no performances anywhere for perhaps 150 years," is one of the outstanding achievements of the year. Goldovsky's production of "King Theodore" will be presented in New York in September before the American Musicological Society.

The orchestrations of Paisiello according to Grove "are distinguished by clearness and good taste, and by the independent parts given to the instruments."

* * *

WE REGRET that the Tanglewood performances were given with piano rather than orchestra but as Goldovsky explained the season, parts came late in the season, were involved and were not well copied with the result that in dress rehearsal it was deemed better to omit the orchestra.

The outstanding performance of the soloists showed not only the results of fine training in the center opera department but the excellent quality of the student material at Tanglewood. All young, the voices showed amazing promise.

Sherriff Milnes sang the role of Theodore with Eric Davis as Gafforio; and Justino Diaz as Taddeo; James Wainner as Sandrino; and Richard Golden as the Venetian court official. Peggy Skarry and Junetta Jones alternated on the two nights as Lisetta; with Allen Cathcart and David Clatworthy alternating as Acmet; and Cohleen Bischoff and Janice Sullivan as Belisa.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
AUG 8 1961

Music

Opera Revived By Goldovsky

By ROBERT TAYLOR

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox — "King Theodore in Venice "is an opera in which tragedy disguises itself as comedy. The curious ambiguity of tone mars the effect of Giovanni Paisiello's 18th century romp which Boris Goldovsky revived here last night.

It is believed to be the first performance in the Western hemisphere, and probably the first anywhere in 150 years.

Clear Precursor

The attraction of the score for Mr. Goldovsky seems obvious; the opera buffa is clear precursor of Mozart. The remarkble act finales, the last an ensemble of 17 minutes duration, display the elaborate integration of Mozart's later style; and many ideas, both musical and dramatic, such as the cherubino-lige aria of a martial, innkeeper, may have been unconsciously absorbed.

Although the workmanship is coarser and the spirit of many passages as stiff as a wig-stand, tere is no doubt that "King Theodore" bears a direct relation to Mozart and Rossini.

Unfortunately the libretto, an artifice fashioned by Abbate Giambattista Casci, is far less relevant, even by the standards of its period. In his enthusiasm for the whole, Mr. Goldovsky announced last night that it was "dramaturgically flawless," but, alas, no. Characters are haphazardly introduced, the music has little psychological depth, the spoken dialogue—substituted for the secco recitativo of the original—is artless and unwontedly funny.

Scarcely Funny

The theme, however, is scarcely funny to an audience of our time. Based on a historical personage, a mountebank who contrived to become monarch of Corsica, the opera deals with King Theodore's efforts, after his short-lived reign, to court the daughter of an innkeeper as a means of paying a bill.

The theme, in short, is debt. And the comic debtor, a figure of fun to the 18th century audience, cannot be regarded with equal sang froid by our own theater. It is wonder ha "King Theodore" was one of he favorite operas of both Mozart and of Marie Antoinette, and for reasons, one suspects, not entirely musical.

The work to a modern seems dark in character. King Theodore, who constantly frets about his creditors and harps on his fear of assassination, would not be inappropriate to Boris Godunov."

Never Dispelled

This creates unresolved tensions never dispelled by the music as in Mozart. Last nights' performance was hampered still further by the lack of an orchestra—the student players could not meet the challenge of the style in time—though Maurits Sillem accompanied Valianty at the piano.

Moreover the performances were not on the unified level associated with Mr. Goldovsky. Only Sherrill Milnes, as the imposing and pompous Theodore, James Wainner as the conventional swain of such a piece, and Cohleen Bischoff as a stately yet flirtatious sister of the king, acted and sang wit focussed projection. This was little wonder since the work itself has no unity of style.

Still, one is grateful that Md. Goldovsky should piece together his version from micro-film of the original. "King Theodore" could, I think, be an excellent opera for records rather than a static tableau on a stage.

The Cast

The American premiere of "King Theodore in Venice," by Giovanni Paisiello was presented by The Opera Department of The Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, last night. The English version of Giambattista Casti's libretto was translated by Boris Goldovsky and Arthur Schoop, who jointly staged the opera. Costumes by Leo Van Witsen; lights and sets by Aristides Gazetas. Maurits Sillem conducted:

Lisetta:	Junetta Jones
Belisa:	Cohlen Bischoff
Sandrino:	James Wainner
Gofforio:	Eric Davis
Acmet:	Alan Cathcart
King Theodore:	Sherrill Milnes
Taddeo:	Justino Diaz

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
SEP 11 1961

MUSIC

Paisiello Opera

By Ronald Eyer

The first New York performance of Giovanni Paisiello's opera, "King Theodore in Venice," was the final musical offering in the week-long congress of the International Society for Musicology last night at the Juilliard School of Music.

The performance was given by the same forces which presented the opera for the first time in the United States this summer at the Berkshire Festival. It was conducted and staged by Boris Goldovsky with sets and lighting by Aristides Gazetas and costumes by Leo Van Witsen.

Paisiello, a Neapolitan of the period of Piccini and Cimarosa, composed some hundred operas, many of which (notably "Barber of Seville" which was superseded by Rossini's famous work of the same title) were highly successful in his own time. "King Theodore" has a libretto by Giovanni Battista Casti which has been widely admired and recieved the highest accolade from the great Da Ponte who did not hesitate to draw upon it in fashioning some of his own works for the lyric theater.

The plot is built upon escapades of a German adventurer who became King of Corsica in 1736. His kingdom lasted only a few months and His Majesty had to flee to England, where, as Baron Theodor Neuhoff, he died amidst squalor and debts. In the opera, the sordid story is treated as a comedy of intrigue and false identities.

A cast of young American singers gave a splendid performance. Leading roles were taken by Sherrill Milnes (Theodore), Peggy Skarry (Lisetta), Eric Davis (Gafforio), Justino Diaz (Taddeo), James Wainner (Sandrino), David Clatworthy (Acmet), and Cohleen Bischoff (Belisa). Without singling out any individual, it can be said that every voice was fresh in quality and well produced and that all of them, without exception, have been schooled to sing the English language in an intelligent and intelligible manner. They were aided considerably, be it said, by a simple, lucid and eminently singable English text provided by Arthur Schoep.

The work is not uniformly inspired, musically. For the most part it is rather routine eighteenth-century stuff. But Paisiello was a master when it came to ensemble, and the opera finds its finest moments in the quartets, trios and duets. But there are some attractive solos too; for instance, Lisetta's "Dearest Beloved Sandrino" in the first act, and a cleverly constructed patter song by the Venetian innkeeper, Taddeo. Sir Arthur Sullivan could have taken the latter for a model, and maybe he did.

Spoken dialogue was substituted for the secco recitatives, according to Mr. Goldovsky's notes, because "the uninspired sequence of harmonies in these recitatives creates a strong suspicion that these sections of the score had been entrusted to one of Paisiello's pupils."

That may well be true but it seems irrelevant. In the first place, secco recitatives rarely were used for bold harmonic experiments, and their success depends on lively delivery of the parlando rather htan audacious harmonies. In the second place, if such recitatives are to be rejected because they are student's work, some famous one will have to be thrown out. The practice of entrusting them to pupils was followed by everyone, including Mozart.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUL 28 1961

Tanglewood Opera Scenes Announced For Sunday Evening

The Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood has announced the scenes for the recital of Opera Scenes which will be presented in the theater on Sunday evening at 8:30 o'clock. Boris Goldovsky, head of the department, has supervised the productions with the assistance of Robert Evans, Thomas Philips, Frederic Popper, Arthur Schoep and Felix Wolfes.

The program will begin with the Finale from Act 1 of Cosi fan Tutte which will be followed by a complete performance of Act III of Werther. Also to be heard are the Final Scene from Eugene Onegin and Scene I from Act III of La Giocanda.

Completing the recital, the third of the season, will be the one act opera, II Campanello. The performances of the Opera Department are presented by the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Town Crier
WESTPORT, Conn.
Bi-Weekly Circ. 6,005
AUG 6 1961

At Tanglewood . . .

The Opera Department of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center will present the American premiere of Giovanni Paisiello's "King Theodore in Venice" in the theatre at Tanglewood Monday and Tuesday, Aug. 7 and 8.

Boris Goldovsky, opera department head, is in charge of the production, which will be performed by students in the department. Friends of the department, those who make a voluntary contribution to the Opera Department Scholarship Fund, are invited to attend the performances.

Described by Mr. Goldovsky as "a comic opera with a sad ending, sad because the king is put in jail," the Tanglewood production of "King Theodore" will include a small orchestra, with instrumentation of the period, conducted by Maurits Sillem.

The orchestra, that he conducted for 25 years, students from the music school, which he directed, and three conductors will pay tribute to Serge Koussevitsky in three concerts—Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Aug. 11, 12 and 13—at Tanglewood.

Richard Burgin will conduct the Friday concert, which will include the Symphony No. 88 by Haydn and a performance of the "Resurrection" Symphony by Gustav Mahler.

On Saturday Leonard Bernstein, as his tribute to Dr. Koussevitsky, will conduct the adagietto movement from the Symphony for Classical Orchestra by Harold Shapero, the Symphony of Psalms by Igor Stravinsky and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5.

Charles Munch will open the Sunday program with Harold Hanson's "Elegy for My Friend Serge Koussevitsy." His program will also include Honegger's Symphony No. 1 and Beethoven's "Erocia" Symphony No. 3.

The sixth concert of the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music Series will be given in the Tanglewood Theatre Wednesday, Aug. 9, at 8:30 p.m. by the Kroll Quartet. The program will consist of Beethoven's Quartet in F minor, Opus 95, David Diamond's Quartet No. 2 and the Quartet in A major, Opus 41, No. 3 by Schumann.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
MAY 7 1961

MUSIC WORLD: PAISIELLO'S 'KING'

By ROSS PARMENTER

THE opera department of the Berkshire Music Center nearly always presents an interesting opera. The policy is to oscillate between a brand-new one and some little known work from the past. This summer it is the past's turn, and Boris Goldovsky, director of the department, has found a work most people have never heard of. It is by Paisiello—not the one Paisiello work that has had some currency, "The Barber of Seville." Instead it is "King Theodore in Venice."

It is a comic opera, composed in 1784, about a king of Corsica hiding in Venice under an assumed name. It was one that Marie Antoinette enjoyed at Fontainebleau. Only an orchestral score was ever published. To get the vocal parts Mr. Goldovsky had to go to the original manuscript in Naples.

The opera will be given in an English version by Mr. Goldovsky and Arthur Schoep. The Tanglewood performances will be on Aug. 7 and 8. On Sept. 10 the production will be brought to the Juilliard School of Music. This is part of an unusual cooperative arrangement with the American Musicological Society. The society is meeting then, and because its members gave so much help in rounding up the materials, it is being shown the finished production in return.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
AUG 4 1961

Tanglewood Will Hear Little-Known Opera Of 18th Century

Music Center Opera Group Will Offer 'King Theodore'

The opera department of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Berkshire Music Center will present the American premiere Giovanni Paisiello's "King Theodore in Venice" in the theater Tanglewood, Lenox, Monday and Tuesday evenings.

Boris Goldovsky, opera department head, is in charge of the production which will be performed by students in the department. Friends of the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center those who make a voluntary contribution to the opera department scholarship fund, have been invited to attend the performances.

Although the composer of more than a hundred operas, many of which held high favor with musicians of the day, Giovanni Paisiello (1740-1816) is seldom represented on the United States operastage today. "King Theodore" has according to Mr. Goldovsky never been performed in this country; it has had no performances anywhere for perhaps 15 years.

Known for his investigations to unearth interesting and significant operas for production at Tanglewood, Mr. Goldovsky learned of "King Theodore" through an essay on this opera by the late Alfred Einstein in his "Essays on Music." His interest aroused, Mr. Goldovsky discovered Marie Antionette's affection for this opera had caused her to have an engraving made of the orchestral score. This score Mr. Goldovsky compared with an original manuscript he found in Naples plus a piano-vocal score located in Vienna. From this material Mr Goldovsky was able to prepare the English version which will be presented at Tanglewood.

Described by Mr. Goldovsky as "a comic opera with a sad ending, sad because the king is put in jail," the Tanglewood production of "King Theodore" will include a small orchestra, with instrumentation of the period, conducted by Maurits Sillem. In addition to Mr. Sillem other members of Mr. Goldovsky's staff who have participated in the production include Arthur Schoep who, with Mr. Goldovsky, prepared the English version of the Giambattista Casti libretto and assisted Mr. Goldovsky in the staging; Aristides Gazetas who designed the settings and lighting; and Leo Van Witsen who designed the costumes.

167

Theatre · Concert Hall Tanglewood

SEVEN CONCERTS OF CHAMBER MUSIC

Wednesday Evenings at 8:30

August 9

The Kroll Quartet

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
CHARLES MUNCH
Music Director

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL 1961

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY-CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
SEP 1961

The Kroll Quartet made their annual appearances at Tanglewood this summer. This winter, they will give a Beethoven cycle in New York at the Kaufmann Auditorium. In March, the quartet will begin a West Coast tour.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
AUG 7 1961

16,934 Hear BSO Quartet Wednesday At Tanglewood;

A total attendance of 16,934 enjoyed the playing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood over the weekend. Yesterday afternoon's concert drew 8,488 and 8,446 persons attended Saturday night. Charles Munch conducted.

This Wednesday evening the Kroll Chamber Music Quartet will present a program of Beethoven, Diamond and Schumann.

Friday evening Richard Burgin will conduct the Boston Symphony in Haydn's Symphony No. 88 and Mahler's Symphony No. 2.

Leonard Bernstein will conduct on Saturday night with the program consisting of Adagietto by Shapero, "Symphony of Psalms" by Stravinsky, with the Festival Chorus, and Symphony No. 5 by Tchaikovsky.

Charles Munch will return to the orchestra Sunday afternoon to conduct Hanson's "Elegy for Serge Koussevitzky," Honegger's Symphony No. 1, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
AUG 10 1961

Tanglewood Concert By Kroll Quartet; Memorial Is Next

The Kroll String Quartet presented a program of Beethoven, Diamond and Schumann at Tanglewood last night.

The program opened with Beethoven's Quartet in F Minor, Op. 95; followed by Diamond's Quartet No. 2, and ended with Schumann's Quartet in A Major, Op. 41, No. 3.

Tomorrow night the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the first of three concerts in memory of Serge Koussevitzky under the baton of Richard Burgin.

The program will consist of Symphony No. 88 by Haydn, and Symphony No. 2 by Mahler with the Festival Chorus.

The second commemorative concert Saturday night will find Leonard Bernstein conducting "Adagietto" by Shapero, "Symphony of Psalms" by Stravinsky, with the chorus, and Symphony No. 5 by Tchaikovsky.

Hanson's "Elegy for Serge Koussevitzky" will open the Sunday afternoon concert with Charles Munch conducting. Also on the program are Symphony No. 1, by Honegger; and Symphony No. 3 by Beethoven.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 10 1961

Music Review

The Kroll String Quartet

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE KROLL quartet played a program of Beethoven, Schumann and David Diamond in the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood last night as the penultimate event in the Wednesday evening chamber music series. The members of the quartet are William Kroll and William Stone, violins, Harry Zaratzian, viola, and Avron Twerdowsky, cello.

Diamond is a Rochester-born composer who has been awarded most of the honors and prizes American music disposes. His String Quartet No. 2 was written 18 years ago when the composer was 28. There is a freshness and conviction to its pages, varying in the moods of its three movements. The flourish the Krolls gave it undoubtedly made the first movement buoyant and cheerful. The adagio was of a powerful, impressive and sober temperament; the finale seemed to come from the same sources as the hoedown in "The Tender Land" and it was developed with a happy uninhibited spirit. There were several swiftly-ascending phrases which diminished and evaporated in thin air, much as musical Indian rope tricks, which were as remarkable in execution as they were in the writing.

We were not struck by any world-convulsing element in this music yet it was decidedly palatable. The brush and color techniques were easily recognizable and place Diamond from this single exhibit in a moderately conservative camp.

* * *

ROBERT SCHUMANN wrote only three quartets and those all in one month, in 1842, a century preceding Diamond's. There has been a decline in the public's reverence for Schumann's chamber music over the years. An attitude remained, often unquestioned, that Schumann was essentially a piano composer, and that his work for strings was still pianistic, that passages would lie better under a pianist's hand than a violinist's. Yet Schumann, whatever the verdict in such a divergence of opinion, always "thought quartet." But he requires penetrating understanding. The Krolls played it, the third, in A Major, Opus 41, No. 3, with a rhythmic fidelity which never allowed it to become sentimental, and thus fall apart. And if it can be proven that the phrases are pianistic, they received the long line execution which when ignored has probably been the reason for the present common attitude toward Schumann. Nothing has caused so much ruin in chamber music as the frenzied bowing of unenlightened fiddlers trying to make notes sound and disregarding vocal lines. The Kroll distinction lies in their comprehension of the basic rule in chamber music, nowhere so inoperative as in Schumann, to observe the composer's purpose and perform it by using all the resources of the command of their instruments and all the intelligence their talents and experience furnish them.

* * *

IN PRIVATE performance this quartet can never pass without someone singing "Clar-a" to the initial falling fifth, supposedly Schumann's sobbing appeal to his beloved Clara Wieck, whose conquest eluded him for so many years.

Beethoven's quartets are conveniently catalogued as of three periods. Opus 95, in F minor, is the last of what has conveniently been called the second period of his creative life. Whether the publishers' convenience has been a factor in this pigeonholing might be asked because this 11th quartet usually is the last in the second and middle book. It has always seemed to us as already one of "the last Beethovens," the era in which the 40 year-old celibate was experiencing deep trouble in his soul.

His opening gambit is not a statement of fact or of mood. It is a question, an argument implied, gruff and decidedly not pretty. If anything so ephemeral as the performance of a piece of music may be so designated, we would consider the Krolls' performance last night as the definitive one. They had fathomed the core of the music, and the playing was marked by a unified sonority and an elegance and polish which radiated the deepest refinement.

After many recalls they rewarded their audience with the minuet from the A minor Schubert quartet.

Theatre · Concert Hall — Tanglewood

SEVEN CONCERTS OF CHAMBER MUSIC

Wednesday Evenings at 8:30

August 9

The Kroll Quartet

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
CHARLES MUNCH
Music Director

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL 1961

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY-CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
SEP 1961

The Kroll Quartet made their annual appearances at Tanglewood this summer. This winter, they will give a Beethoven cycle in New York at the Kaufmann Auditorium. In March, the quartet will begin a West Coast tour.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
AUG 7 1961

16,934 Hear BSO Quartet Wednesday At Tanglewood;

A total attendance of 16,934 enjoyed the playing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood over the weekend. Yesterday afternoon's concert drew 8,488 and 8,446 persons attended Saturday night. Charles Munch conducted.

This Wednesday evening the Kroll Chamber Music Quartet will present a program of Beethoven, Diamond and Schumann.

Friday evening Richard Burgin will conduct the Boston Symphony in Haydn's Symphony No. 88 and Mahler's Symphony No. 2.

Leonard Bernstein will conduct on Saturday night with the program consisting of Adagietto by Shapero, "Symphony of Psalms" by Strayinsky, with the Festival Chorus, and Symphony No. 5 by Tchaikovsky.

Charles Munch will return to the orchestra Sunday afternoon to conduct Hanson's "Elegy for Serge Koussevitzky," Honegger's Symphony No. 1, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
AUG 10 1961

Tanglewood Concert By Kroll Quartet; Memorial Is Next

The Kroll String Quartet presented a program of Beethoven, Diamond and Schumann at Tanglewood last night.

The program opened with Beethoven's Quartet in F Minor, Op. 95; followed by Diamond's Quartet No. 2, and ended with Schumann's Quartet in A Major, Op. 41, No. 3.

Tomorrow night the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the first of three concerts in memory of Serge Koussevitzky under the baton of Richard Burgin.

The program will consist of Symphony No. 88 by Haydn, and Symphony No. 2 by Mahler with the Festival Chorus.

The second commemorative concert Saturday night will find Leonard Bernstein conducting "Adagietto" by Shapero, "Symphony of Psalms" by Stravinsky; with the chorus, and Symphony No. 5 by Tchaikovsky.

Hanson's "Elegy for Serge Koussevitzky" will open the Sunday afternoon concert with Charles Munch conducting. Also on the program are Symphony No. 1, by Honegger; and Symphony No. 3 by Beethoven.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 10 1961

Music Review

The Kroll String Quartet

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE KROLL quartet played a program of Beethoven, Schumann and David Diamond in the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood last night as the penultimate event in the Wednesday evening chamber music series. The members of the quartet are William Kroll and William Stone, violins, Harry Zaratzian, viola, and Avron Twerdowsky, cello.

Diamond is a Rochester-born composer who has been awarded most of the honors and prizes American music disposes. His String Quartet No. 2 was written 18 years ago when the composer was 28. There is a freshness and conviction to its pages, varying in the moods of its three movements. The flourish the Krolls gave it undoubtedly made the first movement buoyant and cheerful. The adagio was of a powerful, impressive and sober temperament; the finale seemed to come from the same sources as the hoedown in "The Tender Land" and it was developed with a happy uninhibited spirit. There were several swiftly-ascending phrases which diminished and evaporated in thin air, much as musical Indian rope tricks, which were as remarkable in execution as they were in the writing.

We were not struck by any world-convulsing element in this music yet it was decidedly palatable. The brush and color techniques were easily recognizable and place Diamond from this single exhibit in a moderately conservative camp.

* * *

ROBERT SCHUMANN wrote only three quartets and these all in one month, in 1842, a century preceding Diamond's. There has been a decline in the public's reverence for Schumann's chamber music over the years. An attitude remained, often unquestioned, that Schumann was essentially a piano composer, and that his work for strings was still pianistic, that passages would lie better under a pianist's hand than a violinist's. Yet Schumann, whatever the verdict of such a divergence of opinion, always "thought quartet." But he requires penetrating understanding. The Krolls played the third, in A Major, Opus 41, No. 3, with a rhythmic fidelity which never allowed it to become sentimental, and thus fall apart. And if it can be proven that the phrases are pianistic, they received the long line execution which when ignored has probably been the reason for the present common attitude toward Schumann. Nothing has caused so much ruin in chamber music as the frenzied bowing of unenlightened fiddlers trying to make notes sound and disregarding vocal lines. The Kroll distinction lies in their comprehension of the basic rule in chamber music, nowhere so inoperative as in Schumann, to observe the composer's purpose and perform it by using all the resources of the command of their instruments and all the intelligence their talents and experience furnish them.

* * *

IN PRIVATE performance this quartet can never pass without someone singing "Clar-a" to the initial falling fifth, supposedly Schumann's sobbing appeal to his beloved Clara Wieck, whose conquest eluded him for so many years.

Beethoven's quartets are conveniently catalogued as of three periods. Opus 95, in F minor, is the last of what has conveniently been called the second period of his creative life. Whether the publishers' convenience has been a factor in this pigeonholing might be asked because this 11th quartet usually is the last in the second and middle book. It has always seemed to us as already one of "the last Beethovens," the era in which the 40 year-old celibate was experiencing deep trouble in his soul.

His opening gambit is not a statement of fact or of mood. It is a question, an argument implied, gruff and decidedly not pretty. If anything so ephemeral as the performance of a piece of music may be so designated, we would consider the Krolls' performance last night as the definitive one. They had fathomed the core of the music, and the playing was marked by a unified sonority and an elegance and polish which radiated the deepest refinement.

After many recalls they rewarded their audience with the minuet from the A minor Schubert quartet.

STRING QUARTET IN F MINOR, OP. 95 (Quartetto serioso)

By LUDWIG VAN BEETHOVEN (1770-1827)

No other quartet of Beethoven has such a strongly distinguishing character as this one (of 1810). Its pages are branded with its style almost as clearly as the pages of Tristan. The harmonic scheme is remarkably chromatic for its time; the modulations are restless and abrupt. Until the end it is cast in somber colors which the prevailing minor mode accentuates. The tempi, until the concluding Allegro, are moderate. It is so concise, or rather concentrated, in its expression, quite lacking extensive development, that it becomes the shortest of them all. The opening theme, rapped out in a forte unison, is abrupt and hard, uncompromisingly minor. Thus the trend of the movement is set. Sudden major scales assault the gloomy harmonies, but without avail. The atmosphere is by no means cleared by the Allegretto, which takes the place of a slow movement. Although it bears the signature of D major, that bright key has little opportunity to assert itself. Heavy, descending short notes from the 'cello foretell trouble. A mournful theme suggests a wailing phrase to the viola, the instrument which is to suffuse each movement with its special dark coloring. A device upon which Beethoven leans heavily throughout the quartet should be noted: the melodic half-tone lapse from the sixth degree of the minor scale to the fifth, a veritable accent of lamentation. It is again the viola which leads with the mournful theme of a brief fugato. As the movement dies away, the scherzo, or what serves for a scherzo, asserts itself with a strong, abrupt rhythm. The Trio, an austere melody with a weird accompanying figure, makes a second brief appearance in the minor. In a short introduction to the agitated last movement the most poignant note is the viola's falling half-tone plaint (before mentioned). The main body (allegretto agitato) is troubled and restless, the minor accents of the themes set against stormy figures. The movement subsides, as if from exhaustion, until a light and swift allegro sweeps away the last F minor chord with the relief of F major. So the quartet closes with a sudden rush of liberation, a jubilation of major scales which are entirely characteristic of Beethoven. D'Indy calls this coda an "error of genius" a "Rossinian operatic finale"—which seems a strange remark. With all respect to the scholarship of this invaluable analyst, one feels that the composer never wrote a tumult of major runs with a surer sense of dramatic necessity.

STRING QUARTET No. 2

By DAVID DIAMOND (1915-)

The chamber music of David Diamond in various combinations includes four string quartets, the first composed in 1940 and the second begun in 1943 and completed in New York City in 1944. The third quartet (1946) won the New York Music Critics Circle Award. The fourth he composed in 1951. Mr. Diamond's considerable amount of orchestral music includes six symphonies and incidental music for the stage.

Born in Rochester, New York, he studied with André de Ribaupierre at the Cleveland Institute of Music (1928-1929), with Bernard Rogers at the Eastman School of Music (1930-1934), at the New Music School of New York for the two years following, and later with Roger Sessions and Paul Boepple in New York and Nadia Boulanger at Fontainebleau and Paris. He has been granted numerous awards.

Peggy Glanville-Hicks has thus characterized David Diamond in Grove's Dictionary: "Diamond's music has a notable emotional impetus, and such dissonance as there is in his style is almost continually present in his

SIXTH CONCERT OF THE CHAMBER MUSIC SERIES

The Kroll Quartet

WILLIAM KROLL, Violin — HARRY ZARATZIAN, Viola

WILLIAM STONE, Violin — AVRON TWERDOWSKY, Cello

PROGRAM

BEETHOVEN — Quartet in F minor, Op. 95

I. Allegro con brio
II. Allegretto, ma non troppo
III. Allegro assai vivace, ma serioso
IV. Larghetto espressivo; Allegretto agitato

DIAMOND — Quartet No. 2

I. Allegro flessibile
II. Adagio mesto
III. Allegro molto

INTERMISSION

SCHUMANN — Quartet in A Major, Op. 41, No. 3

I. Andante espressivo; Allegro molto moderato
II. Assai agitato
III. Adagio molto
IV. Finale: Allegro molto vivace

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY-CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
SEP 1961

The Kroll Quartet made their annual appearances at Tanglewood this summer. This winter, they will give a Beethoven cycle in New York at the Kaufmann Auditorium. In March, the quartet will begin a West Coast tour.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 10 1961

Music Review

The Kroll String Quartet

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE KROLL quartet played a program of Beethoven, Schumann and David Diamond in the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood last night as the penultimate event in the Wednesday evening chamber music series. The members of the quartet are William Kroll and William Stone, violins, Harry Zaratzian, viola, and Avron Twerdowsky, cello.

Diamond is a Rochester-born composer who has been awarded most of the honors and prizes American music disposes. His String Quartet No. 2 was written 18 years ago when the composer was 28. There is a freshness and conviction to its pages, varying in the moods of its three movements. The flourish the Krolls gave it undoubtedly made the first movement buoyant and cheerful. The adagio was of a powerful, impressive and sober temperament; the finale seemed to come from the same sources as the hoedown in "The Tender Land" and it was developed with a happy uninhibited spirit. There were several swiftly-ascending phrases which diminished and evaporated in thin air, much as musical Indian rope tricks, which were as remarkable in execution as they were in the writing.

We were not struck by any world-convulsing element in this music yet it was decidedly palatable. The brush and color techniques were easily recognizable and place Diamond from this single exhibit in a moderately conservative camp.

* * *

ROBERT SCHUMANN wrote only three quartets and these all in one month, in 1842, a century preceding Diamond's. There has been a decline in the public's reverence for Schumann's chamber music over the years. An attitude remained, often unquestioned, that Schumann was essentially a piano composer, and that his work for strings was still pianistic, that passages would lie better under a pianist's hand than a violinist's. Yet Schumann, whatever the verdict on such a divergence of opinion, always "thought quartet." But he requires penetrating understanding. The Krolls played the third, in A Major, Opus 41, No. 3, with a rhythmic fidelity which never allowed it to become sentimental, and thus fall apart. And if it can be proven that the phrases are pianistic, they received the long line execution which when ignored has probably been the reason for the present common attitude toward Schumann. Nothing has caused so much ruin in chamber music as the frenzied bowing of unenlightened fiddlers trying to make notes sound and disregarding vocal lines. The Kroll distinction lies in their comprehension of the basic rule in chamber music, nowhere so inoperative as in Schumann, to observe the composer's purpose and perform it by using all the resources of the command of their instruments and all the intelligence their talents and experience furnish them.

* * *

IN PRIVATE performance this quartet can never pass without someone singing "Clar-a" to the initial falling fifth, supposedly Schumann's sobbing appeal to his beloved Clara Wieck, whose conquest eluded him for so many years.

Beethoven's quartets are conveniently catalogued as of three periods. Opus 95, in F minor, is the last of what has conveniently been called the second period of his creative life. Whether the publishers' convenience has been a factor in this pigeonholing might be asked because this 11th quartet usually is the last in the second and middle book. It has always seemed to us, as already one of "the last Beethovens," the era in which the 40-year-old celibate was experiencing deep trouble in his soul.

His opening gambit is not a statement of fact or of mood. It is a question, an argument implied, gruff and decidedly not pretty. If anything so ephemeral as the performance of a piece of music may be so designated, we would consider the Krolls' performance last night as the definitive one. They had fathomed the core of the music, and the playing was marked by a unified sonority and an elegance and polish which radiated the deepest refinement.

After many recalls they rewarded their audience with the minuet from the A minor Schubert quartet.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
AUG 7 1961

16,934 Hear BSO Quartet Wednesday At Tanglewood;

A total attendance of 16,934 enjoyed the playing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood over the weekend. Yesterday afternoon's concert drew 8,488 and 8,446 persons attended Saturday night. Charles Munch conducted.

This Wednesday evening the Kroll Chamber Music Quartet will present a program of Beethoven, Diamond and Schumann.

Friday evening Richard Burgin will conduct the Boston Symphony in Haydn's Symphony No. 88 and Mahler's Symphony No. 2.

Leonard Bernstein will conduct on Saturday night with the program consisting of Adagietto by Shapero, "Symphony of Psalms" by Stravinsky, with the Festival Chorus, and Symphony No. 5 by Tchaikovsky.

Charles Munch will return to the orchestra Sunday afternoon to conduct Hanson's "Elegy for Serge Koussevitzky," Honegger's Symphony No. 1, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
AUG 10 1961

Tanglewood Concert By Kroll Quartet; Memorial Is Next

The Kroll String Quartet presented a program of Beethoven, Diamond and Schumann at Tanglewood last night.

The program opened with Beethoven's Quartet in F Major, Op. 95; followed by Diamond's Quartet No. 2, and ended with Schumann's Quartet in A Major, Op. 41, No. 3.

Tomorrow night the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the first of three concerts in memory of Serge Koussevitzky under the baton of Richard Burgin.

The program will consist of Symphony No. 88 by Haydn, and Symphony No. 2 by Mahler with the Festival Chorus.

The second commemorative concert Saturday night will find Leonard Bernstein conducting "Adagietto" by Shapero, "Symphony of Psalms" by Stravinsky; with the chorus, and Symphony No. 5 by Tchaikovsky.

Hanson's "Elegy for Serge Koussevitzky" will open the Sunday afternoon concert with Charles Munch conducting. Also on the program are Symphony No. 1, by Honegger; and Symphony No. 3 by Beethoven.

168

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
AUG 10 1961

KROLL QUARTET IS HEARD BY 1307 IN TANGLEWOOD

Beethoven, Diamond and Schuman Works Are Performed

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — The sixth chamber music concert of the current Berkshire Music Festival was given Wednesday night at Tanglewood by the Kroll String Quartet, which consists of William Kroll and William Stone, violins, Harry Zaratzian, viola, and Avrom Twerdowsky, cello.

Program Varied

The Kroll String Quartet is one of the most eminent in this country and it has appeared at Tanglewood often. It played for 1307 quite discriminating people who knew when to applaud.

The program was varied, and so were the performances. The opening Beethoven "Quartet in F Minor" Op. 95, was given a rather small scale reading during which the ensemble was not always together. To offset this, if possible, one heard a performance more cerebral than moving.

This quartet finds Beethoven at the height of his powers, inventive, imaginative and often aggressive. There are abundant contrasts, some fine melodies and frequent dynamic passages. We found the sum total of the performance something less than communicative. The audience applauded vigorously.

David Diamond's second string quartet is something of a revelation. Modern, fresh and with passages of exceptionally lovely texture, Mr. Diamond also manages to get in some fine thematic material. The work was played with a deal of fine detail and with evident pleasure. The audience was really responsive.

Technique Brilliant

William Schumann's "Quartet in A Major" is not a work of major importance. One hears it far less than those of other composers. It is lengthy and the fine melodies which enhance his songs are few and far between.

Once again the Kroll String Quartet brought to this quartet a thorough understanding and a good deal of technical brilliance.

Wednesday, Aug. 16, Claudio Arrau will be heard in a piano recital featuring the music of Liszt.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 14 1961

Music Review

Tanglewood Orchestral Tributes to Koussevitzky

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

YESTERDAY afternoon's concert at Tanglewood leaves but the seventh and final week to complete a season which has accumulated excitement in racing to a stirring finish.

The three programs played by the Boston Symphony orchestra over the weekend were dedicated to the memory of the late Serge Koussvitzky, on the foundation of whose inspiration so much of the present Tanglewood has been developed.

Three conductors divided the responsibilities of the direction. Yesterday it was Charles Munch, Saturday night Leonard Bernstein; Friday it had been Richard Burgin.

* * *

MUNCH BEGAN his program with the "Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky" by Howard Hansen. The composer was in the audience and was invited to the stage of the Shed to personally accept the tribute the audience was anxious to accord him.

Hanson has been director of the Eastman School of Music at the University of Rochester for many years.

The Elegy was commissioned by the Boston orchestra and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation for the 75th anniversary of the orchestra. It opens with a dactylic canon in the strings to which it returns at the end after a more agitated central section.

* * *

MUNCH'S OTHER contemporary choice was also composed for the Boston orchestra but this time for its 50th anniversary: Arthur Honegger's first symphony.

In 1930 it was quite the fashion in European musical circles to incorporate the syncopated phenomenon which to them was the essence of American jazz or its predecessor, ragtime. Honegger designated his first movement as an "allegro marcato," which gave him plenty of leeway to use an off-beat idiom. In the final movement his "presto" uses still other elements of this style, starting as though for a dance of puppets fading to a jig-type rhythm in which trombones are given corny glissades.

All that is lacking is a caller for square dances. A code dissolves into a more tranquil dignity, ending in a penitent, slow, tonally thin spiritual.

* * *

THE CONCERT closed with the Beethoven "Eroica." In uncountable repetitions of masterpieces of this category, the Boston orchestra under many conductors and assuredly under the baton of the incumbent has acquired a refinement that is one of the marvels of the current high level of musical expression. The inflections, the hazardous, sudden pianos, and all the rhythmic flexibility, the phrase-shaping and the over-all symmetry have been distilled to a point where the details are executed with a relaxed confidence, always adhering faithfully to the composer's fastidious directions.

Tanglewood audiences are extravagantly appreciative. In their infectious ebullience there is at times a lack of discrimination, but on such occasions as this "Eroica" it was certainly justified. More than 20,000 people attended the Saturday and Sunday concerts, and that in itself no doubt is a partial cause of the auto-intoxication that happily infects Tanglewood crowds.

* * *

IN THE YEARS since Leonard Bernstein was a student in the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, his progress has been a matter of international importance. We wonder if any of the honors he has earned could have given him more gratification than the ovation Saturday night's huge audience was so eager to award him.

This was his first appearance at Tanglewood since he became musical director of the New York Philharmonic Society, and it had all the magic setting of the "local boy makes good" legend. Although "Lenny" was born at the other end of this state, the Berkshires will never relinquish their possessive pride in the career that really took root here. It isn't necessary to attempt to analyze whether the demonstration for him was artistic respect, glamorous adulation, or just pure affection.

* * *

BERNSTEIN acknowledges many debts to his early sponsor, Koussevitzky. He remained facing the audience after his initial entrance and indicated by his own example that everyone should stand with bowed head for a short moment in tribute to the memory of the man this weekend was honoring.

He fortified this veneration by starting his program with the adagietto from the symphony for classical orchestra of Harold Shapero, also a Koussevitzky Foundation commission. Again the composer was in this audience and was called to the stage by the conductor.

His designation "adagietto" could not be more accurate, as the basic slow movement is decorated by an accompaniment, in the violas at the outset, which has a continual busyness to dilute the otherwise earnest statement.

* * *

BERNSTEIN'S reading of the Stravinsky "Symphony of Psalms" was characterized by the conductor's consummate immersion in the music. Anyone who expects Stravinsky to express Biblical verses solemnly is due for a surprise. Stravinsky, himself, has said that he denies the power of music to express a feeling, a mood, or an attitude of mind. Yet he takes three psalms, gives them to a chorus to sing in Latin and goes to extraordinary means to instill an appropriate frame of mind.

His symphony, still another dedication to the Boston orchestra "on the occasion of its 50th year of existence," eschews violins and violas, and also clarinets. It substitutes two pianos for percussive effects. The music is abrupt and aggressive, paradoxically almost hostile, considering the plea, "Give ear unto my cry," in Psalm 39.

THE FESTIVAL CHORUS had been brought by its director, Hugh Ross, to the elevated degree of efficiency required by the symphony.

The vocal lines of the first psalm move within narrow, practically adjacent, frontiers. The second starts with a stern fugue between flutes and oboes before the chorus sings, "I wait patiently for the Lord."

There were no waits between psalms.

The third disclosed some of the chorus' exceptional preparation. The first phrase, "Alleluia," was sung with exquisite contour, and when Bernstein brought Ross to the stage it was evident how much his work had been appreciated.

* * *

BERNSTEIN'S Tchaikovsky fifth symphony allowed a chance to observe the growth he has achieved. His conducting technique is superlatively dramatic. He is persuaded to convey the nature and the spirit of the music at hand by a very personal reaction. He is vivid, vibrant and violent, but he has unlimited poise and is content at proper unemotional moments to stand erect and immobile, scarcely moving his graceful baton.

His left arm has become a very independent means of expression. On occasion he uses it for gestures which, if one were not within hearing distance, one might think were those of a headwaiter recommending specialties de la maison, but he makes vital and energetic music. It would be pure cavil to search for trivialities to offset the warmth, bright contrasts and virtuosity he evoked from the marvelous orchestra.

* * *

WE THINK the Boston orchestra librarian should mark the score in the last movement of his Tchaikovsky to warn the conductor to take the proper precautionary measures at the big ritard preceding the final "maestoso" to preclude outbursts of applause at this point by any who think the composer is ending his symphony on the dominant.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
AUG 12 1961

First Koussevitzky Memorial Concert Is Heard by 4,663

Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed the first of three weekend concerts dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky, founder of the Berkshire Music Center and first conductor of the Berkshire Festival, last night at Tanglewood.

Because of the damp weather only 4,663 people were on hand to hear the program which included Haydn's Symphony No. 88 and Mahler's Symphony No. 2. With the full Boston Symphony Orchestra, soprano Nancy Carr and alto Eunice Albert and the festival chorus performed the latter work.

For tonight's concert conductor Leonard Bernstein will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program which will include "Adagietto" by Shapero, "Symphony of Psalms" by Stravinsky and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5. The concert will begin at 8:30.

Tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 the orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, will present Hanson's "Elegy for Serge Koussevizky", Honegger's Symphony No. 1 and Bethoven's Symphony No.3.

SHOW BUSINESS ILLUSTRATED
CHICAGO, ILL.
E.O.WEEK-CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
OCT 3 1961

CONCERTS

Leonard Bernstein — If three Tanglewood concerts honoring Serge Koussevitzky suffered from echolalia, they were distinguished by the clear call of Leonard Bernstein, a Koussevitzky protégé, who returned to the Berkshire Hills to honor the master. Between ordinary performances by Richard Burgin and Charles Munch, Bernstein conducted a program of Stravinsky, Tchaikovsky and Harold Shapero. Bernstein's memorial began with the gentle adagietto from Shapero's Symphony for Classical Orchestra, a contemporary work commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation. Although played with superb technical command, it seemed innocuous. But the program touched the center of elegiac emotion in the performance of Stravinsky's Symphony of Psalms, written in 1930 for the 50th anniversary of the Boston Symphony. Its emotional impact was overwhelming. Bernstein's perception was intense and perfectly focused, projected with impeccable clarity by the orchestra and the Festival Chorus. Bernstein also conducted Tchaikovsky's Fifth, a steady, beautifully balanced barrage of fortes and fortissimos, pianos and pianissimos. The sound was brilliant, but next to the exultant devotion of Stravinsky, Tchaikovsky seemed a trifle shallow. At the conclusion of the concert the audience of 13,600 roared an approval of Bernstein that testified, among other things, to the sure guidance of his old teacher, Koussevitzky.

FADED TEXT

169

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
AUG 14 1961

Koussevitzky Concerts By Munch and Bernstein

By CYRUS DURGIN

LENOX, Aug. 13—Charles Munch and Leonard Bernstein completed the week-end of Berkshire Festival concerts dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky. It happily fell to Dr. Munch to begin this afternoon's program in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, with the piece which among all others of the week-end, was most especially suited to the commemorative purpose.

This was the Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky, by Howard Hanson, an American composer admired and performed by Koussevitsky from his early years in Boston. It is a fine piece, both as music and elegiac feeling, and this afternoon's performance of it was exceedingly polished.

Between Hanson's Elegy (which the composer was present to hear) and Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, which was the rousing conclusion to the afternoon, came the Symphony No. 1 by the late Arthur Honegger. This work was a good choice, for it has association with Koussevitzky in that it was commissioned by him for the 50th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Further than that, here you have a stimulating example of what is still musical modernity from a first-rate musical mind. After 30 years, the Honegger No. 1 has lost nothing of freshness and it has gained in attraction—which last is another way of saying that the listening ear has come to know its values.

The Munch performance today was superlative, the Boston Symphony responding to his wishes with all the quick and sensitive ensemble, and the beauty of sound, of which it is so abundantly capable.

The afternoon, cool but diamond-bright, was perfect for music. An audience of 6697 attended.

Leonard Bernstein, the most brilliant of Serge Koussevitzky's proteges, and a musician probably unequalled in the world for range of his manifold talents, was the public's hero Saturday night. The Music Shed long had been sold out. The final count for Shed and grounds was 13,602 persons, the record for this season and a figure rarely matched in the history of the Berkshire Festivals.

Bernstein's first gesture was addressed to the audience—a request to stand for a moment of silence, in memory of Koussevitzky. Then to the making of music, which began calmly and songfully with the adagietto from Harold Shapero's Symphony for Classical Orchestra, which had been commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and conducted by Bernstein in 1948. Perhaps the best of a comparatively early and tentative work, the adagietto went agreeably, though it is music none too salient. The composer later bowed from the stage.

Stravinsky's Symphony of Psalms proved the peak of the evening. All elements were joined in felicitous effectiveness. The work, with its crisp directness, rhythmic drive and harmonic tartness, calls up the best of Bernstein's interpretive powers. His conducting of it was a model of clarity and balance. Altogether admirable was the cool and unerring work of the Festival Chorus, prepared with his usual practicality by Hugh Ross, who appeared with the rest to acknowledge applause.

STAGE IN TOWN

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127

AUG 14 1961

Tanglewood Total Weekend Gathering Reported as 24,962

Only 6,996 persons were on hand at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon to hear conductor Charles Munch lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the last of three weekend concerts dedicated to the memory of the late Serge Koussevitzky.

However, the fact that a record crowd of 13,602 persons attended the Saturday night concert to hear Leonard Berstein conduct the orchestra brought the total weekend attendance to 24,962.

On Wednesday night at 8:30 Claudio Arrau will present the Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital in the Theatre Concert Hall. On the program are Annees de Peleri-nage excerpts, two Etudes D'Execution Transcendante, Ballade No. 2," "Benediction de Dieu," and the "Mephisto Waltz." On Thursday night a Gala Evening is scheduled during which the students of the Berkshire Music Center will perform. On the evening's program will be an opera, a concert by the Tanglewood choir, and concerts in the Theatre and the Music Shed.

The concerts in the Music Shed this weekend will bring to an end the 1961 Berkshire Festival season.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122

AUG 13 1961

RECORD CROWD SEES BERNSTEIN AT TANGLEWOOD

13,602 at Impressive Program as Popular Conductor Returns

By WILLARD CLARK

LENOX — Leonard Bernstein returned to Tanglewood and the Berkshire Music Festival Saturday night and, as was expected, was greeted by the largest audience of the season, a record 13,602.

Less Gesticulation

For those who came to look, and there were many, Mr. Bernstein put on a good show and those who came to hear were regaled by the vitality of his readings, the profound musicianship of this onetime Berkshire Center pupil and protege of Serge Koussevitzky.

Mr. Bernstein has matured, the hair is quite gray and he conducts with less gesticulation than in past years. Every movement counts. He came on stage to a roar of applause and after greeting Richard Burgin, Joseph Di Pasquale and others, turned and motioned the audience to stand, presumably for a moment of quiet. It was all very impressive.

The concert opened with the interesting adagietto from Harold Shapero's Symphony for Classical

R... CROWD
(Continued From Page 1A)

Orchestra, commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and dedicated to it. It was introduced by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1948 in Boston by Mr. Bernstein. Shapero explores all the possibilities of the orchestra and comes up with some startling, if not always agreeable results.

Dedicated to Orchestra

Stravinsky's Symphony of Psalms was dedicated to the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the occasion of its 50th anniversary. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Orchestra gave the initial performance in this country in 1930.

This is a setting of excerpts from Psalms 28, 29 and 150. Stravinsky, in order to achieve contrapuntal development, enlarged his resources to include a chorus and instrumental ensemble in which the two elements should be given equal prominence. Of Stavinsky's choral works, I find this the most agreeable. The texture of the work is rich and full flavered the work is rich and full-flavored, but the chorus, trained by Hugh Ross, sang for some time before it was entirely evident it was singing in Latin. I do not find the music mystical, rather it seems to be a forthright declaration of faith.

The program closed with a superb performance of Tschaikowsky's symphony no. 4 in E minor, a work in which Serge Koussevitzky scored some of his great Tanglewood triumphs.

Watching Bernstein, one almost saw Koussevitzky again urging the orchestra on and on, even knowing that they could play only just so loud.

There was much to admire in the reading; the sturdy rhyms, strictly kept; the play of colors and the subtle tints which only a poet could conceive and communicate. The audience reaction was tremendous. Berstein had returned and all was well with the festival. It was like old times. Let us hope that it will not be long before Bernstein returns again to pay his respects to his mentor and to bring us the rewards of his genius.

170

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,498
AUG 17 1961

TANGLEWOOD

Friday — by G. G. V.

Friday night was Richard Burgin night at Tanglewood. Mr. Burgin, the concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, is an estimable musician who, by all rights, should have an orchestra of his own. He is also the first conductor we have seen this season to conduct without a baton. This may explain the occasional faulty attacks which occurred during the Haydn Symphony No. 88 which opened the program. But this is a niggling criticism since the Haydn came off very well on the whole.

The big work of the night was the Symphony No. 2 (Resurrection) by Gustav Mahler, and a big work it was indeed, lasting more than an hour and a quarter.

A monumental opus, it demands both stamina and virtuosity on the part of the conductor as well as all sections of the orchestra and, toward the end of the final movement, two soloists and chorus. That the audience was held virtually spellbound during the lengthy proceedings is proof that these demands were met. Soprano Nancy Carr and contralto Eunice Alberts displayed fine voices in their relatively brief solo passages and the Festival Chorus gave every evidence of having been well drilled by Alfred Nash Patterson. Mr. Burgin and all concerned were given a well deserved ovation at the conclusion.

Saturday — by R. J. G.

An unusually large and wildly enthusiastic audience greeted Leonard Bernstein's appearance. That Mr. Bernstein has an appreciative following was evident from the warmth of the reception accorded him, a warmth that fanned itself into a spontaneous flame of applause even in the middle of one of the movements.

Mr. Bernstein played an essentally conservative program; an acknowledged masterpiece, the Stravinsky Symphony of Psalms presents no serious listening problems and the Tschaikovsky Symphony No 5 is perhaps all too familiar. Nevertheless, these two works offer ample contrast to be played on the same program and would have done so on this occasion but for the similarity of Bernstein's approach. The tense, muscular attack so exciting in the Stravinsky tended to make the Tschikovsky little more than an athletic tour de force.

The Boston Symphony is a virtuoso orchestra and superb playing has become a commonplace with them. Under Bernstein, the quality of the orchestral fabric was simply dazzling. This was especially evident in the Tschaikovsky Symphony where the virtuosity of the orchestral work was often breathtaking.

Sunday — by C. D.

The Sunday afternoon concert at Tanglewood, opened with Howard Hanson's Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky which was commissioned for the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is a sincere and deeply-felt work by one of Americas most respected composers.

On the same program was the first symphony of Honegger, also written for the Boston Symphony but on its fiftieth anniversary. This is a powerful piece of music by one of the greatest French composers of the twentieth century. Munch lead the orchestra in a magnificent performance. The subsidence of the presto movement into the quiet peaceful epilogue was one more example of the consummate care and skill which Munch can lavish on a work which challenges him.

The second half of the program was devoted to Beethoven's Third Symphony. One hundred and fifty seven years ago, the world discovered that this was an heroic work and it remains so today. When Mr. Munch conducts Beethoven, he dose so without much subtlety but with an impelling drive and verve and the result is always exciting. So it was on Sunday.

SCAF BEETHOVEN
by C. D.

The fifth program of the Beethoven series sponsored by SCAF was held in the Scoville Memorial Library on Monday evening. It consisted of three sonatas for violin and piano played by Mary Louise Boehm, pianist, and Kees Kooper, violinist. This is the second program presented by these two artists and the evening was a rewarding one.

In the first place the program which presented the Beethoven sonatas in chronological order gives a real insight into the development of this composer; and in the second place, the works were magnificently performed And then the size of the hall was so perfect for music of this kind, that all of the details were heard and this is not usually so in the larger auditoriums.

The lovely melodies of the Spring Sonata sang as they were meant to sing. No detail of this lyrical poem was lost and the slow movement was a joy to hear. The A major Sonata which is seldom heard does not deserve to be neglected and the Koopers gave it a splendid resurrection. Of course the great C minor Sonata which ended the program was the one that elicited the "Bravos." It always does, even when played by lesser musicians than the Koopers. But when they brought their brilliancy and sense of drama to this work, it emerged as one of the great masterpieces of Beethoven.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
AUG 14 1961

LENOX MUSIC DEDICATED TO KOUSSEVITZKY

6996 Hear Boston Symphony Play in Honor Of Late Conductor

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — The third of the three week-end concerts dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky, longtime conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and founder of the Berkshire Music Center here at Tanglewood, found Charles Munch on the podium before an audience of only 6996. Fortunately, due to the appearance of Leonard Bernstein, who drew some 13,000 people to Tanglewood Saturday night, the weekend total mounted to 24,962.

The program opened with Howard Hanson's Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky. This is a handsome work, the strength of which lies in its sincerity. The work was composed for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and was commissioned by the orchestra and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. It opens with an expressive melody which, in various forms, makes up the work.

Mr. Munch has a certain feel for the music of Honegger and particularly for his first symphony commissioned for the 50th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and first performed by it in 1951. It is the first of five symphonies composed by Honegger, all of which have been performed by the Boston orchestra.

The opening movement has themes which are hard, glossy and highly polished. Honegger has a way of interlocking his themes, no matter how dissonant the results. The second movement has more melodic interest than the first and the darker-toned violas and cellos have a beautiful song. The final movement is scherzo-like, with more grace and relaxation than the other two. The work ends in a tranquil mood, beautifully harmonized. Mr. Munch provided a powerful reading, extracting every ounce of strength in the work.

For the final work, Mr. Munch chose Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 in E-flat Major, the "Eroica." This is a powerful work, made even more impressive through the spacious, rich and decisive reading by Mr. Munch. Tempi were kept up and the wondrous "Marcia Funebre" emerged without the slow, tedious solemnity which sometimes accompanies it. This season Mr. Munch appears much more relaxed and performances have gained in vitality and strength. The "Eroica" was well served Sunday afternoon and what audience there was on hand to hear it heard a performance they should not soon forget.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,783
AUG 12 1961

Music: Burgin Conducts Mahler Symphony

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The first of three Serge Koussevitzky Memorial Concerts last night at Tanglewood covered the vast expanse from Haydn's Symphony No. 88 in G Major to the heavy-artilleried Symphony No. 2 in C Minor ("Resurrection") by Gustav Mahler.

The combination apparently had moderate appeal. There was an audience of 4,663, small for a major Berkshire festival concert.

Richard Burgin conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

He has been a member of the orchestra for half of its lifetime, and concertmaster during all of Koussevitzky's 25 - year tenure. Koussevitzky died June 4, 1951.

Symphony Participants

Participants in the Mahler symphony were the festival chorus, consisting of Berkshire Music Center students — also soprano Nancy Carr, and contralto Eunice Alberts.

Podium responsibility is nothing new to Burgin. He became assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony in 1935, and associate conductor in 1943.

Haydn's Symphony No. 88 was selected because it was a Koussevitzky favorite. Compared to the Mahler, the Haydn was delightfully casual, in restrospect. Burgin is a scholarly conductor whose style lies between the extraordinary placidity of Pierre Monteux and the occasionally flurrying methods of Charles Munch.

The fuller scope of Burgin's thought, control and directive persuasion was of course uncovered in the Mahler, but one sensed his strong affinity for Haydn's music.

Main Theme Lively

In Burgin's interpretation were literally none of the miss calculations or indulgences that often level the Haydn symphonies, even when handled by far more illustrious conductors.

The slow introduction didn't dawdle but approached the main theme of the opening movement with lively expectancy. Though Haydn worked diligently over this tune (hoping that variation would promote interest), Burgin saw to it that the movement maintained a quality of freshness.

No serious problem of manipulation exists in the simple minute (which, Burgin directed at an unusually conservatime tempo), or the racy, peasant-dance rondo.

In the slow movement, oboe and cellos lean heavily on the podium to guarantee their solo domination. Burgin did a skillful job of blending between these and the rather sumptuous accompaniments in strings and winds, especially where violins converged on the mixture with a new theme.

Mahler Is 'Tour-de-Force'

The lavish, ominous Mahler "Resurrection" Symphony was naturally the evening's "Tour-de-Force," and, in some respects, the most vibrant vehicle of the entire festival.

A full-scale treatise could be written about the work itself, covering the composer's lofty and deeply-compelling goals. Its five movements span from the special episodes of "Celebration of the Dead," in which Mahler bears the hero of his first symphony to the grave, through a series of emotional turmoils, deploring the purpose of life.

Summation is in the finale, in which chorus and soloists sing German poet Klopstock's ode "Resurrection." This colossa musical fresco of the Day o Judgment ended with the pealing of organ and bells surrounded by a jubilant orchestra.

Lugubrious passages in lov string at the offset were a rud awakening, after the Haydn sym phony. There followed remonstra tions, threats and respects o comparative serenity. Even th short, bucolic episodes seemed t hold of impending drama, border ing on panic.

Bernstein Conducts Tonight

The only obvious flaw in per formance (not interpretation) was a slight rhythmic shakiness in tricky phrases that simultaneously swept through many segments of the orchestra.

It must have been a wild experience for those not prepared for Mahler's long-winded hurlings and ravings. Soloists and chorus justified their presences in this involved melange by singing with a kind of infectious intensity.

Tonight, Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Boston Symphony in the second Koussevitzky Memorial concert.

The program is Harold Shapero's Adagietto from the Symphony for Classical Orchestra, Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms" (with the Festival Chorus), and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

170

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,498
AUG 17 1961

TANGLEWOOD

Friday — by G. G. V.

Friday night was Richard Burgin night at Tanglewood. Mr. Burgin, the concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, is an estimable musician who, by all rights, should have an orchestra of his own. He is also the first conductor we have seen this season to conduct without a baton. This may explain the occasional faulty attacks which occurred during the Haydn Symphony No. 88 which opened the program. But this is a niggling criticism since the Haydn came off very well on the whole.

The big work of the night was the Symphony No. 2 (Resurrection) by Gustav Mahler, and a big work it was indeed, lasting more than an hour and a quarter.

A monumental opus, it demands both stamina and virtuosity on the part of the conductor as well as all sections of the orchestra and, toward the end of the final movement, two soloists and chorus. That the audience was held virtually spellbound during the lengthy proceedings is proof that these demands were met. Soprano Nancy Carr and contralto Eunice Alberts displayed fine voices in their relatively brief solo passages and the Festival Chorus gave every evidence of having been well drilled by Alfred Nash Patterson. Mr. Burgin and all concerned were given a well deserved ovation at the conclusion.

Saturday — by R. J. G.

An unusually large and wildly enthusiastic audience greeted Leonard Bernstein's appearance. That Mr. Bernstein has an appreciative following was evident from the warmth of the reception accorded him, a warmth that fanned itself into a spontaneous flame of applause even in the middle of one of the movements.

Mr. Bernstein played an essentially conservative program; an acknowledged masterpiece, the Stravinsky Symphony of Psalms presents no serious listening problems and the Tschaikovsky Symphony No 5 is perhaps all too familiar. Nevertheless, these two works offer ample contrast to be played on the same program and would have done so on this occasion but for the similarity of Bernstein's approach. The tense, muscular attack so exciting in the Stravinsky tended to make the Tschikovsky little more than an athletic tour de force.

The Boston Symphony is a virtuoso orchestra and superb playing has become a commonplace with them. Under Bernstein, the quality of the orchestral fabric was simply dazzling. This was especially evident in the Tschaikovsky Symphony where the virtuosity of the orchestral work was often breathtaking.

Sunday — by C. D.

The Sunday afternoon concert at Tanglewood, opened with Howard Hanson's Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky which was commissioned for the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is a sincere and deeply-felt work by one of Americas most respected composers.

On the same program was the first symphony of Honegger, also written for the Boston Symphony but on its fiftieth anniversary. This is a powerful piece of music by one of the greatest French composers of the twentieth century. Munch lead the orchestra in a magnificent performance. The subsidence of the presto movement into the quiet peaceful epilogue was one more example of the consummate care and skill which Munch can lavish on a work which challenges him.

The second half of the program was devoted to Beethoven's Third Symphony. One hundred and fifty seven years ago, the world discovered that this was an heroic work and it remains so today. When Mr. Munch conducts Beethoven, he dose so without much subtlety but with an impelling drive and verve and the result is always exciting. So it was on Sunday.

SCAF BEETHOVEN
by C. D.

The fifth program of the Beethoven series sponsored by SCAF was held in the Scoville Memorial Library on Monday evening. It consisted of three sonatas for violin and piano played by Mary Louise Boehm, pianist, and Kees Kooper, violinist. This is the second program presented by these two artists and the evening was a rewarding one.

In the first place the program which presented the Beethoven sonatas in chronological order gives a real insight into the development of this composer; and in the second place, the works were magnificently performed. And then the size of the hall was so perfect for music of this kind, that all of the details were heard and this is not usually so in the larger auditoriums.

The lovely melodies of the Spring Sonata sang as they were meant to sing. No detail of this lyrical poem was lost and the slow movement was a joy to hear. The A major Sonata which is seldom heard does not deserve to be neglected and the Koopers gave it a splendid resurrection. Of course the great C minor Sonata which ended the program was the one that elicited the "Bravos." It always does, even when played by lesser musicians than the Koopers. But when they brought their brilliancy and sense of drama to this work, it emerged as one of the great masterpieces of Beethoven.

THE LA

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
AUG 14 1961

LENOX MUSIC DEDICATED TO KOUSSEVITZKY

6996 Hear Boston Symphony Play in Honor Of Late Conductor

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — The third of the three week-end concerts dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky, longtime conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and founder of the Berkshire Music Center here at Tanglewood, found Charles Munch on the podium before an audience of only 6996. Fortunately, due to the appearance of Leonard Bernstein, who drew some 18,000 people to Tanglewood Saturday night, the weekend total mounted to 24,962.

The program opened with Howard Hanson's Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky. This is a handsome work, the strength of which lies in its sincerity. The work was composed for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and was commissioned by the orchestra and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. It opens with an expressive melody which, in various forms, makes up the work.

Mr. Munch has a certain feel for the music of Honegger and particularly for his first symphony commissioned for the 50th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and first performed by it in 1951. It is the first of five symphonies composed by Honegger, all of which have been performed by the Boston orchestra.

The opening movement has themes which are hard, glossy and highly polished. Honegger has a way of interlocking his themes, no matter how dissonant the results. The second movement has more melodic interest than the first and the darker-toned violas and cellos have a beautiful song. The final movement is scherzo-like, with more grace and relaxation than the other two. The work ends in a tranquil mood, beautifully harmonized. Mr. Munch provided a powerful reading, extracting every ounce of strength in the work.

For the final work, Mr. Munch chose Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 in E-flat Major, the "Eroica." This is a powerful work, made even more impressive through the spacious, rich and decisive reading by Mr. Munch. Tempi were kept up and the wondrous "Marcia Funebre" emerged without the slow, tedious solemnity which sometimes accompanies it. This season Mr. Munch appears much more relaxed and performances have gained in vitality and strength. The "Eroica" was well served Sunday afternoon and what audience there was on hand to hear it heard a performance they should not soon forget.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,783
AUG 12 1961

Music: Burgin Conducts Mahler Symphony

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The first of three Serge Koussevitzky Memorial Concerts last night at Tanglewood covered the vast expanse from Haydn's Symphony No. 88 in G Major to the heavy-artilleried Symphony No. 2 in C Minor ("Resurrection") by Gustav Mahler.

The combination apparently had moderate appeal. There was an audience of 4,863, small for a major Berkshire festival concert.

Richard Burgin conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

He has been a member of the orchestra for half of its lifetime, and concertmaster during all of Koussevitzky's 25 year tenure. Koussevitzky died June 4, 1951.

Symphony Participants

Participants in the Mahler symphony were the festival chorus, consisting of Berkshire Music Center students — also soprano Nancy Carr, and contralto Eunice Alberts.

Podium responsibility is nothing new to Burgin. He became assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony in 1935, and associate conductor in 1943.

Haydn's Symphony No. 88 was selected because it was a Koussevitzky favorite. Compared to the Mahler, the Haydn was delightfully casual, in restrospect. Burgin is a scholarly conductor whose style lies between the extraordinary placidity of Pierre Monteux and the occasionally flurrying methods of Charles Munch.

The fuller scope of Burgin's thought, control and directive persuasion was of course uncovered in the Mahler, but one sensed his strong affinity for Haydn's music.

Main Theme Lively

In Burgin's interpretation were literally none of the miss calculations or indulgences that often level the Haydn symphonies, even when handled by far more illustrious conductors.

The slow introduction didn't dawdle but approached the main theme of the opening movement with lively expectancy. Though Haydn worked diligently over this tune (hoping that variation would promote interest), Burgin saw to it that the movement maintained a quality of freshness.

No serious problem of manipulation exists in the simple minute (usually conservatime tempo), or the racy, peasant-dance rondo.

In the slow movement, oboe and cellos lean heavily on the podium to guarantee their solo domination. Burgin did a skillful job of blending between these and the rather sumptuous accompaniments in strings and winds, especially where violins converged on the mixture with a new theme.

Mahler Is 'Tour-de-Force'

The lavish, ominous Mahler "Resurrection" Symphony was naturally the evening's "Tour-de-Force," and, in some respects, the most vibrant vehicle of the entire festival.

A full-scale treatise could be written about the work itself, covering the composer's lofty and deeply-compelling goals. Its five movements span from the special episodes of "Celebration of the Dead," in which Mahler bears the hero of his first symphony to the grave, through a series of emotional turmoils, deploring the purpose of life.

Summation is in the finale, in which chorus and soloists sing German poet Klopstock's ode "Resurrection." This colossal musical fresco of the Day of Judgment ended with the pealing of organ and bells surrounded by a jubilant orchestra.

Lugubrious passages in low strings at the offset were a rude awakening, after the Haydn symphony. There followed remonstrations, threats and respects of comparative serenity. Even the short, bucolic episodes seemed to hold of impending drama, bordering on panic.

Bernstein Conducts Tonight

The only obvious flaw in performance (not interpretation) was a slight rhythmic shakiness in tricky phrases that simultaneously swept through many segments of the orchestra.

It must have been a wild experience for those not prepared for Mahler's long-winded hurlings and ravings. Soloists and chorus justified their presences in this involved melange by singing with a kind of infectious intensity.

Tonight, Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Boston Symphony in the second Koussevitzky Memorial concert.

The program is Harold Shapero's Adagietto from the Symphony for Classical Orchestra, Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms" (with the Festival Chorus), and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

Whitestone

COMPOSER Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N.Y., shares with Charles Munch, conductor of the BSO, the plaudits of the audience at yesterday afternoon's concert in the Music Shed dedicated to the memory of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Mr. Hanson composed the "Elegy to the Memory of My Friend, Serge Koussevitzky." for the 75th anniversary of the BSO, commissioned by the orchestra and Koussevitzky Music Foundation, and performed again yesterday to open the afternoon program.

Despite Season High Saturday, Tanglewood Totals Are Down

Tanglewood attendance, the barometer for Berkshire County's tourist business, totaled 155,030 during the past six weeks, a drop of 2,873 from last year.

A Boston Symphony Orchestra spokesman said the 155,030 paid admissions included attendance at the Wednesday night chamber music events, the open rehearsals Saturday mornings and the weekend concerts in the Shed.

All-time Tanglewood attendance records will be broken this year because the season has been extended to seven weeks. Next year, the last for Dr. Charles Munch as BSO conductor, the season will run eight weeks.

Record Saturday

This past weekend Tanglewood had 24,962 paying customers, a drop of only 467 from the same weekend a year ago. A season's record crowd of 13,602 turned out Saturday night for a performance conducted by Leonard Bernstein.

Police throughout Berkshire County reported that traffic Saturday was the heaviest of the season. This was caused not only by the heavy influx of tourists, but also by the return of vacationing Pittsfield General Electric employes. Approximate 8,000 of GE's 10,000 local employes have been on vacation for the past two weeks and returned to their jobs this morning.

Most Berkshire motels, hotels and inns reported capacity houses Friday and Saturday evening, but business dropped off even more than usual yesterday.

Chill Is Blamed

The marked drop in temperature was credited by many tourist operators as one reason for the slump yesterday. As one operator put it, "I think a lot of people went home for their snuggles."

The temperature rose only to 65 degrees yesterday—12 below the seasonal norm — and had plummeted to 40 degrees by 5:30 this morning.

George J. Bulgarelli, chief meteorologist at the U.S. Weather Bureau at the Pittsfield Airport, said the 40-degree reading is the lowest for this date in the 23 years the bureau has kept local records. The previous record low for Aug. 14 was 43 degrees in 1943.

Mr. Bulgarelli said the temperature is expected to go down to about 45 degrees early tomorrow morning. Temperatures nearer the seasonal average should return following possible showers late Wednesday.

Fewer at Beaches

Attendance at Pittsfield public beaches also dropped with the temperature yesterday. Pittsfield Park Department officials reported 3,500 at Onota and Pontoosuc Lake beaches Saturday, and only 500 yesterday.

Tourist business in the Lee-Lenox area was reported to be somewhat better than previous weekends. All listed rooms were reported to be filled Friday and Saturday in Lenox and Stockbridge, and the business in Lee was heavier than the past weekend.

The Great Barrington Chamber of Commerce reported that, based on incomplete reports, the weekend probably was the best of the 1961 summer season.

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 143,950

AUG 12 1961

Burgin Conducts First Koussevitzky Memorial

By CYRUS DURGIN

LENOX, Aug. 11—Richard Burgin conducted tonight in the Music Shed, the first of three Berkshire Festival concerts dedicated to the memory of the man who established music at Tanglewood: Serge Koussevitzky.

Saturday night Leonard Bernstein, now music director of the New York Philharmonic, will honor the great artists of whom, two decades ago, he was a protege. Charles Munch, on Sunday afternoon, will make his tribute to his predecessor as head of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In many years of music reviewing, this chronicler has had the good fortune to be present at a number of memorable occasions in music. Burgin's performance tonight of the C minor, or "Resurrection," Symphony by Gustav Mahler is to be added to them. In all important aspects this was an ideal, and a most deeply moving performance of a masterwork of incalculable power and beauty.

When it was over, the audience of 4663 within the Music Shed (and others without on the lawn), burst into applause and cheers. Conductor, orchestra, soloists and chorus all cheered in a continuing ovation that brought Burgin repeatedly back to the stage.

The excitement in the air threatened to burst into lightning and thunder.

It was all thoroughly merited, for the performance as a whole was the best of the "Resurrection" Symphony I have heard from Burgin, with whom it has become something of a specialty. Let not trivial shortcomings of detail be seriously considered against the overwhelming glory of sound and expression.

Indeed, the Orchestra played like angels for him, and the opening piece of the evening, Haydn's G major Symphony, No. 88, was virtually flawless in its crisp and unstrained excellence.

Compliments are due all 'round: to Eunice Alberts for the loveliness of her contralto voice, and singing that touched the heart; to soprano Nancy Carr, who made that most difficult first entrance impeccably, and sang the remainder of her part like the fine musician she is.

The choral part is not long in the "Resurrection" Symphony, but it demands a pianissimo that can be consistently heard. Usually a chorus is too small for the purpose, or so large that it is flabby. Tonight, the Festival Chorus, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson (who appeared to take a bow) was just right. Furthermore, it was balanced admirably, with enough men to counter the soprano and alto tones.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127

AUG 14 1961

171

At Tanglewood

Three Weekend Concerts Memorial to Koussevitzky

THREE CONCERTS in memory of Serge Koussevitzky in the Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox.

Friday

Haydn Symphony in G. Major
Mahler Symphony in C Minor
Nancy Carr, Soprano
Eunice Alberts, Contralto
Richard Burgin, Conductor

Saturday

Shapero Adagietto from Symphony for Classical Orchestra
Stravinsky Syphone de Psaumes
Tchaikovsky Symphony in E Minor
Leonard Bernstein, Conductor

Sunday

Hanson Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky
Honegger Symphony No. 1
Beethoven Symphony No. 3, "Eroica"

Charles Munch, Conductor
By Frank Patterson

About 25 years before the wonderfully, terribly rich of the Lenox area hired the New York Philharmonic, conducted by Henry Hadley, to perform the first Berkshire Symphony Festival, Serge Koussevitzky was conducting an orchestra from a barge on the Volga to the music-starved populace of its shores.

Around 15 years before the first festival sounded here, an elaborate plan was drawn up by Koussevitzky which became, in fact, the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in 1940.

What Would He Do?

Saturday at intermission, as Echo I traveled its first birthday over the Shed at Tanglewood, I wondered what this facous conductor and magnificent administrator would have done with music over a world-wide television. It is difficult to hazard any guess concerning a man who performed in ultra-conservative Boston more new music than the rest of the Symphonies in the country and produced an orchestra of such perfection that a famous critic once predicted an artistic collapse for the orchestra, hinged on the fact that perfection must breed fault.

Richard Burgin was appointed assistant conductor by Koussevitzky in 1935 and is the concertmaster of the orchestra. Mahler has long been a favorite composer for Burgin and with his works Burgin has, to my knowledge, never produced anything but the best results that can be drawn from them. The work is interminably long, about an hour and a quarter; and though no doubt sincere, it does create some moments of embarrassment with its profound air and personal conviction. The chorus' rather simple part was well done and Miss Albert's contralto voice was superb to the ear as was her gown to the eye.

Bernstein Effective

Leonard Bernstein, also rather noticeable to the eye on Saturday, seemed a somewhat athletic tiger with Koussevitzky's techniques unleashed. However, it is effective in its results especially if you close your eyes. L. B. fans were queued back up in to Lenox at 8 o'clock so the Shapero Adagietto from the Symphony for Classical Orchestra was missed by your reviewer, but Stravinsky's Psalms and Tchaikovsky's Fifth was not.

The Psalms, which on its title page has written "Composed for the glory of God and dedicated to the Boston Symphony on the occasion of the 50th anniversary of its existence," was not performed too carefully. The chorus was not bright enough to put clean bite into the dissonances and the orchestra was frequently inaccurate. However, many beautiful effects were still evident, as in the splendid comparison between kettle drums and the chorus imitating them in the last of the three Psalms.

The Tchaikovsky was not as hard sell for Bernstein and was performed as broadly as was Koussevitzky's wont to conduct it. The popularized something about moonglow from the second movement was understated enough by Stagliano's horn to create a rather heady sensation to any auditor.

Munch Conducts

The Hanson Elegy was typical of the long, somber lines of much 19th century Russian music. Munch conducted this on Sunday with both reserve for its intent and care for its fragile-like quality. The Honegger Symphony No. 1 was by far the lightest and brightest of the weekend presentations. The first movement seemed almost to snap and crackle with a dissonance that is always clear and pleasingly reasonable to the ear.

The closing Eroica was marred a bit by pitch difficulties due to the chilling north wind sweeping through the Shed, but the finale was still a dazzling display and a most fitting close for these three memorial concerts.

1710

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,456
AUG 13 1961

Music:

Bernstein Conducts Thrilling Program

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The big story at Tanglewood last night was the fact that Leonard Bernstein conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Incidental was the program — a memorial to Serge Koussevitzky.

After receiving his initial ovation, Bernstein requested everyone to rise for a moment of silence. Last night there was an audience of 13,602.

Friday night, 4,663 persons turned out to hear Richard Burgin conduct a glowing performance of Mahler's Second Symphony. Burgin was given a fine reception.

Some local "authorities," including players from the orchestra, attributed Friday's poor attendance to the Mahler and Burgin's poor drawing power. Strength on the podium was anything but weak.

Tailor-Made Program

Bernstein's program was tailor-made for the occasion. Harold Shapero's "Adagietto" (symphony for classical orchestra) was commissioned by the Koussevitzky foundation and dedicated to the memory of Natalie Koussevitzky. Shapero was a student at the Berkshire Music Center.

So was Bernstein.

Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms" was dedicated to the orchestra on the occasion of its 50th anniversary and Koussevitzky conducted its American premiere in 1930.

Koussevitzky considered Tchaikovsky's music to be "specialty of the house." Last night, Bernstein conducted Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony, a Koussevitzky favorite. So much for the vital statistics.

Apart from the program, which was intimately allied to its purpose, last night's performances by Bernstein made this the most authentic of the Koussevitzky memorials.

Koussevitzky Protege

Bernstein is a Koussevitzky pupil and product. He still emulates the teacher in detail.

In the main, it's a question of mannerisms. Some are picturesque; others downright irritating.

Conductors such as Monteux and Burgin have proven time and again that the Boston Symphony doesn't have to be coerced to make great music. The strings don't magnify their warmth just because the conductor lashes at them with frantic wrist vibrato.

Rhythms do not become more stable because of shoulder exercises from the podium and no amount of grimacing or convulsive facial emotion is going to make the music more intense and meaningful, however overpowering it may appear.

Incidental Gestures

Just as last night's program seemed incidental to the occasion, so did these elaborate directives merely add a gloss to beautiful performances.

Except for an arid stretch toward the close, Shapero's "Adagietto" is a stunning piece. The form is neatly laid out to conform with classical practice.

Bernstein wove the melodies from head to foot He moved it along briskly for an "Adagietto," emphasizing its short, staccato phrases. The composer was on hand to take a bow.

Stravinsky's "Psalms" had the benefits of clear, exhaustive direction and a chorus of Berkshire Music Center students who were apparently agog over music and conductor.

All Stops Pulled Out

The unusual seating arrangement had the woodwinds to the left of the conductor, cellos to the right, brasses and percussion facing him. Two pianos were played by Bernard Zighera and Leo Litwin.

There was an even, sustained quality in the voices. Big sound was equally powerful throughout the range.

The interlude in oboe and flute was graciously played, establishing a mood of reverence in the second part upon which the voices entered. Two major faults — the brasses were generally too loud and it wasn't until the men sang a "Laudate" in the final section that one could be certain that the text was being sung in Latin.

Bernstein pulled out all the stops for the Tchaikovsky Fifth. The opening phrase in clarinets sounded perhaps a little less bodeful than usual. The recurring motto, some times called the "fate motive" (a kind of "brother, remember death") was powerful enough, but not allowed to menace the four movements.

The third movement was the ultimate in waltzlike gracefulness and the finale was a triumph for Bernstein, orchestra and Tchaikovsky.

The Koussevitzky memorial concerts end this afternoon. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony in Hanson's "Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky, opus 44," Honegger's Symphony No. 1 and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, "Eroica."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
AUG 20 1961

Bernstein Draws Largest Audience At Koussevitzky Memorial Concerts

Charles Munch Said to Be In Top Form This Year

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — Richard Burgin, Leonard Bernstein and Charles Munch conducted the concerts last week end dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky, long time director of the Boston Symphony and founder of the Berkshire Music School at Tanglewood.

Burgin Specialist

Naturally, Bernstein drew the largest audience, more than 13,000 people, for he had not been at Tanglewood for several seasons, but had been widely exposed to the public through television appearances. Whether or not his performance ranked first is a matter of personal opinion. For our money the performance of Mahler's Second Symphony, as conducted by Richard Burgin, surpassed almost every other performance of this season. Burgin is said to be a specialist in the music of Mahler and Bruckner. Under his direction the Second Symphony emerged crystal clear, admirably proportioned and thoroughly vital. Mr. Burgin has been concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for nearly half of its existence. The audience was small, which leads us to believe people go to concerts as much to see as to hear for surely the program offered by Bernstein was something less than wholly engrossing, but he did put on a good show while conducting.

Charles Munch offered music which Koussevitzky had admired and presented it in a forthright, wholly communicative manner. Munch has been in top form this season. He has one more season ahead before his resignation takes place and Erich Leinsdorf takes over.

Mr. Bernstein opened the Saturday night program with the lovely Adagietto from the "Symphony for Classical Orchestra" by Harold Shapero. The work was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and dedicated to the memory of Natalie Koussevitzky. The composer was on hand to acknowledge the applause.

The second work, Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms," was dedicated to the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the occasion of its 50th anniversary. The work is made up of excerpts from three Psalms, Nos. 38, 39 and 150. The work calls for a mixed chorus. It is austere, but effective. Some feel a mysticism within the work, but it seems to us a straight forward affirmation of sincere faith. The Festival Chorus has done fine work this season.

Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony, so often played by Koussevitzky, was an admirable medium for Bernstein's style of conducting as well as his sense of the poetic. It was a big, spacious reading which literally brought the audience to its feet.

Less spectacular, but infinitely moving was the program conducted by Mr. Munch. It opened with Howard Hanson's beautiful "Elegy to the Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky." The elegy was composed for the 75th anniversary of the Boston orchestra. This was followed by Arthur Honegger's First Symphony composed for the orchestra's 30th anniversary. The program concluded with a spacious, well proportioned performance of Beethoven's Third Symphony, the "Eroica."

Mr. Munch gave the Honegger symphony a highly polished performance and to the Beethoven opus he brought his years of study and abundant musicality which resulted in a full throated performance, rich in detail, relaxed and truly impressive.

These three concerts conducted by close friends of Koussevitzky might well have been tear evoking experiences, but they were not. Instead they brought back memories of the magnificent readings Koussevitzky had given these works and the realization that all of them will continue to be heard performed in the grand manner.

Aside from the Mahler symphony there were no soloists. Mahler's score, like Stravinsky's, asked for a mixed chorus, but Mahler also asked for soprano and contralto soloists. Eunice Alberts, after several seasons away from Tanglewood, where she had been a student, returned to sing better than ever, while soprano Nancy Carr, somewhat overpowered by full orchestra, sang with security and full realization of texts.

Audiences have been smaller than last season, but the weather has been inclement. We believe the total attendance will be only slightly lower than last season.

Richard Burgin Presents Season's Outstanding Performance

ALBANY KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
Saturday, August 19, 1961

Opinions at Variance On Bernstein Concert

She Liked It:

Editor of The Knickerbocker News:

On your (reviewer's) comment about the Leonard Bernstein concert at Tanglewood last Saturday night:

Your (reviewer's) jealousy and prejudice showed badly.

Bernstein

I was amazed to learn that Bernstein is about 43 years old. What vitality for one of that age! Sure he is a showman and I and the 12,000 others spectators hope and pray that he never grows up. You admit he's a genius so what's so bad for a genius to become emotional and carried away with every note of music which he seems to radiate from every pore?

The 14,000 spectators didn't consider him so obnoxious as you do and proved it by applauding to a person and calling him back again and again. To top off all your criticisms, your last remark, "And after the concert was over there was a Bernsteinian litter on the lawn," especially has a foul connotation. What could a littered lawn have in common with Bernstein outside of your mind?

I'm sure it's beneath the dignity of Leonard Bernstein to comment on your remarks, but I'm sending him the article anyway.

MRS. ANNA SEIDEN.

Albany.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Duane La Fleche, city editor, who reviewed the Bernstein concert, disapproved what he described as the conductor's over-emotionalism and "posturing" and judged him to be "guilty of bad manners," especially in the playing of Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5. He stands by his comments.

He Didn't:

Editor of The Knickerbocker News:

I'm with Duane La Fleche 100 per cent as far as Leonard Bernstein's silly conducting is concerned.

JOE MARCUS.

Albany.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263

AUG 12 1961

TANGLEWOOD IN TRIBUTE TO KOUSSEVITZKY

Burgin Leads Symphony In Program of Haydn, Mahler Works

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—Charles Munch has dedicated the three concerts of this week end at Tanglewood to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky, first conductor of the Berkshire Festival and founder of the Berkshire Music Center.

Displays Skill

Friday night Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for more than half the years of its existence, led his colleagues through a program which opened with Haydn's" Symphony in G Major, No. 88" and concluded with Mahler's "Symphony in C Minor" for orchestra, soprano and alto solos and mixed chorus. Both works were favored by Mr. Koussevitzky.

When so knowledgeable a musician as Mr. Burgin takes over an orchestra, something fine is bound to result. It happened first in the Haydn symphony. The opening movement had an earthy quality; the slow movement, one of the loveliest Haydn wrote, was played with luminous tone and exquisite phrasing; the minuetto was forthright, and the finale had a delicacy, yet a yet a strength of purpose, as great as the opening movement.

The Boston players did their best for their colleague and Haydn's music emerged as vital and melodious as the day it was written.

Marked by Dignity

Mr. Burgin is, we have been told, a specialist in the music of Gustav Mahler. Specialist or not, the music emerged with a dignity and strength which characterizes most of Mahler's creation. As usual, one longed for climaxes which were worked up to but often failed to materialize. It was the fault of the music, not the conductor. Mahler often fails to complete his utterances, a trait which makes listening to some of his music a trial.

Mr. Burgin approached the music with great respect and brought to his reading the intellectuality the music must have. This "Resurrection" symphony is filled with melodies of searing anguish and melodies of exultation, and each theme came forth with magnificent clarity.

In addition to the vast resources of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Burgin had the expert assistance of soprano Nancy Carr and alto Eunice Albert. To Miss Albert was given one of the most beautiful solos Mahler wrote. She sang it with dignity and vast vocal resources and depth of feeling. Miss Carr had less to do, but her high soprano came forth clearly above the whole orchestra.

Chorus Praised

The festival chorus, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, sang with exquisite tonal texture, with the male section particularly impressive. In fact, I do not remember finer singing from any recent festival chorus.

Final honors must go to Richard Burgin for providing a superior performance of a truly great work.

As we write these lines, echoes of tremendous and prolonged applause reach us. It is all deserved. The festival audience will probably not hear a finer performance this season.

Sad to relate, this performance drew only 4663 people. It was a little damp, but it wasn't bad enough to make it an excuse for nonattendance.

Tonight Leonard Bernstein holds forth and we predict a record audience with the majority on hand to see rather than listen.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,763

AUG 14 1961

Music:

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The combinat... contemporary and classic... was appropriately select... Charles Munch and the ... Symphony to close the ... Koussevitzky memorial ... yesterday afternoon at ... wood. Yesterday's audien... 697 brought the total en... ends to 34,962.

The program: Howard H... "Elegy to the Memory o... Koussevitzky, Opus 44." ...ger's Symphony No. 1 a... ...hoven's Symphony No. 3 ... Major, the "Eroica."

One's memory of Kou... is purely a personal mat... general impression he ga... the podium was a fiery ... lity who was capable o... gentleness.

Hanson's "Elegy" is ... his own. It's a short work ... consistent interest, ton... some, it might seem ... ing, even incongruous, ... title literally and rea... of character study into th... Such evocation could ... most departed musician... strong individuality ... status.

Interpretation Inge...

Hanson's melodies pur... ly laid out courses, seek... tablish an atmosphere o... with traces of grandeur... a repetitive plan of act... curious traces of Kha... harmony.

Conductor and orchestra ... it with formality. The ... ance was careful and ... but not particularly co... Hanson came on stage f...

Honegger dedicated ... symphony to Koussevi... the Boston Symphony ... casion of the orchestra ... Time had proved that ... things were being said ... during the late 20s and ... This symphony is a pr... ple.

We can't imagine ... genious interpretation ... given by Munch.

His objectives were ...

1710

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,456
AUG 13 1961

Music:

Bernstein Conducts Thrilling Program

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The big story at Tanglewood last night was the fact that Leonard Bernstein conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Incidental was the program — a memorial to Serge Koussevitzky.

After receiving his initial ovation, Bernstein requested everyone to rise for a moment of silence. Last night there was an audience of 13,602.

Friday night, 4,663 persons turned out to hear Richard Burgin conduct a glowing performance of Mahler's Second Symphony. Burgin was given a fine reception.

Some local "authorities," including players from the orchestra, attributed Friday's poor attendance to the Mahler and Burgin's poor drawing power. Strength on the podium was anything but weak.

Tailor-Made Program

Bernstein's program was tailor-made for the occasion. Harold Shapero's "Adagietto" (symphony for classical orchestra) was commissioned by the Koussevitzky foundation and dedicated to the memory of Natalie Koussevitzky. Shapero was a student at the Berkshire Music Center.

So was Bernstein.

Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms" was dedicated to the orchestra on the occasion of its 50th anniversary and Koussevitzky conducted its American premiere in 1930.

Koussevitzky considered Tchaikovsky's music to be "specialty of the house." Last night, Bernstein conducted Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony, a Koussevitzky favorite. So much for the vital statistics.

Apart from the program, which was intimately allied to its purpose, last night's performances by Bernstein made this the most authentic of the Koussevitzky memorials.

Koussevitzky Protege

Bernstein is a Koussevitzky pupil and product. He still emulates the teacher in detail.

In the main, it's a question of mannerisms. Some are picturesque; others downright irritating.

Conductors such as Monteux and Burgin have proven time and again that the Boston Symphony doesn't have to be coerced to make great music. The strings don't magnify their warmth just because the conductor lashes at them with frantic wrist vibrato.

Rhythms do not become more stable because of shoulder exercises from the podium and no amount of grimacing or convulsive facial emotion is going to make the music more intense and meaningful, however overpowering it may appear.

Incidental Gestures

Just as last night's program seemed incidental to the occasion, so did these elaborate directives merely add a gloss to beautiful performances.

Except for an arid stretch toward the close, Shapero's "Adagietto" is a stunning piece. The form is neatly laid out to conform with classical practice.

Bernstein wove the melodies from head to foot He moved it along briskly for an "Adagietto," emphasizing its short, staccato phrases. The composer was on hand to take a bow.

Stravinsky's "Psalms" had the benefits of clear, exhaustive direction and a chorus of Berkshire Music Center students who were apparently agog over music and conductor.

All Stops Pulled Out

The unusual seating arrangement had the woodwinds to the left of the conductor, cellos to the right, brasses and percussion facing him. Two pianos were played by Bernard Zighera and Leo Litwin.

There was an even, sustained quality in the voices. Big sound was equally powerful throughout the range.

The interlude in oboe and flute was graciously played, establishing a mood of reverence in the second part upon which the voices entered. Two major faults — the brasses were generally too loud and it wasn't until the men sang a "Laudate" in the final section that one could be certain that the text was being sung in Latin.

Bernstein pulled out all the stops for the Tchaikovsky Fifth. The opening phrase in clarinets sounded perhaps a little less bodeful than usual. The recurring motto, some times called the "fate motive" (a kind of "brother, remember death") was powerful enough, but not allowed to menace the four movements.

The third movement was the ultimate in waltzlike gracefulness and the finale was a triumph for Bernstein, orchestra and Tchaikovsky.

The Koussevitzk[y] concerts end this a[f]
Munch will con
Symphony in H
the Memory o zky, opus 44," phony No.
Symphony N

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
AUG 20 1961

Bernstein Draws Largest Audience At Koussevitzky Memorial Concerts

Charles Munch Said to Be In Top Form This Year

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — Richard Burgin, Leonard Bernstein and Charles Munch conducted the concerts last week end dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky, long time director of the Boston Symphony and founder of the Berkshire Music School at Tanglewood.

Burgin Specialist

Naturally, Bernstein drew the largest audience, more than 13,000 people, for he had not been at Tanglewood for several seasons, but had been widely exposed to the public through television appearances. Whether or not his performance ranked first is a matter of personal opinion. For our money the performance of Mahler's Second Symphony, as conducted by Richard Burgin, surpassed almost every other performance of this season. Burgin is said to be a specialist in the music of Mahler and Bruckner. Under his direction the Second Symphony emerged crystal clear, admirably proportioned and thoroughly vital. Mr. Burgin has been concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for nearly half of its existence. The audience was small, which leads us to believe people go to concerts as much to see as to hear for surely the program offered by Bernstein was something less than wholly engrossing, but he did put on a good show while conducting.

Charles Munch offered music which Koussevitzky had admired and presented it in a forthright, wholly communicative manner. Munch has been in top form this season. He has one more season ahead before his resignation takes place and Erich Leinsdorf takes over.

Mr. Bernstein opened the Saturday night program with the lovely Adagietto from the "Symphony for Classical Orchestra" by Harold Shapero. The work was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and dedicated to the memory of Natalie Koussevitzky. The composer was on hand to acknowledge the applause.

The second work, Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms," was dedicated to the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the occasion of its 50th anniversary. The work is made up of excerpts from three Psalms, Nos. 38, 39 and 150. The work calls for a mixed chorus. It is austere, but effective. Some feel a mysticism within the work, but it seems to us a straight forward affirmation of sincere faith. The Festival Chorus has done fine work this season.

Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony, so often played by Koussevitzky, was an admirable medium for Bernstein's style of conducting as well as his sense of the poetic. It was a big, spacious reading which literally brought the audience to its feet.

Less spectacular, but infinitely moving was the program conducted by Mr. Munch. It opened with Howard Hanson's beautiful "Elegy to the Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky." The elegy was composed for the 75th anniversary of the Boston orchestra. This was followed by Arthur Honegger's First Symphony composed for the orchestra's 30th anniversary. The program concluded with a spacious, well proportioned performance of Beethoven's Third Symphony, the "Eroica."

Mr. Munch gave the Honegger symphony a highly polished performance and to the Beethoven opus he brought his years of study and abundant musicality which resulted in a full throated performance, rich in detail, relaxed and truly impressive.

These three concerts conducted by close friends of Koussevitzky might well have been tear evoking experiences, but they were not. Instead they brought back memories of the magnificent readings Koussevitzky had given these works and the realization that all of them will continue to be heard performed in the grand manner.

Aside from the Mahler symphony there were no soloists. Mahler's score, like Stravinsky's, asked for a mixed chorus, but Mahler also asked for soprano and contralto soloists. Eunice Alberts, after several seasons away from Tanglewood, where she had been a student, returned to sing better than ever, while soprano Nancy Carr, somewhat overpowered by full orchestra, sang with security and full realization of texts.

Audiences have been smaller than last season, but the weather has been inclement. We believe the total attendance will be only slightly lower than last season.

Richard Burgin Presents Season's Outstanding Performance

Mr. Burgin is, we have been told, a specialist in the music of Gustav Mahler. Specialist or not, the music emerged with a dignity and strength which characterizes most of Mahler's creation. As usual, one longed for climaxes which were worked up to but often failed to materialize. It was the fault of the music, not the conductor. Mahler often fails to complete his utterances, a trait which makes listening to some of his music a trial.

Mr. Burgin approached the music with great respect and brought to his reading the intellectuality the music must have. This "Resurrection" symphony is filled with melodies of searing anguish and melodies of exultation, and each theme came forth with magnificent clarity.

In addition to the vast resources of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Burgin had the expert assistance of soprano Nancy Carr and alto Eunice Albert. To Miss Albert was given one of the most beautiful solos Mahler wrote. She sang it with dignity and vast vocal resources and depth of feeling. Miss Carr had less to do, but her high soprano came forth clearly above the whole orchestra.

Chorus Praised

The festival chorus, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, sang with exquisite tonal texture, with the male section particularly impressive. In fact, I do not remember finer singing from any recent festival chorus.

Final honors must go to Richard Burgin for providing a superior performance of a truly great work.

As we write these lines, echoes of tremendous and prolonged applause reach us. It is all deserved. The festival audience will probably not hear a finer performance this season.

Sad to relate, this performance drew only 4663 people. It was a little damp, but it wasn't bad enough to make it an excuse for nonattendance.

Tonight Leonard Bernstein holds forth and we predict a record audience with the majority on hand to see rather than listen.

ALBANY KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
Saturday, August 19, 1961

Opinions at Variance On Bernstein Concert

She Liked It:

Editor of The Knickerbocker News:

On your (reviewer's) comment about the Leonard Bernstein concert at Tanglewood last Saturday night:

Your (reviewer's) jealousy and prejudice showed badly.

Bernstein

I was amazed to learn that Bernstein is about 43 years old. What vitality for one of that age! Sure he is a showman and I and the 12,000 others spectators hope and pray that he never grows up. You admit he's a genius so what's so bad for a genius to become emotional and carried away with every note of music which he seems to radiate from every pore?

The 14,000 spectators didn't consider him so obnoxious as you do and proved it by applauding to a person and calling him back again and again. To top off all your criticisms, your last remark, "And after the concert was over there was a Bernsteinian litter on the lawn," especially has a foul connotation. What could a littered lawn have in common with Bernstein outside of your mind?

I'm sure it's beneath the dignity of Leonard Bernstein to comment on your remarks, but I'm sending him the article anyway.

MRS. ANNA SEIDEN.

Albany.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Duane La Fleche, city editor, who reviewed the Bernstein concert, disapproved what he described as the conductor's over-emotionalism and "posturing" and judged him to be "guilty of bad manners," especially in the playing of Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5. He stands by his comments.

He Didn't:

Editor of The Knickerbocker News:

I'm with Duane La Fleche 100 per cent as far as Leonard Bernstein's silly conducting is concerned.

JOE MARCUS.

Albany.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
AUG 12 1961

TANGLEWOOD IN TRIBUTE TO KOUSSEVITZKY

Burgin Leads Symphony In Program of Haydn, Mahler Works

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—Charles Munch has dedicated the three concerts of this week end at Tanglewood to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky, first conductor of the Berkshire Festival and founder of the Berkshire Music Center.

Displays Skill

Friday night Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for more than half the years of its existence, led his colleagues through a program which opened with Haydn's" Symphony in G Major, No. 88" and concluded with Mahler's "Symphony in C Minor" for orchestra, soprano and alto solos and mixed chorus. Both works were favored by Mr. Koussevitzky.

When so knowledgeable a musician as Mr. Burgin takes over an orchestra, something fine is bound to result. It happened first in the Haydn symphony. The opening movement had an earthy quality; the slow movement, one of the loveliest Haydn wrote, was played with luminous tone and exquisite phrasing; the minuetto was forthright, and the finale had a delicacy, yet a yet a strength of purpose, as great as the opening movement.

The Boston players did their best for their colleague and Haydn's music emerged as vital and melodious as the day it was written.

Marked by Dignity

Mr. Burgin is, we have been told, a specialist in the music of Gustav Mahler. Specialist or not, the music emerged with a dignity and strength which characterizes most of Mahler's creation. As usual, one longed for climaxes which were worked up to but often failed to materialize. It was the fault of the music, not the conductor. Mahler often fails to complete his utterances, a trait which makes listening to some of his music a trial.

Mr. Burgin approached the music with great respect and brought to his reading the intellectuality the music must have. This "Resurrection" symphony is filled with melodies of searing anguish and melodies of exultation, and each theme came forth with magnificent clarity.

In addition to the vast resources of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Burgin had the expert assistance of soprano Nancy Carr and alto Eunice Albert. To Miss Albert was given one of the most beautiful solos Mahler wrote. She sang it with dignity and vast vocal resources and depth of feeling. Miss Carr had less to do, but her high soprano came forth clearly above the whole orchestra.

Chorus Praised

The festival chorus, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, sang with exquisite tonal texture, with the male section particularly impressive. In fact, I do not remember finer singing from any recent festival chorus.

Final honors must go to Richard Burgin for providing a superior performance of a truly great work.

As we write these lines, echoes of tremendous and prolonged applause reach us. It is all deserved. The festival audience will probably not hear a finer performance this season.

Sad to relate, this performance drew only 4663 people. It was a little damp, but it wasn't bad enough to make it an excuse for nonattendance.

Tonight Leonard Bernstein holds forth and we predict a record audience with the majority on hand to see rather than

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,783

AUG 14

Music: Memorial Program For Koussevitzky

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The combination of contemporary and classic music was appropriately selected by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony to close the Serge Koussevitzky memorial weekend yesterday afternoon at Tanglewood. Yesterday's audience of 6,697 brought the total on weekends to 24,962.

The program: Howard Hanson's "Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky, Opus 44," Honegger's Symphony No. 1 and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 in E Flat Major, the "Eroica."

One's memory of Koussevitzky is purely a personal matter. The general impression he gave from the podium was a fiery personality who was capable of great gentleness.

Hanson's "Elegy" is strictly his own. It's a short work of fairly consistent interest, tonally. To some, it might seem unconvincing, even incongruous, to take the title literally and read any kind of character study into the music. Such evocation could apply to most departed musicians of such strong individuality and high status.

Interpretation Ingenious

Hanson's melodies pursue neatly laid out courses, seeking to establish an atmosphere of respect with traces of grandeur. There is a repetitive plan of action, with curious traces of Khachaturian harmony.

Conductor and orchestra treated it with formality. The performance was careful and thorough, but not particularly compelling. Hanson came on stage for a bow.

Honegger dedicated his first symphony to Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony on the occasion of the orchestra's jubilee. Time had proved that important things were being said in music during the late 20s and early 30s. This symphony is a prime example.

We can't imagine a more ingenious interpretation than that given by Munch.

His objectives were tonal coloration and decisive rhythmic effect. The two fast movements were masculine music, bordering on harshness, with touches of savagery. Violin passages in the first movement had a soothing quality, challenged by smarting brasses. It moved through conflicting rhythms and splashes of muddy harmony, merciless to the ear, but exciting.

The finale (with raucous boulevardier effects) was played with machinelike precision, building layer by layer into reverberating turmoil, subsiding to a whisper at the end. The slow movement begins with a viola, cello, flute conversation, dissolved by beautiful muted substance in strings.

Almost everything in Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony was magnified in yesterday's performance, for better or worse. The first movement was strained. Tempos were pushed and stress was placed on generally percussive effects.

Program for Friday

Exceptions were fragile interludes in woodwinds. The performance was certainly alive, but sounded impatient, with brasses sometimes upsetting balances.

Munch filled the funeral march with rich tone. It was far from a weeping 'cortege' — more of a stately, solemn occasion. The middle segment beginning with quiet solos in winds, swept aside any odor of mortality that might have existed.

The scherzo had staccato touches at the fast clip, absolutely clear in every detail. Horns did a fine job of their hazardous interludes. The finale was jubilant, brilliant, like safely depositing fragile china among explosives.

Thursday is the Berkshire music center's "gala evening" for its own benefit. Demonstrations and programs begin at 4 p.m. Friday night begins the Berkshire festival's final weekend. Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony in Mendelssohn's "Octet for Strings," and Debussy's "La Mer." Claudio Arrau will be soloist in Beethoven's Fourth Piano Concerto.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 40,709

AUG 14 1961

Tanglewood Season Now In Last Week

(Special to The American)

LENOX, MASS. — The three concerts of the Berkshire Festival dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky brought a handfull less than 25,000 music lovers for a week end that found 13,602 gathered to hear Leonard Bernstein conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Saturday evening, Richard Burgin conduct Friday night with the Festival Chorus, and Charles Munch on the podium on a cool Sunday afternoon.

Burgin, concertmaster and assistant conductor for many years under Koussevitzky and still in the same chair, led the orchestra Friday night when 4,663 heard a careful performance of Haydn's "Symphony in G Major, No. 88" and Mahler's "Symphony No. 2," for orchestra, soprano and alto solos, and mixed chorus." The soloists were Nancy Carr, soprano, and Eunie Alberts, contralto.

It was Saturday evening's audience, however, that brought the largest attendance of the season for Leonard Bernstein who was a student in Koussevitzky's first class for conductors. Watching the audience one was tempted to wonder how many had come to hear the orchestra and how many to watch Bernstein conduct. He worked wonders with the Boston, driving the men at times, and evoking brilliant, full tone, but there were moments when one wondered if all of his theatrical effects were needed. We must admit that Leonard Bernstein conducts with much less motion than in other years but unless one closes one's eyes now and then he seems to get in the way of the music.

The audience for the most part, however, seems not to be so troubled for listeners seem to adore and worship him as something from a special planet. Bernstein plays every note with the Boston, seeming to interpret it to the musicians as though they had not played the selections many times before. But there is only one Leonard Bernstein and the thousands left no doubt about the high esteem in which he is held. Following a dramatic minute of silence for which Bernstein had the audience stand there was the playing of Shapero's "Adagietto from the Symphony for Classical Orchestra" with the composer being called to the platform. Stravinsky's "Symphonie de Psaumes," using verses of three psalms, was performed beautifully and effectively with more than 100 voices taking the parts of the violins and violas, while the larger stringed instruments played their regular roles. Saturday night's concert concluded with Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 5, in E minor" receiving a beautiful and rich reading with Bernstein bringing down the house when it was over.

Sunday afternoon's concert with 6,697 feeling the chill of a sudden change in the weather heard Charles Munch conduct Howard Hanson's "Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky" with the composer present to receive the applause. Honegger's "Symphony No. 1" in three movements was effectively performed, dying away into a beautiful ending as it seemed to fade into breathlessness. The concert ended with Bethoven's "Symphony No. 3, in E-flat Major." For this reviewer the performance of the "Eroica" was the high mark of the afternoon.

The Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood is now in its seventh and last week. The added week end of concerts will find Munch conducting Friday night and Sunday afternoon with Pierre Monteux conducting a program of Stravinsky, Rachmaninoff, and Tchaikovsky on Saturday night. Next season the Festival will be expanded to eight weeks.

SM

Music

Bartok Concerto Tops Tanglewood Festival

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL—Dr. Charles Munch conducted the Boston Symphony orchestra in the fifth Sunday program in the current series of events at the Berkshire Festival in Lenox.

Leonard Bernstein

The program provided a list that included Beethoven's Seventh; the Viola Concerto by Bartok with de Pasquale as soloist, and Respighi's "The Pines of Rome."

Bartok's work, or should we say, Serly's, because it was the latter who constructed into one piece what the world today accepts as some of Bartok's finest writing. With the death of the composer came the problem to place into form for performing purposes a manuscript whose content was commissioned by the eminent violoncellist, William Primrose.

However, despite the countless questions that arise at each and every performance of the Concerto, it remains a definite fact that those listening are the recipients, at least partially, of what the composer sought to express. The orchestral parts are definitely a part of Bartok, and at least here, the listener hears what originally was intended.

The soloist was in excellent form. He pursued the music as though he were a disciple of what had been originally intended. This, coupled with a lovely tonal line and execution, offered much for the audience to praise. The orchestra at this time was superb in its intent as well as its technical ability.

Dr. Munch gave a masterful reading of the Beethoven. The Allegretto, one of the most beloved and famous of any symphonic movements was cadanced with style and captured in no ordinary manner the reason for this music's influence on those of the romantic period. The entire symphony was pleasing to experience, and there was little if any doubt that the combine of Munch and the Boston Symphony made Beethoven everything he is expected to be.

This week at the festival has been presented in tribute to Serge Koussevitzky. Possibly the highpoint will be the appearance of Leonard Bernstein as guest conductor tonight.

TOMORROW AT 2:30 o'clock Charles Munch will conduct. His program will include Hanson's Elegy for Serge Koussevitzky; Honegger's Symphony No. 1, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3. At 8:30 in the theater, the BMC group will present a program of opera scenes.

The 16th Bennington composers conference and chamber music center in Vermont will be in session through the 27th of August. The conference opened today.

The Composer's conference presents the opportunity for talented composers to hear their works played and criticized. It performs a unique function in that the participating composers represent the broadest possible cross-section of musical points of view. The absence of an arbitrarily set aesthetic principle assures an open-minded approach to the work of each composer on the part of both his colleagues and the staff performers.

Programs include seminars with the staff composers on technique, contemporary idioms, publishing, and criticism, readings of acceptable works, and public performance of the best works. All reading sessions and public concerts are professionally recorded.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Republican (m)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 22,546

AUG 15 1961

Tanglewood Concerts Well Attended

(Special to The Republican)

LENOX, MASS. — The three concerts of the Berkshire Festival dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky brought a handful less than 25,000 music lovers for a week end that found 13,602 gathered to hear Leonard Bernstein conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Saturday evening, Richard Burgin conduct Friday night with the Festival Chorus, and Charles Munch on the podium on a cool Sunday afternoon.

Burgin, concertmaster and assistant conductor for many years under Koussevitzky and still in the same chair, led the orchestra Friday night when 4,663 heard a careful performance of Haydn's "Symphony in G Major, No. 88" and Mahler's "Symphony No. 2," for orchestra, soprano and alto solos, and mixed chorus." The soloists were Nancy Carr, soprano, and Eunie Alberts, contralto.

It was Saturday evening's audience, however, that brought the largest attendance of the season for Leonard Bernstein who was a student in Koussevitzky's first class for conductors. Watching the audience one was tempted to wonder how many had come to hear the orchestra and how many to watch Bernstein conduct. He worked wonders with the Boston, driving the men at times, and evoking brilliant, full tone, but there were moments when one wondered if all of his theatrical effects were needed. We must admit that Leonard Bernstein conducts with much less motion than in other years but unless one closes one's eyes now and then he seems to get in the way of the music.

The audience for the most part, however, appear not to be so troubled for listeners seem to adore and worship him as something from a special planet. Bernstein plays every note with the Boston, seeming to interpret it to the musicians as though they had not played the selections many times before. But there is only one Leonard Bernstein and the thousands left no doubt about the high esteem in which he is held. Following a dramatic minute of silence for which Bernstein had the audience stand there was the playing of Shapero's "Adagietto from the Symphony for Classical Orchestra" with the composer being called to the platform. Stravinsky's "Symphonie de Psaumes," using verses of three psalms, was performed beautifully and effectively with more than 100 voices taking the parts of the violins and violas, while the larger stringed instruments played their regular roles. Saturday night's concert concluded with Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 5, in E minor" receiving a beautiful and rich reading with Bernstein bringing down the house when it was over.

Sunday afternoon's concert with 6,697 feeling the chill of a sudden change in the weather heard Charles Munch conduct Howard Hanson's "Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky" with the composer present to receive the applause. Honegger's "Symphony No. 1" in three movements was effectively performed, dying away into a beautiful ending as it seemed to fade into breathlessness. The concert ended with Bethoven's "Symphony No. 3, in E-flat Major." For this reviewer the performance of the "Eroica" was the high mark of the afternoon.

The Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood is now in its seventh and last week. The added week end of concerts will find Munch conducting Friday night and Sunday afternoon with Pierre Monteux conducting a program of Stravinsky, Rachmaninoff, and Tchaikovsky on Saturday night. Next season the Festival will be expanded to eight weeks.

Sy

175

Headline Tanglewood Program This Week

Among a few of the headliners appearing at Tanglewood this week are: upper left, Gary Graffman, pianist, who will be soloist with Pierre Monteux and the Boston Symphony Orchestra Saturday evening at 8.30; upper right, Eleazar de Carvalho, who will lead the students of the Berkshire Music Center Thursday evening; lower left, Aaron Copland, faculty chairman, who will conduct the student orchestra Thursday evening, and lower right, Claudio Arrau, pianist, who will appear Wednesday and Friday evenings.

Final Koussevitzky Concert Is Today at Tanglewood

First Berkshire Performance of Boston Symphony Orchestra Was 25 Years Ago

LENOX—This weekend at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood three concerts have been scheduled in tribute to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky who died June 4, 1951. Dr. Koussevitzky's grave is within a few miles of the Tanglewood grounds where he conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra for many years and where he directed the first years of the orchestra's school, the Berkshire Music Center.

Anniversary Concert

Leonard Bernstein and Richard Burgin—both friends and colleagues of Dr. Koussevitzky—conducted the first two concerts this week end (Friday and Saturday nights) and Charles Munch, who succeeded Serge Koussevitzky as the orchestra's music director in 1949, will conduct today's concert. In addition to being a tribute to Dr. Koussevitzky, today's concert will also mark the 26th anniversary of the first Boston Symphony Orchestra concert in the Berkshires.

The orchestra's first concert, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, and given on the grounds of a Berkshire estate, was held on Aug. 13, 1936. At this concert Dr. Koussevitzky conducted the Bach Chorale Prelude, "Komm Gott, Schopfer, heiliger Geist" and three compositions by Beethoven: the "Egmont" Overture, and the Symphonies No. 7 and 2.

At today's concert Dr. Munch will conduct Hanson's "Elegy for My Friend Serge Koussevitzky," Honegger's Symphony No. 1 and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3.

Dr. Munch will conduct the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood next Sunday afternoon. For the last concert of his penultimate season as the orchestra's music director, Dr. Munch has chosen Hector Berlioz' Dramatic Symphony "Romeo and Juliet."

At this performance his guests will be contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm plus the Festival Chorus (prepared by Hugh Ross, Alfred Nash Patterson and Willis Beckett). Dr. Munch has invited the 50 members of the University of Montreal chorus to join the Festival Chorus for this performance. The Montreal chorus has been prepared by its director, Fernand Graton, who is a former student of both choral conducting and orchestral conducting at the Berkshire Music Center.

Pierre Monteux will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Saturday evening at 8.30 with pianist Gary Graffman as his guest. Mr. Graffman will be soloist in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2. The remainder of the Suite from "Petrouchka" by Stravinsky and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

Claudio Arrau will present a recital at Tanglewood Wednesday at 8.30 p. m., and he will be Charles Munch's guest at the Friday concert at 8.30 p. m. The recital, a Liszt Sesquicentennial program, will consist of excerpts from "Annees de pelerinage," Etudes d'Execution Transcendante, the Ballade in B minor, No. 2, "Benediction de Dieu dans la solitude," and the Mephisto Waltz. At the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert Friday, Mr. Arrau will be guest in a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 4, in G major, by Beethoven. At this concert, Dr. Munch will also conduct Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings and "La Mer" by Debussy.

At Tanglewood Thursday the students of the Berkshire Music Center will participate in several programs to benefit the Berkshire Music Center's scholarship funds. The gala evening, for which the grounds will be opened at 3.30 p. m., will include performances by students from every department of the school. The final event of the evening will be a concert by the student orchestra in the Music Shed.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to the following events in the coming week: Composer's Forum, Monday, 8.30 p. m. in the Chamber Music Hall; Seminar in Contemporary Music, Friday, 3.15 p. m., in the Chamber Music Hall; Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, Saturday, 3 p. m., in the Shed; and Berkshire Music Center chamber music Sunday, Aug. 20, 10 a. m., in the Chamber Music Hall.

Tanglewood Topics

Sunday, 10 a. m., Music Hall, Berkshire Chamber Music; 2.30 p. m., Music Shed, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conductor; 8.30 p. m., Theater, Berkshire Music Center opera scenes.

Monday, 8.30 p. m., Music Hall, Composer's Forum.

Wednesday, 8.30 p. m., Theater, Liszt Sesquicentennial recital, Claudio Arrau soloist.

Thursday, 3.30 p. m., grounds open; 8.30 p. m., Music Shed, climax event of "Gala Evening" with concert by students of Berkshire Music School.

Friday, 3.15 p. m., Music Hall, Seminar in Contemporary Music; 8.30 p. m., Music Shed, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conductor, Claudio Arrau soloist.

Saturday, 10 a. m., Music Shed, Boston Symphony Orchestra open rehearsal; 3 p. m., Music Shed, Berkshire Music Center Orchestra; 8.30 p. m., Music Shed, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conductor, Garry Graffman soloist.

Special Program

Charles Munch, Richard Burgin, Arthur Fiedler, Leonard Bernstein, Aaron Copland, Erich Leinsdorf, and Gary Graffman discussed "The Direction of Music in America" in a special 50-minute program recorded at Tanglewood Wednesday by the Columbia Broadcasting System and for National Educational Television.

The program will be available to approximately 200 CBS stations in the United States and to national television stations this week.

* * *

Tanglewood 'Today'

The National Broadcasting Company's "Today" Show was at Tanglewood Thursday.

John Chancellor, who succeeded Dave Garroway as host on the program, and his associates, including Frank Blair, Anita Colby and Betty Clooney, interviewed Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, Aaron Copland and Arthur Fiedler, among others, and the Boston Fine Arts Quartet (members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra) performed.

soloists from the Opera Department will be heard in the scenes from Mr. Copland's opera.

* * *

Claudio Arrau

Claudio Arrau, the pianist who is almost as famed for his indefatigability and his transhemispheric tours as he is for his pianism, will make two appearances at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood this week.

Wednesday evening Mr. Arrau will present a recital of piano music by Franz Liszt. For this recital, which will be held in the Tanglewood Theater at 8.30 p. m., Mr. Arrau has contributed his services to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship funds. As guest with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday evening, Mr. Arrau will be heard in the Piano Concerto No. 4 by Beethoven.

'Gala Evening'

Charles Munch, Aaron Copland and Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra at Tanglewood Thursday evening at 8.30 as the final event of the center's annual "Gala Evening." All students at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school — 284 from 36 states and 10 foreign countries — will participate in the gala, the income from which will benefit the center's scholarship funds.

"The "Gala Evening" will begin at 4 p. m. when members of Boris Goldovsky's Opera Department will present a program of one-act operas in the Tanglewood Theater.

At 6 p. m. in the Chamber Music Hall the Fromm Players' — those studying at Tanglewood on fellowships awarded by the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago—will give a concert of music by composers studying under the direction of Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner and Roberto Gerhard at Tanglewood this summer.

The Tanglewood Choir—students from the Department of Choral Music, trained by Hugh Ross, Willis Beckett and Alfred Nash Patterson — will give a supper concert from the porch of the Main House at 7 p. m.

Eleazar de Carvalho — head of the Music Center Orchestra — will conduct Haydn's Symphony No. 99 as the first work in the concert by the school's symphony orchestra in the Music Shed at 8.30 p. m. Dr. Munch, who is director of the Berkshire Music Center as well as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the students in Tchaikovsky's Overture, "Romeo and Juliet," and Aaron Copland will conduct the orchestra in scenes from his opera "The Tender Land." The Festival Chorus — made up of students from all departments — and

Bernstein, Munch, Burgin Share Tanglewood Podium

By D. E. RITZ
Gazette Music Editor

The Boston Symphony Orchestra presented three concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this weekend honoring its late director, Serge Koussevitzky, and playing for weekend audiences numbering 24,962 persons.

* * *

RICHARD BURGIN, concertmaster and assistant conductor under both Dr. Koussevitzky and Charles Munch, conducted the Friday evening concert; Leonard Bernstein, pupil of Dr. Koussevitzky, conducted the Saturday night concert and Dr. Munch, successor to Dr. Koussevitzky, conducted yesterday afternoon's concert.

The Friday concert drew 4,663 persons; the Saturday concert 13,602 and yesterday's concert 6,697. The Saturday open rehearsal was attended by 5, 021.

Yesterday's program, which we attended, included Howard Hanson's "Elegy to the Memory of My Friend, Serge Koussevitzky, opus 44," the Honegger Symphony number 1" and the Beethoven "Symphony number 3 in E flat Major, Eroica, opus 55."

* * *

DR. HANSON was present to hear the orchestra in a fine performance of his composition which was commissioned by the orchestra and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation for the 75th anniversary of the orchestra.

A somber, but expressive melody is the basis of the "Elegy"—the only composition on yesterday's program which included the use of the harps. The music is rewarding and the performance drew fine applause which Dr. Munch shared with the composer.

* * *

THE HONEGGER Symphony, composed in 1929-30, has an unusually melodic (for Honegger) slow movement and music of vigorous, almost wild character in its opening and closing movements. There is an angularity to the themes and phrases of the composer, yet melodies appear in the most unexpected places.

The Honegger Symphony No. 1 was composed for the 50th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and first was performed Feb. 13 and 14, 1931. A master of orchestration and of color, Honegger's works have boldness, vigor and dissonance.

* * *

THE "EROICA" NEEDS no analysis. The vigor of Dr. Munch's interpretation and the delight of the men of the orchestra in recreating the music left one breathless. There is a nobility to the music of the "Marcia funebre" and a resonance to the Beethoven music that made it a fitting conclusion to a weekend, honoring the conductor whose name was synonimous with Tanglewood from 1936 through Aug. 13, 1950. Dr. Koussevitzky died June 4, 1951.

The Berkshire Festival has been extended another week and will continue through next weekend with Boston Symphony concerts on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoon.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
AUG 15 1961

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 12 1961

174

Orchestra Pays Tribute To Koussevitsky Memory In Tanglewood Concert

In the sixth weekend of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra paid tribute to the memory of its late great conductor, Serge Koussevitsky. Music identified with the 25-year director was shared between his colleagues, associate conductor and concertmaster Richard Burgin, a famous former pupil Leonard Bernstein and his successor, the distinguished Charles Munch.

Friday evening's concert drew a rather small attendance of 4663, but conceived a memorably inspired program under the baton of Mr. Burgin. Two divergently conceptual Symphonies were performed with each composer's intent noted and explicitly revealed by Mr. Burgin and the keenly alert musicians and chorus.

Haydn's G major Symphony No. 88 was the first to be savored, its small orchestra component sparkling and tender, bucolic and joyous in turn. Intermission happily separated this "beloved symphony" from Mahler's Second. Whatever his reason for expressing the fifth movement in words and strictly juxtaposed orchestration, (he has been accused of imitating Beethoven's Ninth) it was to our delighted edification and pleasure that it was performed. Eunice Alberts, former student at the Music Center, used her fine contralto with grand and sensitive style. Nancy Carr, as the solo soprano was effectively moving. The whole work enkindled a seldom experienced mood of excitement, both hushed and expectant, and finally realized.

Whether the recent telecast from Tanglewood by the "Today" program, was responsible for the influx of 13,602 auditors on Saturday evening, or the presence of Leonard Bernstein as conductor, can hardly be determined. Odds lean to Mr. Bernstein, a television personality himself, and a devastatingly active director.

After requesting the audience to stand in silence with bowed heads for a few moments in memory of Mr. Koussevitsky, Bernstein started the concert. From the opening Adagietto movement from "Symphony for Classical Orchestra" by Harold Shapero, the accent was on the volatile leader. His dynamic gyrations are compelling (and also distracting), but he seems to know his score, and the seasoned players have long known theirs, so the results are usually sound, and kinesthetically pretty exhausting.

It is difficult to feel a healthy rapport between Mr. Bernstein and the musicians, in spite of seemingly lucid and incessant indications. His youthful figure remains apart, more attuned to the audience.

Stravinsky's stunning Symphony of Psalms, commissioned for the 50th anniversary of the Boston Symphony, by the Orchestra and Mr. Koussevitsky, marked the end of the first section. Written for wind, brass, bass strings and percussion, with piano, there were many stirring and powerful moments in the contrapuntal orchestral and choral exposition. The Latin text was unrecognizable, perhaps intentionally, but the voices of the Berkshire Festival Chorus were strong and controlled. Mr. Bernstein brought Hugh Ross onstage to share in the prolonged applause.

A galloping tempo marked Tschaikowsky's Fifth in the third movement and resultant mixed-up winds in the fourth. Staccato was impossible, as were some of the runs, for clear execution. A soaring climax, pulled out of endless Bernstein's store of energy, brought cheers and mad applause from the entranced audience, in no apparent hurry to leave.

Sunday's concert also marked the orchestra's 26th anniversary of its first concert for the Berkshire Festival, (its third season). In an ostensibly inspired mood, Charles Munch conducted Hanson's "Elegy for My Friend Serge Koussevitsky," Honegger's First Symphony and Beethoven's Third.

The Elegy, composed for the 75th anniversary of the orchestra, is deceptively bland at first with a lovely melody heard throughout in various guises. As the dissonance commences, hackles rise, but as the development progresses to a high pitch of cacophony, senses are smoothed, soothed. A piannissimo ending found everyone hushed and quite moved.

Honegger' First is a favorite symphony, a marvelous first movement its themes at "sixes and sevens," full of tearing sounds, an Adagio, oddly romantic, with a Presto unlike any other, dominated by the winds and brass.

Still in warm accord with his players, Mr. Munch and the orchestra sailed through the "Eroica," with some slight pitch variances by the winds, but plenty of verve and heroic sounds. One must admit, though, in truth, it was a bit dull after the Honegger, so attached has one become to the boundless spectrum of tone color employed by the contemporary composers.

M deR B

Music Review

Burgin Triumph at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS ago, lacking one day (Aug. 13, 1938), the Boston Symphony Orchestra made its debut at a Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the third. Happily it has become a permanent feature of that institution.

Its conductor on that eventful occasion was Serge Koussevitzky. From a one-week, three-concert schedule it has expended to a seven-week, multi-winged venture, in the main because of the inspiration, vision and courage of the late, the great conductor. This week's concerts at Tanglewood are being dedicated to his memory, and the programs are being divided between one of his most valuable collaborators, his concertmaster and associate conductor Richard Burgin, his famous pupil, Leonard Bernstein, and his distintinguished successor, Charles Munch. Last night Burgin was in command.

* * *

THE PROGRAM consisted of two symphonies: the Haydn G Major, No. 88, and the second of Gustav Mahler. In size and scope Burgin could not have gone to more divergent extremes. Haydn, gay and bright, pithy, transparent and simple; Mahler, troubled and involved, lengthy and sometimes restless, breaking away from the customary four-movement plan to a many-mooded opus calling for a vastly expanded orchestra and vocal soloists and chorus.

This Haydn was a favorite of Koussevitzky. We can still recall how he reveled in the heavy-booted third movement which Haydn called a minuet, but which was really more a lusty peasant dance, proceeding in the trio to another typical folk tune with a bag-pipey drone sustained uniformly in the violas. Burgin sensed the piquant daintiness of the first movement and the overall euphoric mood. The opening chords of the introduction had a resonance the orchestra has rarely surpassed, and the song of the largo was unalloyed bliss.

Haydn asks for a small orchestra, a flute, a couple each of oboes, bassoons, horns, trumpets and tympani. Mahler's instrumentation requires multiplied personnel in every section and fortified concentration in many individual desks.

Richard Burgin

* * *

MAHLER STRAYED into opera but slightly, and unsuccessfully, but his symphonies are opera in everything but costumes, scenery and action. There is an underlying force in these, his larger works, a compulsion and an aspiration for all that is lofty and paramount. He lays siege to his goal with an insistence and zeal that prompts him to leave no avenue unexplored. The result is that there are a great many unpredictable changes of pace and character within a single page. Mahler's detractors have pointed out that his music does not pursue a straight line. His supporters show how this is one of the features of his greatness.

But who could write a more delightful intermezzo (it isn't really a scherzo) than the second movement of this very symphony. He doesn't call on his full forces here, and he is so afraid that the conductor will not carry out his wishes that he has interspersed cautionary comments: "don't hurry," "comfortable," "don't drag," "relax," "steady," like signposts along a hazardous route.

* * *

BURGIN MADE the introduction an earnest and serious expression in accord with Mahler's wishes. The voices do not enter until the fourth movement. At this point last night's contralto soloist, Eunice Alberts, reached superb vocal and interpretive heights in the phrase "Man is in distress." Mahler never allows the voice here to depart from the ominous understated mood, and he writes with monastic severity for the accompanying orchestra. It is only in the ensuing and final long movement that he breaks out in extravagent musical splendor.

Burgin attained a triumph in his coherent command of this draining and exhausting movement. He realized the sublimity of Mahler's cosmic dimensions and himself reached an exhaulted expression of this overwhelming music.

* * *

THE FESTIVAL chorus had been trained by Alfred Nash Patterson and their initial a capella mysterious verse of the "Resurrection" was stunningly restraint, especially in its juxtaposition after the bird-free flights of the flutes' cadenza.

The soprano solo, sung by Nancy Carr, emerges from the ensuing chorus, still in the quietest hush, where she had been enjoined not to allow herself to be distinguished above the other voices. There was sincerity in the simple lines allotted her and her easy voice made the lines deeply effective.

But the evening was Burgin's. He made the music heroic, and the orchestra played and the voices sang for him with their utmost competence. This was a great and moving musical experience and one that will not be forgotten easily by anyone in the audience who was as affected as this reviewer.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 618,802 S. 812,836
AUG 14 1961

AT TANGLEWOOD

A Fitting Tribute

By MILES KASTENDIECK

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass., Aug. 14.—All three concerts of the Berkshire Festival weekend paid tribute to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky, who died a decade ago.

Charles Munch conducted yesterday's program, Leonard Bernstein returned just for Saturday's concert, and Richard Burgin opened the memorial series on Friday.

Each program recalled Dr. Koussevitzky's close association with certain works.

Howard Hanson's beautiful "Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky" set the tone of yesterday's concert. He had composed it for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony and was present to hear it again yesterday.

It was most fitting for an occasion that also marked the 26th anniversary of the first Boston Symphony concert in the Berkshires, conducted, of course, by Dr. Koussevitzky.

Key to Honegger

Honegger's Symphony No. 1, commissioned by Dr. Koussevitzky for the orchestra's 50th anniversary and given its premiere in Boston in 1931, reminded listeners of the conductor's promotion of contemporary music. Heard 30 years later, it provides the key to Mr. Honegger's outstanding position among his contemporaries, for the stamp of individuality is unmistakable.

Noted for his "locomotive style," Mr. Honegger caught the rhythmic impulse of the century in this first symphony. It dominates the first and third movements, working up to almost carnival spirit in the "hurrah" element of the finale.

The adagio gives some insight into Mr. Honegger's feeling for melody, but the inspired coda of the last movement has a magical quality that only a true artist creates. The work was most sympathetically played under Mr. Munch's direction.

A staple of the repertory, Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, completed this program just as Tchaikovsky's 5th literally wound up the Saturday concert.

Record Audience

Mr. Bernstein had chosen Shapero's "Adagietto" and Stravinsky's Symphony of Psalms for their special association with Dr. Koussevitzky. The former was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation during his lifetime, the latter for the orchestra's 50th anniversary.

The return of Dr. Koussevitzky's pupil in the first year of the Berkshire Music Center to the scene of his formative period became an occasion in itself. The largest crowd of the festival gathered — some 13,602 persons.

An associate conductor and concertmaster of the orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky, Mr. Burgin scheduled Haydn's Symphony No. 88, favorite of the conductor, and Mahler's Second Symphony, subtitled "Resurrection." It It was redolent with meaning and gesture, worth much more appreciation than indicated by the small audience attending.

It was Dr. Koussevitzky's zeal that gave the Berkshire Festival the impetus to grow year after year. Tanglewood became a symbol of his idealism as well as his close personal affiliation with everything that happened at the Berkshire Music Center, which was the realization of his fondest dream.

A decade after his death this memorial weekend brought a host of memories as well as formal recognition of his great contribution to the musical life of this country. The programs told only a part of the story, but the occasion was notably appropriate and gained significance as it unfolded.

175

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
AUG 14 1961

Koussevitzky Honored at Tanglewood-

Burgin, Bernstein, Munch Offer Absorbing Programs

By Louis Chapin

Lenox, Mass.

Three conductors have brought to Tanglewood audiences, this weekend, their tributes to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky. The first was most characteristically his colleague, and brought, above all, warmth of heart; the second was his pupil, and brought brilliance; the third was his successor, and brought wisdom. The three of them programing a composite portrait of themselves, their composers, and the man they honored, put together a distinctly rich weekend.

The colleague, who conducted on Friday night, was Richard Burgin, and his composers were Haydn and Mahler—two Viennese a century apart. Mr. Burgin grasped the older master's Symphony No. 88 in both his hands, and packed its limber energies and graces into a full-bodied reading.

He turned then from Haydn's compact abundance to Mahler's profuse abundance, and the variegated panorama of the "Resurrection" Symphony (No. 2 in C minor) was unrolled before us. The lights and darks of the first three movements took their deliberate, loose-jointed course, with moments of genuine delight, but the full consequences of this work came into view with the vocal parts of the last two movements.

Eunice Alberts dedicated herself with lovely results to the lucidity of the contralto song "Urlicht" (Primal Light); her colors were matched by equally sensitive singing from the chorus, trained in their ample sonorities by Alfred Nash Patterson, and from Nancy Carr, whose soprano was spun, first of all, out of the choral tone.

The conclusion was one of sublime unanimity, with every element responding to Mr. Burgin's exhilarated direction and to the poet Klopstock's vision:

You will rise again, yes, rise again, my heart, in a moment.
Though stricken, borne aloft —to God!

* * *

The pupil, who drew an audience of over 13,000 on Saturday night, was Leonard Bernstein, present conductor of the New York Philharmonic and former Tanglewood student and faculty member. Mr. Bernstein opened his program with Harold Shapero's lyrical and lilting Adagietto from the Symphony for Classical Orchestra, and the composer was present to acknowledge the applause for his deftly orchestrated work.

The Tanglewood Chorus then returned to join an orchestra minus upper strings and plus two pianos for a striking performance of Stravinsky's "Symphonie de Psaumes." The words of self-deprecation and Deific praise are communicatively bound within the composer's tight style of this time (1930) as well as within the Latin language. Mr. Bernstein hammered at the enameled Byzantine surfaces of this work, and was met by its almost savage energies, evoking some of the sounds of Mussorgsky's Russia. He also made the most of its emergent warmths.

But the Russian whom most of this huge audience had come to hear was Tchaikovsky, and Mr. Bernstein, in the Fifth Symphony, gave his listeners exactly what they wanted. It was total Tschaikovsky teamed with total Bernstein, directed where we were most likely to feel it—to the outward ear and the solar plexus. It fulminated, lamented, grunted, exulted, and whipped its last movement lengths into a dizzy whirr of almost unbearable brilliance. It proved all concerned (including the composer) to be capable of extraordinary performance, and it proved little else. The restrained poetry of Shapero's Adagietto was a long way away.

* * *

The successor, on Sunday afternoon, was of course Charles Munch. He presented the most specific musical tribute, in Howard Hanson's Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky, written for the orchestra's 75th anniversary. Its tonal depths and melodic contours had every reason to be at home here, and Dr. Munch recognized them with his own wisdom and dignity. Dr. Hanson, too, was present to receive an audience's thanks.

At the center of the program was Honegger's First Symphony, with crisp-colored Gallic vitality quite congenial to one facet of its conductor. The closing measures of elegiac contemplation might almost have come as atonement for impudence in other parts of the symphony.

The last word was left for Beethoven. His "Eroica" Symphony was given an uncrowded performance, and allowed to speak for its own considerable self. For all of countless previous hearings, a notable feature of his tribute to heroism came newly to light: Beethoven became so interested in the slow hymn-variation of his last-movement theme that its quality permeated most of his conclusion.

It left us, also, with a fresh conviction that the Boston Symphony, during recent times, has been blessed with two different but splendid conductors.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 92,860
AUG 14 1961

Lenox Music Dedicated To Koussevitzky

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — The three weekend concerts at Tanglewood were dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky, who conducted the Boston Symphony for 25 years and played a major role in establishing and developing the Berkshire Festival and Music Center.

The weekend highlighted the Festival chorus, also soloists and conductors developed by Koussevitzky or closely associated with him for many years. The works programmed were favorites of Koussevitzky and in some cases commissioned during his tenure.

The results were mixed, two concerts drawing rather small audiences, while Saturday brought a near-record throng of 13,602 to see Leonard Bernstein and hear the wondrous results of his strenuous conducting.

The Friday concert, under the baton of Richard Burgin, present associate conductor and longtime assistant to Koussevitzky, achieved effective contrasts. It opened with the Haydn Symphony No. 88, followed by the Mahler "Resurrection" Symphony with Nancy Carr, soprano, Eunice Alberts (Tanglewood alumna), contralto, and the chorus prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson.

Composer Attends

Howard Hanson unexpectedly attended the concert yesterday, conducted by Charles Munch, to hear his "Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky." The Honegger Symphony No. 1, also heard Sunday, was commissioned for the 50th anniversary of the Boston Symphony in 1931, and the Beethven Third Symphony ("Eroica") was also a favorite of the late maestro.

Leonard Bernstein opened the Saturday concert by motioning the vast audience to its feet, in silent tribute to the man who taught young Bernstein the details of conducting at Tanglewood in 1940, and did much to bring him to public notice.

Harold Shapero, a native of Lynn and one-time Berkshire student, took a bow after the playing of the Adagietto from his "Symphony for Classical Orchestra," commissioned in 1947 by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. Bernstein approached this admirable music in a mood of tenderness, emphasizing its persuasive, soft, insistent qualities, leading to occasional stressed climaxes.

Elegiac Mood

Many moments of gentleness maintained an elegiac mood in the Stravinsky "Symphony of Psalms," in which the 100-voice chorus prepared by Hugh Ross did splendid work. The orchestral forces were novel, with an absence of all the upper strings, and flutists sitting where the violinists usually are. The resulting colors, sometimes barbaric, were always suggestive of Hebrew religious pageantry. In the "Leudate" section, with a virtuoso orchestra and the wonderfully flexible chorus, Bernstein built up an energetic dance, full of bright colors and complex beats.

After intermission, Bernstein began to really gesticulate, and drew from the Bostonians such a performance of the Tchaikovsky Fifth as I had never heard before. The dramatic sequences of the opening movement were tossed at the audience in rapid succession, with such alert pacing that nowhere did there seem to be a weakness in the composer's canvas. The famous "Andante cantabile" avoided triteness and mawkishness, and sang with the greatest variety and charm.

The Waltz of the third movement began delightfully but ended with a glimpse of the feet of clay inherent in this music. Not even Bernstein could make every bit of this symphony grand, but the Finale soon regained the magic charm, and its conclusion was followed by such a series of recalls of the conductor as even Tanglewood has seldom witnessed.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Town Times
OAKVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,450
AUG 17 1961

GARY GRAFFMAN, pianist, is to be soloist with Pierre Monteux and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival concert Saturday, Aug. 19, at 8:30 p.m. Mr. Graffman will be heard in a performance of Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2678, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Town Crier
WESTPORT, Conn.
Bi-Weekly Circ. 6,005
AUG 20 1961

Festival Closes . . .

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's seven-week Berkshire Festival closes today, Aug. 20, at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. For the final concert of the 1961 Festival, Charles Munch will conduct a performance of "Romeo and Juliet" by Hector Berlioz.

His guests in this performance will be Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor, and Donald Gramm, bass, plus the Festival Chorus which will be augmented by the University of Montreal Chorus.

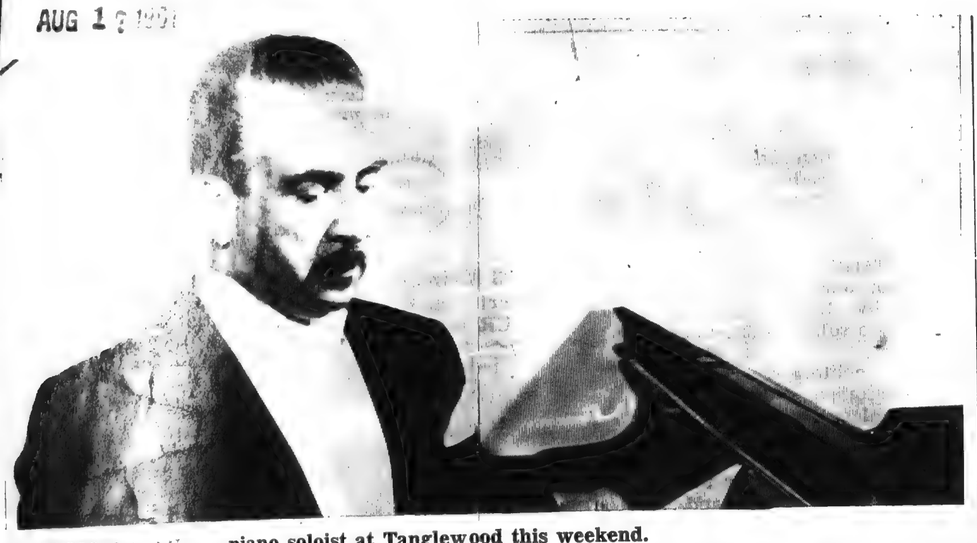
The 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will be extend-

(Continued on Page 15)

Seventh Week - Aug. 14-20

176

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,498
AUG 1 ? 1961



CLAUDIO A... . . . piano soloist at Tanglewood this weekend.

Tanglewood Programs Final Weekend

Charles Munch will conduct the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon (Aug. 20). For the last concert of his penultimate season as the Orchestra's Music Director, Doctor Munch has chosen Hector Berlioz' Dramatic Symphony Romeo and Juliet.

At this performance his guests will be contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm plus the Festival Chorus (prepared by Hugh Ross, Alfred Nash Patterson and Willis Beckett). Doctor Munch has invited the fifty members of the University of Montreal Chorus to join the Festival Chorus for this performance; the Montreal Chorus has been prepared by its director, Fernand Graton, who is a former student of both choral conducting and orchestral conducting at the Berkshire Music Center.

Pierre Monteux will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Saturday evening (August 19, 8:30) with pianist Gary Graffman as his guest. Mr. Graffman will be soloist in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2. The remainder of the program will consist of the Suite from Petrouchka by Stravinsky and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

At Tanglewood today (August 17) the students of the Berkshire Music Center will participate in several programs to benefit the Berkshire Music Center's scholarship funds. The Gala Evening, for which the grounds will be opened at 3:30 p.m., will include performances by students from every department of the school.

Boris Golsovsky's Opera Department will present a program of one-act operas in the Tanglewood Theatre.

The final event of the evening will be a concert by the student orchestra in the Music Shed.

JOLIET, ILL.
HERALD-NEWS
D 34,555 S. 35,46[illegible]
AUG 24 1961

Concert Pianist Has Busy Life

By DAVE M'INTYRE
Copley News Service

A plane to catch, another hotel room waiting at the end of a taxi ride, a different stage, an unfamiliar piano — these are all part of the life of the concert soloist, and they can be trying.

There are compensations, of course, such as the new and unusual places to see, interesting people to meet, and the challenges set up by every concert. The trick, says Gary Graffman, is in concentrating on the benefits and accepting the handicaps with as little fuss as possible.

Now 32, Graffman has been a leading light on the concert circuit ever since he won the Leventritt Prize in 1949. This is one of the most demanding tests in the field of music. It is only awarded when an aspiring pianist meets extremely exacting standards. Hence, the holder of Leventritt honors is in immediate demand.

Graffman has performed in every major city of the world, with one exception, Moscow. And a possible appearance there is, he says, "in the talking stage."

Should this happen, it will be a very pleasant boost to this family pride, for Graffman's father was forced to flee Russia during the revolution of 1917, and Gary would not mind at all showing them what they missed.

At a concert in Tanglewood, Mass., he performed for an audience of 12,500.

"I should have been nervous, but I wasn't," he said. "They didn't tell me how many were there until just before I went on stage. It was also the first time I had played with Monteux, which should have made me more nervous." (Pierre Monteux is one of the world's outstanding conductors.)

"It was the just one of the good nights," Graffman added. "Some times you can get nervous for no reason at all. At other times everything goes exactly right. And this was one of them."

Before the Tangelwood date, Graffman had had two months rest at a villa in the French Reviera, but now his busy season begins. He returns to Europe early in September for two months of concerts, then will tour the United States until April, after which he goes to South America.

He finds audiences everywhere are about the same, eager for good music, and willing to respond when they hear it.

"This is what makes it all worthwhile," he said. "Making a record may be more profitable. It usually is, in fact, if you choose a popular work. But there's no substitute for the applause of a live audience."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955
AUG 14 1961

Munch To Conduct Romeo And Juliet At Tanglewood

Charles Munch will conduct the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon.

For the last concert of his penultimate season as the orchestra's musical director, Doctor Munch has chosen Hector Berlioz' dramatic symphony, "Romeo and Juliet."

At this performance his guests will be contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm plus the Festival Chorus.

Doctor Munch has invited the 50 members of the Univ. of Montreal Chorus to join the Festival Chorus for this performance with its director Fernand Graton, a former student of choral conducting and orchestral conducting at the Berkshire Music Center.

Pierre Monteux will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Saturday evening at 8:30 with pianist Gary Graffman as his guest. Graffman will be soloist in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2. The remainder of the program will consist of the Suite from "Petrouchka" by Stravinsky and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

At Tanglewood Thursday students of the Berkshire Music Center will participate in several programs to benefit the Berkshire Music Center's scholarship funds. The gala evening, for which the grounds will be opened at 3:30 p.m., will include performances by students from every department of the school. The final event of the evening will be a concert by the student orchestra in the Music Shed.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to the following events:

Seminar in Contemporary Music, Friday, 3:15, in the Chamber Music Hall; Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, Saturday, 3 p.m., in the Shed; and Berkshire Music Center chamber music Sunday, 10 a.m., in the Chamber Music Hall.

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
D. 121,778
AUG 22 1961

FRONT ROW

- Concert Soloist's Life Trying
- Pianist at Balboa Park Bowl
- Performer Much in Demand

By DAVE McINTYRE
EVENING TRIBUNE Entertainment Editor

A plane to catch, another hotel room waiting at the end of a taxi ride, a different stage, an unfamiliar piano—these are all part of the daily life of the concert soloist, and they can be trying.

There are compensations, of course, such as the new and unusual places to see, interesting people to meet and the challenges set up by every concert. The trick, says Gary Graffman, is in concentrating on the benefits and accepting the handicaps with as little fuss as possible.

Graffman will be at the piano in Balboa Park Bowl tonight, performing for the first time with the San Diego Symphony Orchestra. He has been here previously with the Los Angeles Philharmonic, but until yesterday afternoon he had not met Earl Bernard Murray, our conductor, nor had he ever seen the amphitheater in the park. He said he was looking forward to both.

Graffman, 32, has been a leading light on the concert circuit ever since he won the Leventritt Prize in 1949. This is one of the most demanding tests in the field of music.

Graffman has performed in every major city of the world, with one exception, Moscow. And a possible appearance there is, he says, "in the talking stage."

Should this happen, it will be a very pleasant boost to his family pride, for Graffman's father was forced to flee Russia during the revolution of 1917, and Gary wouldn't mind at all showing them what they have missed.

His appearance tonight follows another outdoor date, at Tanglewood, Mass., where he performed for an audience of 12,500.

"I should have been nervous, but I wasn't," he said. "They didn't tell me how many were there until just before I went on stage. It was also the first time I had played with Monteux, which should have made me more nervous." (Pierre Monteux, one of the world's outstanding conductors, was Murray's teacher in San Francisco.)

"It was just one of the good nights," Graffman added. "Sometimes you can get nervous for no reason at all. At other times everything goes exactly right. And this was one of them."

Before the Tanglewood date, Graffman had had two months rest at a villa in the French Riviera, but now his busy season begins. He returns to Europe early in September for two months of concerts, then will tour the United States until April, after which he goes to South America.

He finds that audiences everywhere are eager for good music and willing to respond when they hear it.

"This is what makes it all worthwhile," he said. "Making a record may be more profitable. It usually is, in fact, if you choose a popular work. But there's no substitute for the applause of a live audience."

That's what keeps artists like Graffman on the go.

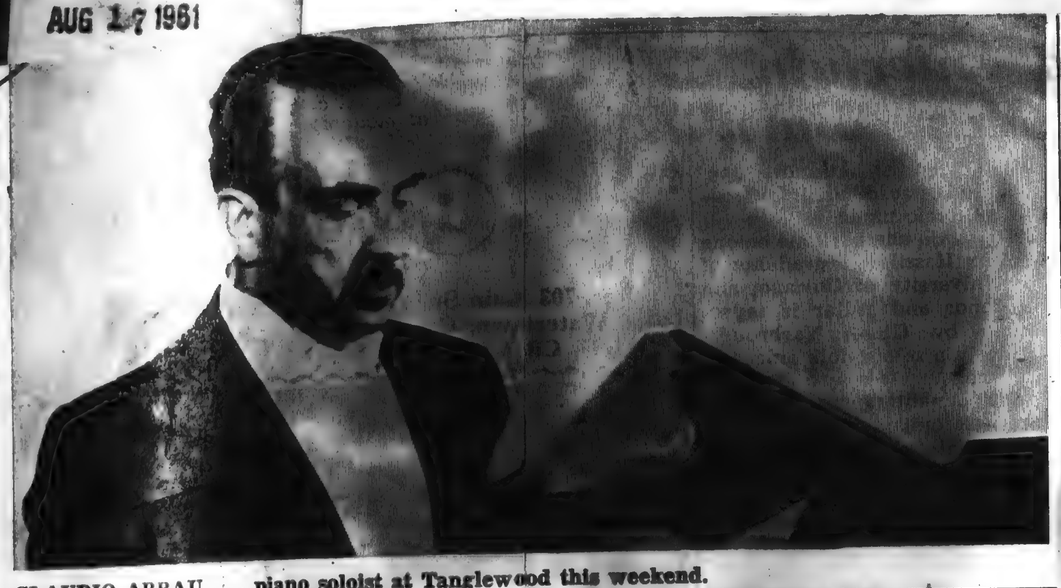
New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783
AUG 17 1961

At Tanglewood

FLORENCE KOPLEFF, contralto, will appear at the final Berkshire Festival concert Sunday in Berlioz' Romeo and Juliettte.

Amusements

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,498
AUG 17 1961



CLAUDIO ARRAU . . . piano soloist at Tanglewood this weekend.

Tanglewood Programs Final Weekend

Charles Munch will conduct the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon (Aug. 20). For the last concert of his penultimate season as the Orchestra's Music Director, Doctor Munch has chosen Hector Berlioz' Dramatic Symphony Romeo and Juliet.

At this performance his guests will be contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm plus the Festival Chorus (prepared by Hugh Ross, Alfred Nash Patterson and Willis Beckett). Doctor Munch has invited the fifty members of the University of Montreal Chorus to join the Festival Chorus for this performance; the Montreal Chorus has been prepared by its director, Fernand Graton, who is a former student of both choral conducting and orchestral conducting at the Berkshire Music Center.

Pierre Monteux will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Saturday evening (August 19, 8:30) with pianist Gary Graffman as his guest. Mr. Graffman will be soloist in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2. The remainder of the program will consist of the Suite from Petrouchka by Stravinsky and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

At Tanglewood today (August 17) the students of the Berkshire Music Center will participate in several programs to benefit the Berkshire Music Center's scholarship funds. The Gala Evening, for which the grounds will be opened at 3:30 p.m., will include performances by students from every department of the school.

Boris Golsovsky's Opera Department will present a program of one-act operas in the Tanglewood Theatre.

The final event of the evening will be a concert by the student orchestra in the Music Shed.

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
D. 121,778
AUG 22 1961

FRONT ROW

• Concert Soloist
• Pianist at Balbo
• Performer Much i

By DAVE McINTY
EVENING TRIBUNE Entertainm

A plane to catch, another hotel [illegible] at the end of a taxi ride, a differe[illegible] un-familiar piano—these are all p[illegible] daily life of the concert soloist, and they c[illegible]ng.

There are compensations, of cou[illegible]such as the new and unusual places to see, interesting people to meet and the chall[illegible]ges set up by every concert. The trick, says Gary Graffman[illegible] is in concentrating on the benefits and acce[illegible]ng the handicaps with as little fuss as possible.

Graffman will be at the piano in Balboa Park Bowl tonight, perform[illegible] for the first time with the San Diego Symp[illegible] Orchestra. He has been here previously [illegible] the Los Angeles Philharmonic, but until [illegible]day afternoon he had not met Earl Berus[illegible]ay, our conductor, nor had he ever s[illegible] amphitheater in the park. He said he [illegible]king forward to both.

Graffman, 32, has been a leading light on the concert circuit ever since he won the Leventritt Prize in 1949. This is one of the most demanding tests in the field of music.

Graffman has performed in every major city of the world, with one exception, [illegible] a possible appearance there is, he s[illegible]lk-ing stage."

Should this happen, it will be a very pleasant boost to his family pride, for Graffman's father was forced to flee Russia during the revolution of 1917, and Gary wouldn't mind at all showing them what they have missed.

His appearance tonight follows another outdoor date, at Tanglewood, Mass., where he performed for an audience of 12,500.

"I should have been nervous, but I wasn't," he said. "They didn't tell me how many were there until just before I went on stage. It was also the first time I had played with Monteux, which should have made me more nervous." (Pierre Monteux, one of the world's outstanding conductors, was Murray's teacher in San Francisco.)

"It was just one of the good nights," Graffman added. "Sometimes you can get nervous for no reason at all. At other times everything goes exactly right. And this was one of them."

Before the Tanglewood date, Graffman had had two months rest at a villa in the French Riviera, but now his busy season begins. He returns to Europe early in September for two months of concerts, then will tour the United States until April, after which he goes to South America.

He finds that audiences everywhere are eager for good music and willing to respond when they hear it.

"This is what makes it all worthwhile," he said. "Making a record may be more profitable. It usually is, in fact, if you choose a popular work. But there's no substitute for the applause of a live audience."

That's what keeps artists like Graffman on the go.

JOLIET, ILL.
HERALD-NEWS
D. 34,555 S. 35,461
AUG 24 1961

Joliet Herald-News, Thursday, August 24, 1961—17

Concert Pianist Has Busy Life

By DAVE McINTYRE
Copley News Service

A plane to catch, another hotel room waiting at the end of a taxi ride, a different stage, an unfamiliar piano — these are all part of the life of the concert soloist, and they can be trying.

There are compensations, of course, such as the new and unusual places to see, interesting people to meet, and the challenges set up by every concert. The trick, says Gary Graffman, is in concentrating on the benefits and accepting the handicaps with as little fuss as possible.

Now 32, Graffman has been a leading light on the concert circuit ever since he won the Leventritt Prize in 1949. This is one of the most demanding tests in the field of music. It is only awarded when an aspiring pianist meets extremely exacting standards. Hence the holder of Leventritt honors is in immediate demand.

Graffman has performed in every major city of the world, with one exception, Moscow. And a possible appearance there is, he says, "in the talking stage."

Should this happen, it will be a very pleasant boost to his family pride, for Graffman's father was forced to flee Russia during the revolution of 1917, and Gary would not mind at all showing them what they missed.

At a concert in Tanglewood, Mass., he performed for an audience of 12,500.

"I should have been nervous, but I wasn't," he said. "They didn't tell me how many were there until just before I went on stage. It was also the first time I had played with Monteux, which should have made me more nervous." (Pierre Monteux is one of the world's outstanding conductors.)

"It was the just one of the good nights," Graffman added. "Sometimes you can get nervous for no reason at all. At other times everything goes exactly right. And this was one of them."

Before the Tanglewood date, Graffman had had two months rest at a villa in the French Riviera, but now his busy season begins. He returns to Europe early in September for two months of concerts, then will tour the United States until April, after which he goes to South America.

He finds that audiences everywhere are eager for good music, and willing to respond when they hear it.

"This is what makes it all worthwhile," he said. "Making a record may be more profitable. It usually is, in fact, if you choose a popular work. But there's no substitute for the applause of a live audience."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955
AUG 14 1961

Munch To Conduct Romeo And Juliet At Tanglewood

Charles Munch will conduct the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon.

For the last concert of his penultimate season as the orchestra's musical director, Doctor Munch has chosen Hector Berlioz' dramatic symphony, "Romeo and Juliet."

At this performance his guests will be contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm plus the Festival Chorus.

Doctor Munch has invited the 50 members of the Univ. of Montreal Chorus to join the Festival Chorus for this performance with its director Fernand Graton, a former student of choral conducting and orchestral conducting at the Berkshire Music Center.

Pierre Monteux will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Saturday evening at 8:30 with pianist Gary Graffman as his guest. Graffman will be soloist in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2. The remainder of the program will consist of the Suite from "Petrouchka" by Stravinsky and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

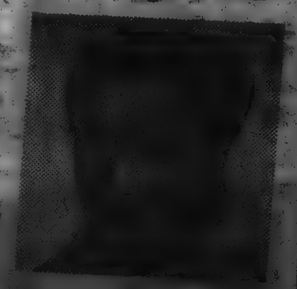
At Tanglewood Thursday students of the Berkshire Music Center will participate in several programs to benefit the Berkshire Music Center's scholarship funds. The gala evening, for which the grounds will be opened at 3:30 p.m., will include performances by students from every department of the school. The final event of the evening will be a concert by the student orchestra in the Music Shed.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to the following events:

Seminar in Contemporary Music, Friday, 3:45, in the Chamber Music Hall; Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, Saturday, 3 p.m., in the Shed; and Berkshire Music Center chamber music Sunday, 10 a.m., in the Chamber Music Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783
AUG 17 1961

At Tanglewood



FLORENCE KOPLEFF, contralto, will appear at the final Berkshire Festival concert Sunday in Berlioz' Romeo and Juliette.

177

ALBANY KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
Saturday, August 19, 1961

Tanglewood's Grand Finale Tomorrow

Munch to Direct Boston Symphony in Berlioz' 'Romeo and Juliet'

TANGLEWOOD—ends its 1961 season tomorrow in a great burst when Charles Munch conducts the huge "Romeo and Juliet" by Berlioz.

Dr. Munch will have as guests, Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor, and Donald Gramm, bass.

Berlioz did things up big, so Tanglewood's local facility, the Festival Chorus, is being augmented by the University of Montreal Chorus.

Tonight, Pierre Monteux will lead the Bostonians in works by Russian composers of different eras and styles. Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" Suite will be heard, and Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique" Symphony, plus Rachmaninoff's Second Piano Concerto with Gary Graffman as soloist.

Marlboro Winding Up

The lean days to come will be apparent shortly in the chamber music field, too.

JOHN McCOLLUM

Marlboro gives its final two concerts tonight and tomorrow afternoon. The Yale Music School at Norfolk already has completed its series.

A little closer, in Vermont, the Bennington Composers Conference is enlivening the air with performances of scores by the score or so composers present. There are concerts tonight, Wednesday and next Saturday nights, most of it new music.

Top performers from New York and elsewhere are gathered at Bennington to give the composers the best representation possible.

Just north of Bennington in Manchester, the Southern Vermont Arts Center will present Claudio Arrau, a new Vermont resident in a recital tomorrow featuring the Beethoven "Waldstein" Sonata and shorter works.

At the Music Barn in Lenox, The Limelighters sing today, the Brothers Four tomorrow and Art Blakey and His Jazz Messengers plus Slide Hampton play next Saturday night, Aug. 26.

The Saturday night hour, 8:30, represents a change from past weeks at the Barn. Saturday events have been held in the afternoon, to avoid conflict with the Boston Symphony concerts Saturday nights at Tanglewood.

Rensselaerville Benefit

Gilbert and Sullivan's "Pirates of Penzance" will be staged by an experienced New York cast Saturday, Aug. 26 at Conkling Hall in Rensselaerville as a benefit for the local library.

Tonight on the dance front, the Ten Young Danes from the Royal Ballet end their two-week run at Jacob's Pillow. The lively young company dashes back home to Denmark and immediately starts intensive work for the opening of their regular season.

The big dance extra for the week comes Tuesday, when Ted Shawn, director of Jacob's Pillow, opens his theater to the Children's Dance Theater of the University of Utah.

Virginia Tanner's first appearance with her gifted group at Jacob's Pillow in 1953 was a tremendous success. One New York critic wrote that "the children danced as if they had faith in themselves, had love for those who were seeing them . . ."

CLAUDIO ARRAU

They will perform at 3:30 and 7:30 p. m. Tuesday only.

The rest of Jacob Pillow's eighth week is filled with the choice combination of modern, ballet and ethnic dance familiar to Ted Shawn's followers.

Patricia Wilde and Edward Villela, from the New York City Ballet, will be on hand to do classis pas de deux. Alonzo Rivera, an expert student of the subject, will perform Mexican dances. Deborah Zall and Company, with Nancy Stevens, Renee Rapaport and Dan Jaramillo will give modern American works choreographed by Miss Zall.

Carlos de la Camara and his sister, Myrna, will contribute flamenco

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
AUG 17 1961

Final Weekend of Tanglewood Music

CHARLES MUNCH REHEARSES the Festival Chorus for its performance of Hector Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the final Berkshire Festival concert Sunday, Aug. 20, at 2:30 p.m.

Charles Munch will conduct the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon, Aug. 20, at 2:30 p.m. For this concert, he has chosen Hector Berlioz' Dramatic Symphony "Romeo and Juliet." At this performance his guests will be contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm plus the Festival Chorus (prepared by Hugh Ross, Alfred Nash Patterson and Willis Beckett).

Dr. Munch has also invited the fifty members of the University of Montreal Chorus to join the Festival Chorus for this performance. The Montreal Chorus has been prepared by its director, Fernand Graton, who is a former student of both choral conducting and orchestral conducting at the Berkshire Music Center.

Pierre Monteux will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Saturday evening, Aug. 19, at 8:30 p.m. with pianist Gary Graffman as his guest. Mr. Graffman will be soloist in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2. The remainder of the program will consist of the Suite from "Petrouchka" by Stravinsky and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

At the Friday evening concert Claudio Arrau will be guest in a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 4, in G major by Beethoven. At this concert Dr. Munch will also conduct Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings and "La Mer" by Debussy.

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Wednesday, August 16, 1961

Tanglewood Extends '62 Season by Week

Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra announced that the 1962 season at Tanglewood, the final year of Dr. Munch's directorship of the orchestra and the summer school of music, will be extended from seven to eight weeks, opening July 6.

The season will consist of 24 weekend concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra plus a chamber music series on Wednesday evenings and concerts by students of the Berkshire Music Center.

Tomorrow, the Gala Evening for the benefit of the Music Center scholarship fund will be presented. Every department of the school will be represented with performances of opera, a program by the Tanglewood Choir and student orchestras conducted by Dr. Munch, Eleazar de Carvalho and Aaron Copland.

Friday night in the big shed with the full orchestra conducted by Dr. Munch, works by Mendlessohn, Debussy and the piano concerto, No. 4 with Claudio Arrau as guest soloist will be offered. Saturday night's concert will be directed by Pierre Monteaux and will include works by Stravinsky, the Piano Concerto No. 2 by Rachmaninoff with Gary Graffman as soloist, concluding with the "Pathatique" Symphony by Tchaikowsky.

The final concert will be presented Sunday at 2:30 when the program will be devoted to Berlioz's "Romeo et Juliette," with three soloists and the festival chorus.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 10,542
AUG 16 1961

Symphony to Close Sunday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's seven-week Berkshire Festival will close Sunday at Tanglewood, Lenox. For the final concert of the 1961 Festival Charles Munch will conduct a performance of "Romeo and Juliet" by Hector Berlioz. His guests in this performance will be Florence Kopleff, contralto, John McCollum, tenor, and Donald Gramm, bass, plus the Festival Chorus which will be augmented by the University of Montreal Chorus.

The 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will be extended from seven to eight weeks. It will open on July 6 and will consist of twenty-four weekend concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra plus a chamber music series on Wednesday evenings and events by students of the Berkshire Music Center, the Orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood.

older, they

HACKENSACK, N.J.
RECORD
D, 98,806
AUG 12 1961

Tanglewood Dates Ending

CHARLES MUNCH will conduct the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., next Sunday afternoon. For the last concert of his penultimate season as the orchestra's music director, Munch has chosen Hector Berlioz's dramatic symphony, "Romeo and Juliet".

At this performance his guests will be contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum, and baritone Donald Gramm plus the Festival Chorus and the 50-voice University of Montreal Chorus.

Pierre Monteux will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood next Saturday at 8:30 P. M. with pianist Gary Graffman as his guest. Graffman will be soloist in Rachmaninoff's "Piano Concerto No. 2". The remainder of the program will consist of the Suite from "Petrouchka" by Stravinsky and Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 6.

Claudio Arrau will present a Liszt recital at Tanglewood Wednesday at 8:30 P. M. and he will be Munch's guest at the Friday night concert. Friday he will play the "Piano Concerto No. 4 in G Major" by Beethoven. At this concert Doctor Munch will also conduct Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings and "La Mer" by Debussy.

At Tanglewood Thursday the students of the Berkshire Music Center will participate in several programs to benefit the Berkshire Music Center's scholarship funds.

Concerts tonight and tomorrow afternoon to the late Serge Koussevitzky. Leonard Bernstein will conduct tonight at 8:30 and Munch will conduct tomorrow.

ALBANY TIMES UNION
W... 9, 1961

Around The Town

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

Last call for Tanglewood and the outstanding musical festival in the world right in Albany's back yard. The 104-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Charles Munch—and some guest conductors—are in the penultimate week, with the final series of three concerts drawing to a regretable close Sunday afternoon, August 20.

The total attendance through last Sunday afternoon, exclusive of the Danny Kaye special and that of the Boston Pops under Arthur Fiedler, adds up to just under 100,000 with another week to go. This record compares very favorably with the 1960 season in a year that, in many respects, in other lines of endeavor—horse racing, motels, restaurants etc. is below par, proving, conclusively that "Music hath charms to soothe the savage breast."

We mentioned the figure "104-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra" which boasts three members of the distaff side—Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flutist; Winifred Winograd, member of the cello section and Olivia Luetcke, harpist. Actually, last Sunday afternoon, there were 105 members of the orchestra, augmented for the occasion by Danny Kaye, who occupied a seat in the box of Gertrude Robinson Smith, the founder of the Berkshire Musical Festival. Mr. Kaye is the only honorary member of the orchestra, having added some $26,500 to the Pension Fund with his hilarious appearance a couple of weeks ago. At the conclusion of "The Pines of Rome," Mr. Munch called Danny Kaye to the podium to acknowledge the ovation accorded both "conducters."

One of the most encouraging aspects of the Tanglewood concerts is the great number of young people who attend, fugitives from the "rock 'n' roll" set. Many of the youngsters are from the nearby Summer camps, chaperoned by their men and women counselors, models of propriety and decorum. One is surprised to see how many physically handicapped people attend the concerts; some in wheel chairs, others using crutches. One young lady was guided by her Seeing Eye Dog. Apparently he was not allergic to the "Three Bs" since he made no vocal protest during the concert.

During the Sunday afternoon concerts the wall to wall carpeting greensward is preempted by as many as 8,000 music lovers who bring their blankets, their basket lunches, and their scores of the music to be performed, listening sight unseen to the works of the masters, which, due to the new acoustical treatment of the shed can be enjoyed from any part of the spacious grounds. There is only one discordant note in this arrangement: the lack of a sign carrying the admonition: "Don't Be A Litterbug."

One of the most interesting intermission safaris is the opportunity to rub elbows with the elite of Boston and the Berkshires who occupy the boxes which bisect the great shed, built in the form of a gigantic piece of pie. Gertrude Robinson Smith's center box, and that of Mrs. Koussevitzky are always filled with celebrities, not only of the business world, but stars of the concert, stage, screen and television, sartorially correct, in direct contrast to the many Bermuda shorts and, on warm days; the kicking off of shoes and sandals by the hoi polloi. Here and there one may see attractive women from the Orient, dressed in their colorful saris and members of the seccretariat of the United Nations, a veritable melting pot which speaks volumes for the future peace of the world through the common language of music.

And so we suggest that if you have always planned to attend the Tanglewood concerts, but never got around to it, arrange to be among those present—you will see innumerable Albany friends and acquaintances during the weekends' series, Friday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon, or the concluding concerts, bringing to a close the 1961 festival, Sunday afternoon, Aug. 20.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 153,116
AUG 13 1961

Final Tanglewood Week Filled with Gala Events

Charles Munch will conduct the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon (August 20). For the last concert of his penultimate season as the Orchestra's Music Director, Doctor Munch has chosen Hector Berlioz' Dramatic Symphony "Romeo and Juliet." At this performance his guests will be contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm plus the Festival Chorus (prepared by Hugh Ross, Alfred Nash Patterson and Willis Beckett). Doctor Munch has invited the 50 members of the University of Montreal Chorus to join the Festival Chorus for this performance; the Montreal chorus has been prepared by its director, Fernand Graton, who is a former student of both choral conducting and orchestral conducting at the Berkshire Music Center.

CLAUDIO ARRAU

Pierre Monteux will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Saturday evening (Aug. 19, 8:30) with pianist Gray Graffman as his guest. Graffman will be soloist in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2. The remainder of the program will consist of the Suite from "Petrouchka" by Stravinsky and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

Arrau Recital

Claudio Arrau will present a recital at Tanglewood Wednesday (August. 16, 8:30) and he will be Charles Munch's guest at the Friday concert (Aug. 18, 8:30). The recital, a Liszt sesquicentennial program, will consist of excerpts from "Annees de pelerinage," Etudes d'Exeuction Transcendante, the Ballade in B minor, No. 2, "Benediction de Dieu dans la solitude," and the Mephisto Waltz. At the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert Friday, Mr. Arrau will be guest in a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 4, in G major, by Beethoven. At this concert Doctor Munch will also conduct Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings and "LaMer" by Debussy.

At Tanglewood Thursday (Aug. 17) the students of the Berkshire Music Center will participate in several programs to benefit the Berkshire Music Center's scholarship funds. The Gala Evening, for which the grounds will be opened at 3:30 p.m., will include performances by students from every department of the school. The final event of the evening will be a concert by the student orchestra in the Music Shed. Admission to the grounds for these events is $2.50 (except box seats).

Friends of the Berkshrre Music Center are invited to the following events in the coming week: Seminar in Contemporary Music, Friday, Aug. 18, 3:15, in the Chamber Music Hall; Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, Saturday, Aug. 19, 3:00 p.m., in the Shed; and Berkshire Music Center chamber music Sunday, Aug. 20, 10:00 a.m., in the Chamber Music Hall.

The Evening Gazette Worcester

PIERRE MONTEUX
London Conducter

Monteux Conducts Tomorrow Night At Tanglewood

Pierre Monteux, celebrated 86-year-old French-born American conductor, has been named principal conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra. He will appear tomorrow night at the Tanglewood Music Shed as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for his third appearance this season. Monteux, recognized as one of the world's foremost conductors, has directed nearly 100 orchestras in Europe and the United States, including seasons with the New York Metropolitan House. Monteux's first appearance with the London orchestra will be in October. He first toured the United States in 1916-17 with the Russian Ballet, and later preceded the late Dr. Serge Koussevitsky as music director of the Boston Symphony. He retired as director of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra in 1952, and has since made numerous appearances at the Tanglewood concerts.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
AUG 15 1961

Further Extend Festival In '62

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's seven week Berkshire Festival closes Sunday at Tanglewood. For the final concert of the 1961 Festival Charles Munch will conduct a performance of "Romeo and Juliet" by Hector Berlioz. His guests in this performance will be Florence Kopleff, contralto, John McCollum, tenor, and Donald Gramm, bass, plus the Festival Chorus which will be augmented by the University of Montreal Chorus.

The 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will be extended from seven to eight weeks. It will open on July 6 and will consist of twenty four weekend concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra plus a chamber music series on Wednesday evenings and events by students of the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood.

Music

Munch and Beethoven Make Perfect Symphony

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL — Dr. Charles Munch is conducting the week-end concert at Tanglewood on Sunday omitted the wishes of Beethoven by presenting the Symphony No. 3 at the end of the program. This composition is quite long as symphonic works go, but in this case one might best describe proceedings by saying that the "last will be first," and actually the Beethoven was the afternoon's highlight.

Donald Gramm

It seems that the Boston orchestra, and especially so, with Dr. Munch on the podium, really finds the soul and structure of the music created by the greatest of symphonic writers. Whether this has been a matter of dedication or accident, it thus remains. The fusing of the two, conductor and instrumentalists, makes this definite.

It would not be fair to overlook the remaining portions of the concert. Unfortunately, the listener must be partial, but it is most difficult to honor both Beethoven and Honegger with equality. No doubt, the Symphony No. 1, of the modernist is not to be slighted, but it poses a problem as to what is coming to pass and just what part is to be enjoyed.

Hanson's Elegy for Koussevitzky had its memorable moments.

Tomorrow, the final day of the 1961 Berkshire Festival, will be highlighted by a performance of the Berlioz "Romeo and Juliette." The soloists will be Kopleff, McCollum and Gramm. The latter is the brilliant young American bass-baritone. Assisting will be the Festival Chorus.

179

CHATHAM COURIER
Thursday, August 17, 1961

TANGLEWOOD SOLOIST: Gary Graffman will be soloist with Pierre Monteaux and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival Concert on Saturday evening, August 19. He will be heard in a performance of Rachmanioff's Concerto No. 2.

Munch To Conduct Final Concert At Tanglewood

Charles Munch will conduct the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon, August 20. For the last concert of his penultimateseason as the orchestra's music director, Dr. Munch has chosen Hector Berlioz' Dramatic Symphony "Romeo and Juliet." At this performance his guests will be contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John Mc Collum and baritone Donald Gramm, plus the Festival Chorus (prepared by Hugh Ross, Alfred Nash Patterson and Willis Beckett). Doctor Munch has invited the 50 members of the University of Montreal Chorus to join the Festival Chorus for this performance; the Montreal chorus has been prepared by its director, Fernand Graton, who is a former student of both choral conducting and orchestral conducting at the Berkshire Music Center.

Pierre Monteux will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Saturday evening, August 19 at 8:30, with pianist Gary Graffman as his guest. Mr. Graffman will be soloist in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerta No .2. The remainder of the program will consist of the Suite from "Petrouchka" by Stravinsky and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Town Times
OAKVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,450
AUG 17 1961

Romeo and Juliet Slated For Final Week At Tanglewood

Charles Munch will conduct the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon, August 20. For the last concert of his penultimate season as the Orchestra's Music Director, Doctor Munch has chosen Hector Berlioz' Dramatic Symphony "Romeo and Juliet". At this performance his guests will be contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm plus the Festival Chorus, prepared by Hugh Ross, Alfred Nash Patterson and Willis Beckett. Doctor Munch has invited the 50 members of the University of Montreal Chorus to join the Festival Chorus for this performance. The Montreal chorus has been prepared by its director, Fernand Graton, who is a former student of both choral conducting and orchestral conducting at the Berkshire Music Center.

Pierre Monteux will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Saturday evening, August 19, at 8:30, with pianist Gary Graffman as his guest. Mr. Graffman will be soloist in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2. The remainder of the program will consist of the Suite from "Petrouchka" by Stravinsky and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

Claudio Arrau, who presented a recital at Tanglewood Wednesday will be Charles Munch's guest at the Friday concert, August 18, at 8:30 p.m. The recital, a Liszt sesquicentennial program, will consist of excerpts from "Annees de Pelerinage", Etudes d'Execution Transcendante, the Ballade in B minor, No. 2, "Benediction de Dieu dans la solitude", and the Mephisto Waltz. At the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert Friday, Mr. Arrau will be guest in a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 4, in G major, by Beethoven. At this concert Doctor Munch will also conduct Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings and "La Mer", by Debussy.

At Tanglewood today, August 17, the students of the Berkshire Music Center will participate in several programs to benefit the Berkshire Music Center's scholarship funds. The Gala Evening, for which the grounds will be opened at 3:30 p.m., will include performances by students from every department of the school. The final event of the evening will

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
AUG 16 1961

Monteux Appointed Top Conductor Of London Symphony

LONDON (AP) — At age 86, the French-born American conductor Pierre Monteux was appointed Tuesday night as principal conductor in the London Symphony Orchestra.

"His age in no way impairs his powers," said Ernest Fleishmann, general secretary of the orchestra.

"He is much younger, both in spirit and physically, than many men younger in years."

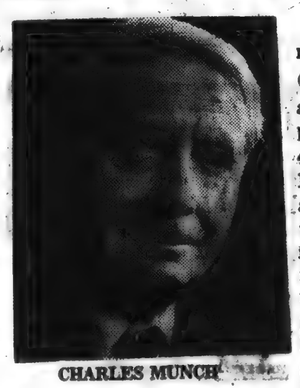
Monteux is recognized as one of the world's great conductors. He has waved the baton over nearly 100 orchestras in Europe and the United States, including seasons with the Metropolitan Opera House in New York.

(Mr. Monteux has conducted two of the Berkshire Music Festival concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, this summer as guest conductor, and will be on the podium Saturday evening when the next to-the-last concert of the 1961 season will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.)

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 105,695
AUG 13 1961

Berkshire Festival In Final Week

This is the final week at the Berkshire Music Festival which will close with next Sunday afternoon's concert by the Boston Symphony (2:30). As customary, the curtain will ring down with a choral presentation which in this instance is to be Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet." Charles Munch will conduct this great dramatic symphony in which the Festival Chorus will be augmented by some 50 members of the University of Montreal Chorus. The soloists are to be contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum, and baritone Donald Gramm.



CHARLES MUNCH

Dr. Munch will also conduct the regular Friday evening concert (8:30) with pianist Claudio Arrau as the guest artist. He will be heard in Beethoven's Concerto No. 4. The orchestral listings include Mendelssohn's Octet for strings and Debussy's "LaMer." Arrau will also give a Liszt sesquicentennial program on Wednesday evening. The great pianist is contributing his services in this all-Liszt program for the beneft of the Berkshire Music Center Scholarship fund.

Pianist Gary Graffman will perform Rachmaninoff's Concerto No. 2 as the highlight of Saturday evening's concert which will be conducted by Pierre Monteux. The Suite from "Petrouchka," by Stravinsky, and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6 will also be performed.

The festival's annual "Gala Evening" comes on Thursday when students of the festival's school, the Berkshire Music Center will present several concerts commencing at 3 p.m. At that hour Boris Goldovsky's Opera Department will present a program of one-act operas. The next event is scheduled for 6 p.m. when the Fromm Players will give a program of music by student composers. At 7 p.m., the Tanglewood Choir will be heard in a "supper concert" on the porch of the Main House and the evening will wind up with a concert by the Music Center Orchestra. A program feature will be scenes from Copland's "The Tender Land," with the composer conducting. The Festival Chorus and student soloists will participate. Dr. Munch and Eleazar de Carvalho will also share the podium, the former conducting Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" and the younger man conducting Haydn's Symphony No. 99.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
AUG 20 1961

Tanglewood Season Ends

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's seven-week Berkshire Festival closes today at Tanglewood in Lenox. For the final concert of the 1961 Festival Charles Munch will conduct a performance of "Romeo and Juliet" by Hector Berlioz His guests in this performance will be Florence Kopleff, contralto, John McCollum, tenor, and Donald Gramm, bass, plus the Festival Chorus which will be augmented by the University of Montreal Chorus.

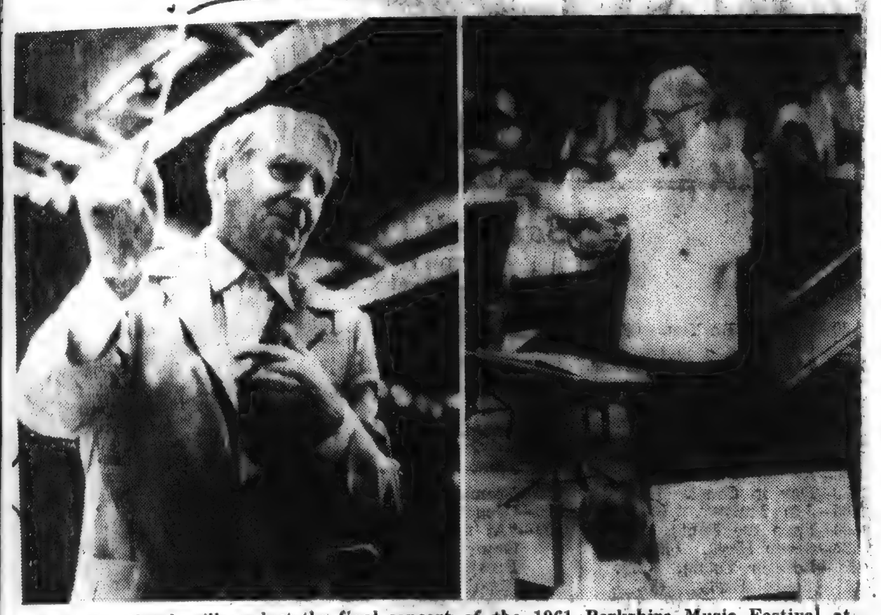
The 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will be extended from seven to eight weeks. It will open on July 6 and will consist of twenty-four weekend concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra plus a chamber music series on Wednesday evenings and events by students of the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Mercury (e)
MEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 7,207
AUG 9 1961

CHARLES MUNCH, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, rehearses the Berkshire Music Festival chorus for its performance of Hector Berlioz' "Romeo et Juliette" with the Boston Symphony to be presented at the final festival concert Sunday, Aug. 20, beginning at 2:30 p.m.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
AUG 20 1961

Tanglewood.. The Conductor



Dr. Charles Munch will conduct the final concert of the 1961 Berkshire Music Festival at 2.30 this afternoon. Dr. Munch has selected Berlioz' dramatic symphony "Romeo and Juliet."

Tanglewood... The Soloists

Soloists who will perform in "Romeo and Juliet" at Tanglewood this afternoon are, left to right, John McCollum, tenor, Donald Gramm, bass, and Florence Kopleff, contralto.

Tanglewood... The Setting

The curtain will come down on the Berkshire Music Festival in Lenox at 2.30 this afternoon. This is an aerial view of the attractive setting.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 25,933
AUG 19 1961

MUSIC

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. will conclude its summer series this weekend with concerts this evening and Sunday afternoon. Pierre Monteaux will conduct tonight's concert. Pianist Gary Graffman will perform Rachmaninoff's "Concerto No. 2." The program will also include Stravinsky's suite from "Petrouchka," and Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 6." Dr. Charles Munch will conduct the final concert at 2:30 p.m. Sunday. A choral presentation of Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" will be on the program. The Festival Chorus will be augmented by some 50 members of the University of Montreal Chorus. Soloist will include contralto, Florence Kopleff; tenor, John McCollum; and baritone, Donald Gramm.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 448,828 SAT. 173,691
AUG 17 1961

GARY GRAFFMAN is the piano soloist appearing with Pierre Monteux and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival concert on Saturday.

OSSINING, N.Y.
CITIZEN REGISTER
D. 7,489
AUG 19 1961

JOHN McCOLLUM of 48 Ganung Drive, Ossining, opera and concert tenor, will present a program of music on Thursday, Sept. 7 for the benefit of the new organ fund at St. Paul's Episcopal Church on-the-Hill. The affair will be held in the Congregation Sons of Israel auditorium and will be sponsored by the Women of St. Paul's. Mr. McCollum will sing with the Boston Symphony orchestra tomorrow at the final concert of the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 19 1961

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Courier
GT. BARRINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,564
AUG 17 1961

Concert On Sunday Closes Tanglewood

Munch To Direct Berlioz's "Romeo and Juliet"

Florence Kopleff, John McCollum and Donald Gramm, With Festival Chorus, Will Be Guests.—Pierre Monteux Conducts Saturday With Gary Graffman As Guest Pianist.

Charles Munch will conduct the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox Sunday afternoon. For the last concert of his penultimate season as the orchestra's music director, Dr. Munch has chosen Hector Berlioz's dramatic symphony "Romeo and Juliet." At this performance his guests will be contralto Florence Kopeleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm, plus the Festival Chorus, prepared by Hugh Ross, Alfred Nash Patterson and Willis Beckett. Dr. Munch has invited the 50 members of the University of Montreal Chorus to join the Festival Chorus for this performance. The Montreal chorus has been prepared by its director, Fernand Graton, who is a former student of both choral conducting and orchestral conducting at the Berkshire Music Center.

Pierre Monteux will conduct the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood Saturady evening at 8:30 with pianist Gary Graffman as his guest. Mr. Graffman will be soloist in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2. The remainder of the program will consist of the suite from "Petrouchka" by Stravinsky and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

Claudio Arrau will be Dr. Munch's guest at the Friday concert at 8:30. The recital, a Liszt sesquicentennial program, will consist of excerpts from "Annees de pelerinage," Etudes d' Execution Transcendante, the Ballade in B minor, No. 2, "Benediction de Dieu dans la solitude," and the Mephisto Waltz. At the concert tomorrow Mr. Arrau will be guest in a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 4, in G major, by Beethoven. At this concert Dr. Munch will also conduct Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings and "Le Mer" by Debussy.

At Tanglewood today the students of the Berkshire Music Center will participate in several programs to benefit the Berkshire Music Center's scholarship funds. The Gala Evening, for which the grounds will be opened at 3:30 p. m., will include performances by students from every department of the school. The final event of the evening will be a concert by the student orchestra in the Music Shed.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to the following events this week: Seminar in Contemporary Music, Friday, at 3:15, in the Chamber Music Hall; Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, Saturday, 3:00 p. m., in the Shed; and Berkshire Music Center chamber music Sunday, August 20, 10:00 a. m., in the Chamber Music Hall.

It was announced this week that the 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will be extended from seven to eight weeks. It will open on July 6 and will consist of twenty-four week end concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a chamber music series on Wednesday evenings and events by students of the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood.

Dr. Munch Leaving for France At End of Festival Tomorrow

TANGLEWOOD—When the 1961 Berkshire Festival season draws to a close tomorrow afternoon after seven weeks of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the conductor, Dr. Charles Munch will leave here immediately to catch a flight for his home in Paris, France.

Dr. Munch has been spending the summer in Richmond and will return to the United States in October to start his final season as musical director of the BSO. He will be succeeded next August, at the conclusion of the 1962 eight-week season by Eric Leinsdorf, musical director of the Metropolitan Opera Association.

Tonight Pierre Monteux, who this week was named conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra, will lead the Boston Symphony in the Music Shed with pianist Gary Graffman as his guest. Mr. Graffman will be soloist in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2. The remainder of the program will consist of the suite from "Petrouchka" by Stravinsky and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

For the final concert tomorrow afternoon at 2:30, Dr. Munch will conduct a performance of Hector Berlioz' "Romeo et Juliet." His guests in this performance will be Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor and Donald Gramm, bass, plus the Festival chorus which will be augmented by the University of Montreal chorus.

181

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

TROY TIMES RECORD
Saturday, August 19, 1961

Symphony Ends Summer Concerts At Tanglewood

Charles Munch will conduct the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood tomorrow starting at 2:30 p.m.

Doctor Munch has chosen Hector Berlioz, Dramatic Symphony "Romeo and Juliet." His guests will be contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm plus the Festival Chorus (prepared by Hugh Ross, Alfred Nash Patterson and Willis Beckett).

Doctor Munch has invited the 50 members of the University of Montreal Chorus to join the Festival Chorus for this performance.

Pierre Monteux will conduct the orchestra this evening at 8:30 p.m. with pianist Garry Graffman as his guest. Mrs. Graffman will be soloist in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2. The remainder of the program will consist of the suite from "Petrouchka" by Stravinsky and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

OSSINGING CITIZEN REGISTER
Saturday, August 19, 1961

JOHN McCOLLUM of 48 Ganung Drive, Ossining, opera and concert tenor, will present a program of music on Thursday, Sept. 7 for the benefit of the new organ fund at St. Paul's Episcopal Church on-the-Hill. The affair will be held in the Congregation Sons of Israel auditorium and will be sponsored by the Women of St. Paul's. Mr. McCollum will sing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow at the final concert of the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105

AUG 17 1961

DONALD GRAMM, bass, will appear as soloist in the Berlioz "Romeo and Juliette" for the concluding Berkshire Festival concert on Sunday, Aug. 20, at Tanglewood.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
D. 66,353

AUG 19 1961

THE END—Charles Munch leads the Boston Symphony tomorrow in the final concert of the year at Tanglewood.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263

AUG 17 1961

CHILIAN PIANIST PRESENTS LISZT IN TANGLEWOOD

Reactions Are Mixed for Chamber Concert by Claudio Arrau

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — Many composers are deversified enough in their styles so that a program of their music can be an absorbing experience. Wednesday night for the final chamber music concert at Tanglewood Claudio Arrau, the pianist from Chile, played a program of the music of Franz Liszt, the occasion being the 150th anniversary of the composer's birth.

Less Than Thrilling

We found an evening of Liszt was something less than a thrilling listening experience. This does not reflect on the pianism heard, for Arrau had all the technical requirements for this music and he is almost as much a romanticist as was Liszt.

Liszt, like many of his colleagues was impelled to write musical impressions of the places he visited on his various trips. From the wealth of sentimental melodies heard, it seemed as though the most lasting impressions were of a sentimental nature. We know that Liszt seldom traveled alone.

First we listened to three episodes from his travels in Italy, "Sonetto 123, Del Patrarca," "Jeux D'ieu a la Villa D'Este" and "Sonetto 104, Del Petrarca." Mr. Arrau worked harder than any pianist we have heard lately to get the piano to respond.

It was not until the program was half over that he succeeded. When he did, phrases become less jerky and there were singing sounds instead of all treble. From his travels in Switzerland, Liszt wrote his impressions of the "Vallee D'Obermann." It must have been quite a valley, for this piece is a spacious one, rich in sound and, of course containing sentimental melodies. It was given an admirable performance.

Called Tour de Force

It was in the transcendent etudes, Nos. 10 and 11 that the pianist was at his most brilliant. The "Etude No. 10 in F. Minor" was played with such brilliance it left more than one listener gasping and No. 11, entitled "Harmonides du Soir" was played with a sort of delicate intensity, befitting the title.

The final portion of the program was made up of the "Ballade in B Minor" and the "Benediction de Dieu Dans la Solitude." This last was Liszt at his most mystical and communicative. The "Ballade" was another tour de force; something in the grand tradition. The audience of 1440 seemed pleased with the pianist's efforts and the applause was mixed with bravos. Arrau will be heard Saturday night with the Boston Symphony conducted by Monteux in a performance of Beethoven's Fourth Piano Concerto.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

AUG 20 1961

Final Concert At Tanglewood Given Today

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's seven-week Berkshire Festival closes today at Tanglewood. For the final concert Charles Munch will conduct "Romeo and Juliet" by Hector Berlioz. The soloists will be Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor; and Donald Gramm, bass, with the Festival Chorus which will be augmented by the University of Montreal Chorus.

The 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will be extended from seven to eight weeks. It will open on July 6 and will consist of 24 week-end concerts by the Boston Symphony plus a chamber music series on Wednesday evenings and events by students of the Berkshire Music Center.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 14 1961

Cellist Mayes Back With BSO After Illness

Samuel Mayes, first cellist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was missing from his desk with the BSO at the Tanglewood concerts over the weekend because of a mild case of pneumonia. However, Mr. Mayes is improved today and will return to his place with the orchestra for the final Berkshire Festival concerts this week.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955

AUG 14 1961

Pianist Arrau At Tanglewood Twice This Week

Claudio Arrau, pianist almost as famed for his indefatigability and his trans-hemispheric tours as for his pianism, will make two appearances at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, this week.

Wednesday evening Arrau will present a recital of piano music by Franz Liszt. For this recital in the Tanglewood Theatre at 8:30, Arrau has contributed his services to benefit the Berkshire Music Center Scholarship Funds. As guest with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday evening, Arrau will be heard in the Piano Concerto No. 4 by Beethoven.

When Mr. Arrau performed at Tanglewood last summer his Berkshire Festival appearances came immediately after a four-month tour of Europe and three days before he embarked on a South American tour of 17 concerts in 22 days.

His 1961 visit to Tanglewood comes after three concerts at London's Royal Festival Hall where he performed nine concertos in three concerts and after two recitals for Pablos Casals in Puerto Rico. After his two performances at Tanglewood Mr. Arrau hopes to spend a few days of rest with his family at their newly purchased farm in Vermont before—in early September—he performs in Honolulu en route to Japan for his first extensive tour of that country.

SYRACUSE, N.Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
SUN. 202,215

JUL 2 1961

Arrau to Play Liszt Recital

Pianist Claudio Arrau will play a special Liszt sesquicentennial recital at Berkshire Music Festival this summer.

Arrau will perform Aug. 16 at the final concert in the Tanglewood Festival's chamber music series.

181

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
TROY TIMES RECORD
Saturday, August 19, 1961

Symphony Ends Summer Concerts At Tanglewood

Charles Munch will conduct the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood tomorrow starting at 2:30 p.m.

Doctor Munch will conduct Hector Berlioz, Dramatic Symphony, "Romeo and Juliet." His guests will be contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John Collum and baritone Donald Gramm, plus the Festival Chorus (prepared by Hugh Ross). Adele Nash, Patterson and William Gha[illegible]

Doctor Munch has invited the members of the University of Montreal Chorus to join the Festival Chorus for this performance.

Pierre Mayeur will conduct the orchestra this morning at 9:30 p.m. with pianist Glenn Gaffman as his guest. Mr. Gaffman will be soloist in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 2. This rendition of the program will consist of the overture from "Petrouchka" by Stravinsky and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
OSSINGING CITIZEN REGISTER
Saturday, August 19, 1961

JOHN McCOLLUM of 48 Ganung Drive, Ossining, opera and concert tenor, will present a program of music on Thursday, Sept. 7 for the benefit of the new organ fund at St. Paul's Episcopal Church on-the-Hill. The affair will be held in the Congregation Sons of Israel auditorium and will be sponsored by the Women of St. Paul's. Mr. McCollum will sing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow at the final concert of the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
AUG 17 1961

DONALD GRAMM, bass, will appear as soloist in the Berlioz "Romeo and Juliette" for the concluding Berkshire Festival concert on Sunday, Aug. 20, at Tanglewood.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
D. 66,353
AUG 19 1961

THE END—Charles Munch leads the Boston Symphony tomorrow in the final concert of the year at Tanglewood.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
AUG 17 1961

CHILIAN PIANIST PRESENTS LISZT IN TANGLEWOOD

Reactions Are Mixed for Chamber Concert by Claudio Arrau

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — Many composers are deversified enough in their styles so that a program of their music can be an absorbing experience. Wednesday night for the final chamber music concert at Tanglewood Claudio Arrau, the pianist from Chile, played a program of the music of Franz Liszt, the occasion being the 150th anniversary of the composer's birth.

Less Than Thrilling

We found an evening of Liszt was something less than a thrilling listening experience. This does not reflect on the pianism heard, for Arrau had all the technical requirements for this music and he is almost as much a romanticist as was Liszt.

Liszt, like many of his colleagues was impelled to write musical impressions of the places he visited on his various trips. From the wealth of sentimental melodies heard, it seemed as though the most lasting impressions were of a sentimental nature. We know that Liszt seldom traveled alone.

First we listened to three episodes from his travels in Italy, "Sonetto 123, Del Patrarca," "Jeux D'ieu a la Villa D'Este" and "Sonetto 104, Del Petrarca." Mr. Arrau worked harder than any pianist we have heard lately to get the piano to respond.

It was not until the program was half over that he succeeded. When he did, phrases become less jerky and there were singing sounds instead of all treble. From his travels in Switzerland, Liszt wrote his impressions of the "Vallee D'Obermann." It must have been quite a valley, for this piece is a spacious one, rich in sound and, of course containing sentimental melodies. It was given an admirable performance.

Called Tour de Force

It was in the transcendental etudes, Nos. 10 and 11 that the pianist was at his most brilliant. The "Etude No. 10 in F Minor" was played with such brilliance it left more than one listener gasping and No. 11, entitled "Harmonides du Soir" was played with a sort of delicate intensity, befitting the title.

The final portion of the program was made up of the "Ballade in B Minor" and the "Benediction de Dieu Dans la Solitude." This last was Liszt at his most mystical and communicative. The "Ballade" was another tour de force; something in the grand tradition. The audience of 1440 seemed pleased with the pianist's efforts and the applause was mixed with bravos. Arrau will be heard Saturday night with the Boston Symphony conducted by Monteux in a performance of Beethoven's Fourth Piano Concerto.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
AUG 20 1961

Final Concert At Tanglewood Given Today

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's seven-week Berkshire Festival closes today at Tanglewood. For the final concert Charles Munch will conduct "Romeo and Juliet" by Hector Berlioz. The soloists will be Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor; and Donald Gramm, bass, with the Festival Chorus which will be augmented by the University of Montreal Chorus.

The 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will be extended from seven to eight weeks. It will open on July 6 and will consist of 24 week-end concerts by the Boston Symphony plus a chamber music series on Wednesday evenings and events by students of the Berkshire Music Center.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 14 1961

Cellist Mayes Back With BSO After Illness

Samuel Mayes, first cellist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was missing from his desk with the BSO at the Tanglewood concerts over the weekend because of a mild case of pneumonia. However, Mr. Mayes is improved today and will return to his place with the orchestra for the final Berkshire Festival concerts this week.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955
AUG 14 1961

Pianist Arrau At Tanglewood Twice This Week

Claudio Arrau, pianist almost as famed for his indefatigability and his trans-hemispheric tours as for his pianism, will make two appearances at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, this week.

Wednesday evening Arrau will present a recital of piano music by Franz Liszt. For this recital in the Tanglewood Theatre at 8:30, Arrau has contributed his services to benefit the Berkshire Music Center Scholarship Funds. As guest with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday evening, Arrau will be heard in the Piano Concerto No. 4 by Beethoven.

When Mr. Arrau performed at Tanglewood last summer his Berkshire Festival appearances came immediately after a four-month tour of Europe and three days before he embarked on a South American tour of 17 concerts in 23 days.

His 1961 visit to Tanglewood comes after three concerts at London's Royal Festival Hall where he performed nine concertos in three concerts and after two recitals for Pablos Casals in Puerto Rico. After his two performances at Tanglewood Mr. Arrau hopes to spend a few days of rest with his family at their newly purchased farm in Vermont before—in early September—he performs in Honolulu en route to Japan for his first extensive tour of that country.

SYRACUSE, N.Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
SUN. 202,215
JUL 2 1961

Arrau to Play Liszt Recital

Pianist Claudio Arrau will play a special Liszt sesquicentennial recital at Berkshire Music Festival this summer.

Arrau will perform Aug. 16 at the final concert in the Tanglewood Festival's chamber music series.

Theatre - Concert Hall — Tanglewood

SEVEN CONCERTS OF CHAMBER MUSIC

Wednesday Evenings at 8:30

August 16

Claudio Arrau

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
CHARLES MUNCH
Music Director

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL 1961

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
AUG 11 1961

Pianist Lists Two Concerts

Claudio Arrau, the pianist who is almost as famed for his indefatigability and his trans-hemispheric tours as he is for his pianism, will make two appearances at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood next week.

Wednesday evening Mr. Arrau will present a recital of piano music by Franz Liszt. For this recital, which will be held in the Tanglewood Theatre at 8:30, Mr. Arrau has contributed his services to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship funds. As guest with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday evening, Mr. Arrau will be heard in the Piano Concerto No. 4 by Beethoven.

When M. Arrau performed at Tanglewood last summer his Berkshire Festival appearances came immediately after a four month tour of Europe and three days before he embarked on a South American tour of 17 concerts in 22 days.

His 1961 visit to Tanglewood comes after three concerts at London's Royal Festival Hall where he performed nine concertos in three concerts and after two recitals for Pablo Casals in Puerto Rico.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SCHENECTADY UNION STAR
Monday, August 14, 1961

Liszt Concert Is Slated at Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 14 — Claudio Arrau, noted pianist, will present a Liszt sesquicentennial program at the Berkshire Music Festival, Tanglewood, Wednesday at 8:30 p.m. His program will include excerpts from "Annees de Peleri-nage," two of the "Transcendental Etudes," "Ballade No. 2," "Benediction de Dieu" and "Mephisto Waltz."

He will be the guest artist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday at 8:30 p.m. when Charles Munch will conduct. The program will include Beethoven's "Piano Concerto No. 4," Mendelssohn's "Octet for Strings" and Debussy's "La Mer."

Pianist Gary Graffman will be the guest artist Saturday at 8:30 p.m. when Pierre Monteux will conduct. He will be soloist in Rachmaninoff's "Piano Concerto No. 2." The remainder of the program will consist of the suite from Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" and Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 6."

Munch will conduct the festival's final program Sunday at 3:30 p.m. His guests for the dramatic symphony, "Romeo and Juliet," by Berlioz, will be contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm, plus the festival chorus. Munch has invited the 50 members of the University of Montreal Chorus to join the festival chorus for the performance.

Students of the Berkshire Music Center will present several programs Thursday to benefit the center's scholarship funds.

Thursday's "gala evening" will begin at 4 when members of Boris Goldovsky's opera department will present a program of one-act operas. The Fromm Players at 6 will give a concert by composers studying under the direction of Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner and Roberto Gerhard. The Tanglewood Choir will give a supper concert at 7. The Music Center orchestra will present a program at 8:30. The grounds will open at 3.

There will be a seminar in contemporary music Friday at 3:15 p.m.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 47,136
AUG 16 1961

Claudio Arrau to Present Two Tanglewood Recitals

Claudio Arrau, pianist, will make two appearances during the Berkshire Festival's final week at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

* * *

ARRAU WILL present the Liszt sesquicentennial recital in the theater today at 8:30 p.m. and will perform with the Boston Symphony under Dr. Charles Munch on Friday at 8:30 p.m.

Arrau is contributing his services for this evening's recital to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship funds. On Friday, he will be heard in the Beethoven "Piano Concerto number 4."

His program this evening includes excerpts from the Liszt "Annees de pelerinage," Etudes d'Execution Transcendante, The Ballade in B Minor, number 2, "Benediction de Dieu dans la solitude" and the "Mephisto Waltz."

* * *

ARRAU COMES to Tanglewood this year after three concerts at London's Royal Festival hall where he performed nine concertos in three concerts and after two recitals for Pablo Casals in Puerto Rico.

Following his two performances at Tanglewood, Arrau ropes to spend a few days of rest with his family at their newly purchased farm in Vermont before performing in September in Honolulu en route to Japan for his first extensive tour of that country.

CLAUDIO ARRAU
To Perform Tonight

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
AUG 23 1961

Liszt Program Closes Chamber Music Series

The seven Wednesday evening Chamber Music Concerts, held in the theatre-concert hall at Tanglewood, came to a close last week with a dazzling performance of an all-Liszt program by famed pianist Claudio Arrau. For this Liszt sesquicentennial concert, Mr. Arrau contributed his services to benefit the Berkshire Music Center Scholarship Funds.

The pianist's technical virtuosity and tonal warmth were outstanding particularly in the Jeux d'eau a la Villa d'Este from "Aannes de Pelerinage," precursor of Debussy's "Reflects dan l'eau" and Ravel's "Jeux d'eau," with the same fluidity of sound.

Brilliant chord passages marked the Ballade in B minor, a wondrous tone poem, with beautiful singing melodies and long drawn out cadences. The Benediction de Dieu was given a thoughtful and relaxed interpretation, its rhythms sparkling, the long climax most moving.

A most enthusiastic audience recalled renowned Mr. Arrau again and again. Although the program had a sameness of content, which might have been avoided with different selections, young and old agreed that Liszt, contrary to usual beliefs, affords a most satisfactory evening of piano music, displaying the instrument's qualities to the full. The artist's evident enjoyment in playing readily communicated itself to the audience, no small part of the evening's pleasure.

Noted for his transhemispheric tours and his indefatigability as well as his pianism, Mr. Arrau came to Tanglewood from three concerts at London's Royal Festival Hall where he performed nine concertos in three concerts, after two recitals for Pablo Casals in Puerto Rico.

The pianist is now spending a few days of rest with his family at their newly purchased farm in Vermont before, in early September, he performs in Honolulu en route to Japan for his first extensive tour of that country.

M. deB. B.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
AUG 14 1961

Arrau to Play At Tanglewood

Claudio Arrau will make two appearances at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood this week.

Wednesday evening at 8:30 Mr. Arrau will present a recital of piano music by Franz Liszt. For this recital Mr. Arrau has contributed his services to benefit the Berkshire Music Center Scholarship Funds. Friday evening, Mr. Arrau will be heard in the Piano Concerto No. 4 by Beethoven.

Stage Plays

Theatre - Concert Hall — Tanglewood

SEVEN CONCERTS OF CHAMBER MUSIC

Wednesday Evenings at 8:30

August 16

Claudio Arrau

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

CHARLES MUNCH
Music Director

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL 1961

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
AUG 11 1961

Pianist Lists Two Concerts

Claudio Arrau, the pianist who is almost as famed for his indefatigability and his trans-hemispheric tours as he is for his pianism, will make two appearances at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood next week.

Wednesday evening Mr. Arrau will present a recital of piano music by Franz Liszt. For this recital, which will be held in the Tanglewood Theatre at 8:30, Mr. Arrau has contributed his services to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship [illegible]. As guest with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday evening, Mr. Arrau will be heard in the Piano Concerto No. 4 by Beethoven.

When M. Arrau performed at Tanglewood last summer his Berkshire Festival appearances came immediately after a four month tour of Europe and three days before he embarked on a South American tour of 17 concerts in 22 days.

His 1961 visit to Tanglewood comes after three concerts at London's Royal Festival Hall where he performed nine concertos in three concerts and after two recitals for Pablo Casals in Puerto Rico.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SCHENECTADY UNION STAR
Monday, August 14, 1961

Liszt Concert Is Slated at Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 14 — Claudio Arrau, noted pianist, will present a Liszt sesquicentennial program at the Berkshire Music Festival, Tanglewood, Wednesday at 8:30 p.m. His program will include excerpts from "Annees de Pelerinage," two of the "Transcendental Etudes," "Ballade No. 2," "Benediction de Dieu" and "Mephisto Waltz."

He will be the guest artist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday at 8:30 p.m. when Charles Munch will conduct. The program will include Beethoven's "Piano Concerto No. 4," Mendelssohn's "Octet for Strings" and Debussy's "La Mer."

Pianist Gary Graffman will be the guest artist Saturday at 8:30 p.m. when Pierre Monteux will conduct. He will be soloist in Rachmaninoff's "Piano Concerto No. 2." The remainder of the program will consist of the suite from Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" and Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 6."

Munch will conduct the festival's final program Sunday at 8:30 p.m. His guests for the dramatic symphony, "Romeo and Juliet," by Berlioz, will be contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm, plus the festival chorus. Munch has invited the 50 members of the University of Montreal Chorus to join the festival chorus for the performance.

Students of the Berkshire Music Center will present several programs Thursday to benefit the center's scholarship funds.

Thursday's "gala evening" will begin at 4 when members of Boris Goldovsky's opera department will present a program of one-act operas. The Fromm Players at 6 will give a concert by composers studying under the direction of Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner and Roberto Gerhard. The Tanglewood Choir will give a supper concert at 7. The Music Center orchestra will present a program at 8:30. The grounds will open at 3.

There will be a seminar in contemporary music Friday at 3:15 p.m.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 47,136
AUG 16 1961

Claudio Arrau to Present Two Tanglewood Recitals

Claudio Arrau, pianist, will make two appearances during the Berkshire Festival's final week at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

* * *

ARRAU WILL present the Liszt sesquicentennial recital in the theater today at 8:30 p.m. and will perform with the Boston Symphony under Dr. Charles Munch on Friday at 8:30 p.m.

Arrau is contributing his services for this evening's recital to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship funds. On Friday, he will be heard in the Beethoven "Piano Concerto number 4."

His program this evening includes excerpts from the Liszt "Annees de pelerinage," Etudes d'Execution Transcendante, The Ballade in B Minor, number 2, "Benediction de Dieu dans la solitude" and the "Mephisto Waltz."

* * *

ARRAU COMES to Tanglewood this year after three concerts at London's Royal Festival hall where he performed nine concertos in three concerts and after two recitals for Pablo Casals in Puerto Rico.

Following his two performances at Tanglewood, Arrau hopes to spend a few days of rest with his family at their newly purchased farm in Vermont before performing in September in Honolulu en route to Japan for his first extensive tour of that country.

CLAUDIO ARRAU
To Perform Tonight

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
AUG 23 1961

Liszt Program Closes Chamber Music Series

The seven Wednesday evening Chamber Music Concerts, held in the theatre-concert hall at Tanglewood, came to a close last week with a dazzling performance of an all-Liszt program by famed pianist Claudio Arrau. For this Liszt sesquicentennial concert, Mr. Arrau contributed his services to benefit the Berkshire Music Center Scholarship Funds.

The pianist's technical virtuosity and tonal warmth were outstanding particularly in the Jeux d'eau a la Villa d'Este from "Annees de Pelerinage," precursor of Debussy's "Reflects dan l'eau" and Ravel's "Jeux d'eau," with the same fluidity of sound.

Brilliant chord passages marked the Ballade in B minor, a wondrous tone poem, with beautiful singing melodies and long drawn out cadences. The Benediction de Dieu was given a thoughtful and relaxed interpretation, its rhythms sparkling, the long climax most moving.

A most enthusiastic audience recalled renowned Mr. Arrau again and again. Although the program had a sameness of content, which might have been avoided with different selections, young and old agreed that Liszt, contrary to usual beliefs, affords a most satisfactory evening of piano music, displaying the instrument's qualities to the full. The artist's evident enjoyment in playing readily communicated itself to the audience, no small part of the evening's pleasure.

Noted for his transhemispheric tours and his indefatigability as well as his pianism, Mr. Arrau came to Tanglewood from three concerts at London's Royal Festival Hall where he performed nine concertos in three concerts, after two recitals for Pablo Casals in Puerto Rico.

The pianist is now spending a few days of rest with his family at their newly purchased farm in Vermont before, in early September, he performs in Honolulu en route to Japan for his first extensive tour of that country.

M. deB. B.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
AUG 14 1961

Arrau to Play At Tanglewood

Claudio Arrau will make two appearances at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood this week.

Wednesday evening at 8:30 Mr. Arrau will present a recital of piano music by Franz Liszt. For this recital Mr. Arrau has contributed his services to benefit the Berkshire Music Center Scholarship Funds. Friday evening, Mr. Arrau will be heard in the Piano Concerto No. 4 by Beethoven.

Stage Plays

182

THE PIANO MUSIC OF FRANZ LISZT (1811-1886)

(Performed in recognition of the 150th anniversary of his birth)

It is often remarked that Liszt in his younger years as an itinerant virtuoso wrote for the most part inconsequential show pieces for his immediate use, that it was only after establishing himself in the little principality of Weimar in 1848 that he began upon his symphonic poems and developed "thematic transformation" in his piano works as well. The later piano works plainly shows this, such as the Piano Sonata, and such outstanding pieces on Mr. Arrau's program as the Ballade in B minor with its stormy middle section (1853), the Mephisto valse of the eighteen eighties (transcribed from his orchestral piece), and the Jeux d'eau of 1877, composed at the Villa d'Este when, as an Abbé, he contemplated its fountains. This astounding bit of pre-impressionism, it should be noted, was written twenty-eight years before Debussy's Reflets dans l'eau, twenty-four before Ravel's Jeux d'eau.

And yet some of the early works have a special pristine freshness of the artist who has already found his personal style and needs only to develop and refine. Since he was an inveterate reviser, many of his so-called late piano pieces are traceable to early sketches or even to earlier published versions. In these the pre-impressionist is already pursuing his path. The Vallée d'Obermann is to be found in the Album d'un voyageur of 1836, where the young musical poet is trying to capture his impressions of scenic Switzerland in tone. This reappeared in the first of the three sets of Années de pèlerinage, this "pilgrimage" likewise devoted to his wanderings in Switzerland with the Comtesse Marie d'Agoult. The two later "Years of Pilgrimage" were devoted to Italy, and the Sonnets of Petrarch, included in them, were piano transcriptions of his three songs of 1838-1839. It was in Italy and Switzerland with the Countess Marie at his side, that he became acquainted with the great poetry of Italy, France, England, Germany, and sought to match certain inspiring lines with a tonal reflection. The Princess Carolyne von Wittgenstein, who later took the compliant Liszt under her proprietary wing at Weimar, claimed credit for having moved him to compose his Faust and Dante symphonies. But it was his earlier mistress, her literary superior, who had initiated him into the grandeur of those two great poems, as they read and discussed Goethe and Dante.

LISZT AS PIANIST

There have been many descriptions of Liszt as performer, but little that can be called dispassionate analysis. The historical importance of Liszt as the pioneer of technical brilliance is plain to all in his music, but this does not account for his extraordinary power to hypnotize any audience. There are undoubtedly virtuosos today who could match his technical sheen. This being a different age, there are none who could approach his power to sweep all hearers, to subjugate their judgment. The judgment of his pupils was for the most part clouded with adoration. Sir Charles Stanford, a sober-

SEVENTH CONCERT OF THE CHAMBER MUSIC SERIES

CLAUDIO ARRAU, Piano

program

LISZT

Années de pèlerinage (Italie)

Sonetto 123, del Petrarca

Jeux d'eau à la Villa d'Este

Sonetto 104, del Petrarca

Années de pèlerinage (Suisse)

Vallée d'Obermann (2nd Version, 1847-1852)

Deux études d'execution transcendante

No. 11, Harmonies du soir

No. 10, F minor

INTERMISSION

Ballade in B minor, No. 2 (1853)

Bénédiction de Dieu dans la solitude (1847-1852)

(from Lamartine's Harmonies poétiques et religieuses)

Mephisto valse (Scene in the Village Inn, after Lenau's Faust)

Mr. Arrau uses the Baldwin Piano

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
AUG 11 1961

Pianist Lists Two Concerts

Claudio Arrau, the pianist who is almost as famed for his indefatigability and his trans-hemispheric tours as he is for his pianism, will make two appearances at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood next week.

Wednesday evening Mr. Arrau will present a recital of piano music by Franz Liszt. For this recital, which will be held in the Tanglewood Theatre at 8:30, Mr. Arrau has contributed his services to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund. As guest soloist Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday evening, Mr. Arrau will be heard in the Piano Concerto No. 4 by Beethoven.

When M. Arrau performed at Tanglewood last summer his Berkshire Festival appearances came immediately after a four month tour of Europe and three days before he embarked on a South American tour of 17 concerts in 22 days.

His 1961 visit to Tanglewood comes after three concerts at London's Royal Festival Hall where he performed nine concertos in three concerts and after two recitals for Pablo Casals in Puerto Rico.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SCHENECTADY UNION STAR
Monday, August 14, 1961

Liszt Concert Is Slated at Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 14— Claudio Arrau, noted pianist, will present a Liszt sesquicentennial program at the Berkshire Music Festival, Tanglewood, Wednesday at 8:30 p.m. His program will include excerpts from "Annees de Pelerinage," two of the "Transcendental Etudes," "Ballade No. 2," "Benediction de Dieu" and "Mephisto Waltz."

He will be the guest artist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday at 8:30 p.m. when Charles Munch will conduct. The program will include Beethoven's "Piano Concerto No. 4," Mendelssohn's "Octet for Strings" and Debussy's "La Mer."

Pianist Gary Graffman will be the guest artist Saturday at 8:30 p.m. when Pierre Monteux will conduct. He will be soloist in Rachmaninoff's "Piano Concerto No. 2." The remainder of the program will consist of the suite from Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" and Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 6."

Munch will conduct the festival's final program Sunday at 8:30 p.m. His guests for the dramatic symphony, "Romeo and Juliet," by Berlioz, will be contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm, plus the festival chorus. Munch has invited the 50 members of the University of Montreal Chorus to join the festival chorus for the performance.

Students of the Berkshire Music Center will present several programs Thursday to benefit the center's scholarship funds.

Thursday's "gala evening" will begin at 4 when members of Boris Goldovsky's opera department will present a program of one-act operas. The Fromm Players at 6 will give a concert by composers studying under the direction of Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner and Roberto Gerhard. The Tanglewood Choir will give a supper concert at 7. The Music Center orchestra will present a program at 8:30. The grounds will open at 3.

There will be a seminar in contemporary music Friday at 3:15 p.m.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 47,136
AUG 16 1961

Claudio Arrau to Present Two Tanglewood Recitals

Claudio Arrau, pianist, will make two appearances during the Berkshire Festival's final week at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

* * *

ARRAU WILL present the Liszt sesquicentennial recital in the theater today at 8:30 p.m. and will perform with the Boston Symphony under Dr. Charles Munch on Friday at 8:30 p.m.

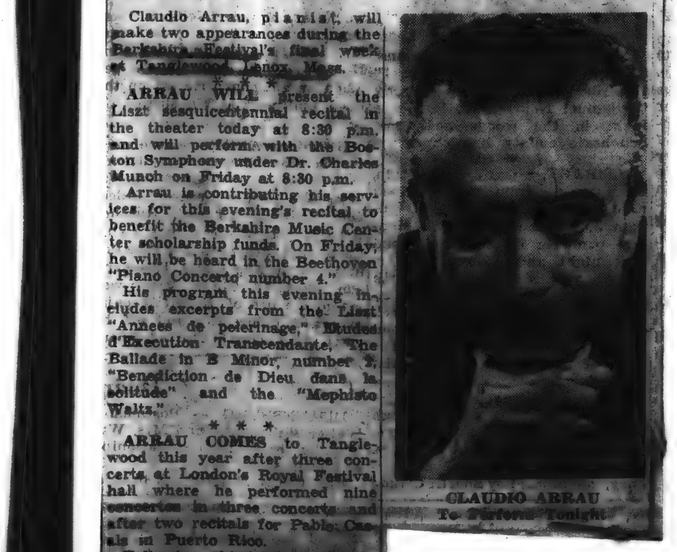
Arrau is contributing his services for this evening's recital to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship funds. On Friday, he will be heard in the Beethoven "Piano Concerto number 4."

His program this evening includes excerpts from the Liszt "Annees de pelerinage," "Etudes d'Execution Transcendante," The Ballade in B Minor, number 2, "Benediction de Dieu dans la solitude" and the "Mephisto Waltz."

* * *

ARRAU COMES to Tanglewood this year after three concerts at London's Royal Festival hall where he performed nine concertos in three concerts and after two recitals for Pablo Casals in Puerto Rico.

Following his two performances at Tanglewood, Arrau hopes to spend a few days of rest with his family at their newly purchased farm in Vermont before performing in September in Honolulu en route to Japan for his first extensive tour of that country.



CLAUDIO ARRAU
To Perform Tonight

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
AUG 23 1961

Liszt Program Closes Chamber Music Series

The seven Wednesday evening Chamber Music Concerts, held in the theatre-concert hall at Tanglewood, came to a close last week with a dazzling performance of an all-Liszt program by famed pianist Claudio Arrau. For this Liszt sesquicentennial concert, Mr. Arrau contributed his services to benefit the Berkshire Music Center Scholarship Funds.

The pianist's technical virtuosity and tonal warmth were outstanding particularly in the Jeux d'eau a la Villa d'Este from "Aannes de Pelerinage," precursor of Debussy's "Reflects dan l'eau" and Ravel's "Jeux d'eau," with the same fluidity of sound.

Brilliant chord passages marked the Ballade in B minor, a wondrous tone poem, with beautiful singing melodies and long drawn out cadences. The Benediction de Dieu was given a thoughtful and relaxed interpretation, its rhythms sparkling, the long climax most moving.

A most enthusiastic audience recalled renowned Mr. Arrau again and again. Although the program had a sameness of content, which might have been avoided with different selections, young and old agreed that Liszt, contrary to usual beliefs, affords a most satisfactory evening of piano music, displaying the instrument's qualities to the full. The artist's evident enjoyment in playing readily communicated itself to the audience, no small part of the evening's pleasure.

Noted for his transhemispheric tours and his indefatigability as well as his pianism, Mr. Arrau came to Tanglewood from three concerts at London's Royal Festival Hall where he performed nine concertos in three concerts, after two recitals for Pablo Casals in Puerto Rico.

The pianist is now spending a few days of rest with his family at their newly purchased farm in Vermont before, in early September, he performs in Honolulu en route to Japan for his first extensive tour of that country.

M. deB. B.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
AUG 14 1961

Arrau to Play At Tanglewood

Claudio Arrau will make two appearances at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood this week.

Wednesday evening at 8:30 Mr. Arrau will present a recital of piano music by Franz Liszt. For this recital Mr. Arrau has contributed his services to benefit the Berkshire Music Center Scholarship Funds. Friday evening, Mr. Arrau will be heard in the Piano Concerto No. 4 by Beethoven.

Stage Plays

minded Irishman and not a pupil, wrote: "Beauty of tone was precisely what I found to be the predominant quality both in Liszt and [Anton] Rubinstein. Liszt always played for musicians with an immovable body and a quiet, repressed dignity, reserving his acrobatic performances for audiences whom in his heart he despised."

Saint-Saëns wrote: "Power, delicacy and charm along with a rightly accented rhythm were his, in addition to an unusual warmth of feeling, impeccable precision and that gift of suggestion which creates great orators, leaders, and guides of the masses." And Robert Schumann, in 1840: "The instrument glows and flames under its master—no longer playing of a certain kind—but the manifestation of a dauntless, imperial character."

Alexander Siloti, who like Saint-Saëns was to some extent a reverential pupil, was also, like him, a reasoning man who could see music whole. He wrote in My Memories of Liszt:

"It is impossible to describe Liszt's playing. A pianist myself, I am yet unable to show how he played, or to give an idea of his playing in words. I cannot say that he had a 'big' tone; it was rather that when he played there was no sound of the instrument. He sat at the very piano which we young fellows used to break with our playing, an entirely unreliable, unequal instrument; but he would produce from it, discordant as it was, music such as no one could form any idea of without hearing it. I am a tremendous admirer of Anton Rubinstein's playing, and consider that all we living pianists are mere pigmies compared with him. He used to say, however, as I was told, that he was worth nothing as a pianist compared with Liszt."

Siloti once heard Anton Rubinstein play Beethoven's "Moonlight" Sonata, was completely carried away, and before his next lesson with the master, plunged "into a breathless description of" how wonderful Rubinstein's execution had been and that I had never heard such a fine rendering of the "Moonlight Sonata." Liszt "winced," but said nothing, according to Siloti, who then realized that he had been tactless. Liszt soon afterwards found an excuse to play the Sonata before his class. "He began to play, and I held my breath as I listened. Rubinstein had played on a beautiful Bechstein in a hall with very good acoustic properties; Liszt was playing in a little carpeted room, in which small space thirty-five to forty people were sitting, and the piano was worn out, unequal and discordant. He had only played the opening triplets, however, when I felt as if the room no longer held me, and when, after the first four bars, the G sharp came in in the right hand I was completely carried away. Not that he accentuated this G sharp; it was simply that he gave it an entirely new sound which even now, after twenty-seven years I can hear distinctly. He played the whole of the first movement, then the second; the third he only commenced, saying that he was too old and had not the physical strength for it. I then realised that I had completely forgotten having listened to Rubinstein two hours before. As a pianist he no longer existed. I make this statement deliberately with a full knowledge of what I am saying—and as my readers know my opinion of Rubinstein they may thus gain some faint idea of what Liszt was as a pianist."

J. N. B.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
AUG 11 1961

Pianist Lists Two Concerts

Claudio Arrau, the pianist who is almost as famed for his indefatigability and his trans-hemispheric tours as he is for his pianism, will make two appearances at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood next week.

Wednesday evening Mr. Arrau will present a recital of piano music by Franz Liszt. For this recital, which will be held in the Tanglewood Theatre at 8:30, Mr. Arrau has contributed his services to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship [illegible]. As guest soloist Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday evening, Mr. Arrau will be heard in the Piano Concerto No. 4 by Beethoven.

When M. Arrau performed at Tanglewood last summer his Berkshire Festival appearances came immediately after a four month tour of Europe and three days before he embarked on a South American tour of 17 concerts in 22 days.

His 1961 visit to Tanglewood comes after three concerts at London's Royal Festival Hall where he performed nine concertos in three concerts and after two recitals for Pablo Casals in Puerto Rico.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SCHENECTADY UNION STAR
Monday, August 14, 1961

Liszt Concert Is Slated at Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 14 — Claudio Arrau, noted pianist, will present a Liszt sesquicentennial program at the Berkshire Music Festival, Tanglewood, Wednesday at 8:30 p.m. His program will include excerpts from "Annees de Pelerinage," two of the "Transcendental Etudes," "Ballade No. 2," "Benediction de Dieu" and "Mephisto Waltz."

He will be the guest artist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday at 8:30 p.m. when Charles Munch will conduct. The program will include Beethoven's "Piano Concerto No. 4," Mendelssohn's "Octet for Strings" and Debussy's "La Mer."

Pianist Gary Graffman will be the guest artist Saturday at 8:30 p.m. when Pierre Monteux will conduct. He will be soloist in Rachmaninoff's "Piano Concerto No. 2." The remainder of the program will consist of the suite from Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" and Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 6."

Munch will conduct the festival's final program Sunday at 8:30 p.m. His guests for the dramatic symphony, "Romeo and Juliet," by Berlioz, will be contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm, plus the festival chorus. Munch has invited the 50 members of the University of Montreal Chorus to join the festival chorus for the performance.

Students of the Berkshire Music Center will present several programs Thursday to benefit the center's scholarship funds.

Thursday's "gala evening" will begin at 4 when members of Boris Goldovsky's opera department will present a program of one-act operas. The Fromm Players at 6 will give a concert by composers studying under the direction of Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner and Roberto Gerhard. The Tanglewood Choir will give a supper concert at 7. The Music Center orchestra will present a program at 8:30. The grounds will open at 3.

There will be a seminar in contemporary music Friday at 3:15 p.m.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 47,136
AUG 16 1961

Claudio Arrau to Present Two Tanglewood Recitals

Claudio Arrau, pianist, will make two appearances during the Berkshire Festival's final week at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

* * *

ARRAU WILL present the Liszt sesquicentennial recital in the theater today at 8:30 p.m. and will perform with the Boston Symphony under Dr. Charles Munch on Friday at 8:30 p.m.

Arrau is contributing his services for this evening's recital to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship funds. On Friday, he will be heard in the Beethoven "Piano Concerto number 4."

His program this evening includes excerpts from the Liszt "Annees de pelerinage," Etudes d'Execution Transcendante, The Ballade in B Minor, number 2, "Benediction de Dieu dans la solitude" and the "Mephisto Waltz."

* * *

ARRAU COMES to Tanglewood this year after three concerts at London's Royal Festival hall where he performed nine concertos in three concerts and after two recitals for Pablo Casals in Puerto Rico.

Following his two performances at Tanglewood, Arrau ropes to spend a few days of rest with his family at their newly purchased farm in Vermont before performing in September in Honolulu en route to Japan for his first extensive tour of that country.

CLAUDIO ARRAU
To Perform Tonight

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
AUG 23 1961

Liszt Program Closes Chamber Music Series

The seven Wednesday evening Chamber Music Concerts, held in the theatre-concert hall at Tanglewood, came to a close last week with a dazzling performance of an all-Liszt program by famed pianist Claudio Arrau. For this Liszt sesquicentennial concert, Mr. Arrau contributed his services to benefit the Berkshire Music Center Scholarship Funds.

The pianist's technical virtuosity and tonal warmth were outstanding particularly in the Jeux d'eau a la Villa d'Este from "Aannes de Pelerinage," precursor of Debussy's "Reflects dan l'eau" and Ravel's "Jeux d'eau," with the same fluidity of sound.

Brilliant chord passages marked the Ballade in B minor, a wondrous tone poem, with beautiful singing melodies and long drawn out cadences. The Benediction de Dieu was given a thoughtful and relaxed interpretation, its rhythms sparkling, the long climax most moving.

A most enthusiastic audience recalled renowned Mr. Arrau again and again. Although the program had a sameness of content, which might have been avoided with different selections, young and old agreed that Liszt, contrary to usual beliefs, affords a most satisfactory evening of piano music, displaying the instrument's qualities to the full. The artist's evident enjoyment in playing readily communicated itself to the audience, no small part of the evening's pleasure.

Noted for his transhemispheric tours and his indefatigability as well as his pianism, Mr. Arrau came to Tanglewood from three concerts at London's Royal Festival Hall where he performed nine concertos in three concerts, after two recitals for Pablo Casals in Puerto Rico.

The pianist is now spending a few days of rest with his family at their newly purchased farm in Vermont before, in early September, he performs in Honolulu en route to Japan for his first extensive tour of that country.

M. deB. B.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
AUG 14 1961

Arrau to Play At Tanglewood

Claudio Arrau will make two appearances at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood this week.

Wednesday evening at 8:30 Mr. Arrau will present a recital of piano music by Franz Liszt. For this recital Mr. Arrau has contributed his services to benefit the Berkshire Music Center Scholarship Funds. Friday evening, Mr. Arrau will be heard in the Piano Concerto No. 4 by Beethoven.

Stage Plays

183

SYRACUSE, N.Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
SUN. 202,215
AUG 13 1961

Music Notes

Arrau Stars in Final Week Of the Berkshire Festival

The final week of activities at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood begin tomorrow [redacted] composer's forum at 8:30 p.m. in the Chamber Music Hall.

Pianist Claudio Arrau visits the festival for a special Liszt Sesquicentennial recital at 8:30 p.m. Tuesday in the theater.

Thursday the traditional "Gala Evening" will be staged. The grounds open at 3:30 p.m. for performances by students from every department of the school.

The evening concludes with a concert by the student orchestra at 8:30 p.m. in the Music Shed.

A seminar in contemporary music will be presented at 3:15 p.m. Friday in the Chamber Music Hall. Arrau returns to solo with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Charles Munch at 8:30 p.m. in the shed.

An open rehearsal with the orchestra is scheduled for 10 a.m. Saturday in the shed with the same place featuring a performance by the center orchestra at 3 p.m.

Pierre Monteux takes over the podium for the 8:30 p.m. Saturday concert of music by Stravinsky, Rachmaninoff and Tschaikowsky. Pianist Gary Graffman solos.

Dr. Munch conducts the orchestra, chorus and soloists in Hector Berlioz dramatic symphony "Romeo and Juliet" at 2:30 p.m. Sunday in the shed. The center's chamber music group performs at 10 a.m. in its music hall.

* * *

[redacted]ances of "Pir-

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 26,931
AUG 16 1961

Arrau at Tanglewood Tonight For First of Two Performances

TANGLEWOOD—Claudio Arrau will make the first of two appearances at the Berkshire Festival tonight when he will present a recital of piano music by Franz Liszt. For this recital, which will be held in the theater-concert hall at 8:30, Mr. Arrau has contributed his services to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship funds.

He will be heard again Friday evening in the Music Shed, appearing as guest soloist with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, performing Beethoven's piano concerto No. 4.

When Mr. Arrau performed at Tanglewood last summer, his Berkshire Festival appearances came immediately after a four-month tour of Europe and three days before he embarked on a South American tour of 17 concerts in 22 days.

His visit to Tanglewood tonight comes after three concerts at London's Royal Festival Hall where he performed nine concertos in three concerts, and after two recitals for Pablo Casals in Puerto Rico. After his Tanglewood performance, Mr. Arrau hopes to spend a few days of rest with his family at their newly purchased farm in Vermont before leaving for Honolulu and Japan for concert tours.

Trail of Damage

C

B

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 99,973
AUG 14 1961

Claudio Arrau Will Appear at Tanglewood

Claudio Arrau, the pianist who is almost as famed for his indefatigability and his transhemispheric tours as he is for his pianism, will make two appearances at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood this week.

Wednesday night Mr. Arrau will present a recital of piano music by Franz Liszt. For this recital, which will be held in the Tanglewood Theater at 8.30, Mr. Arrau has contributed his services to benefit the Berkshire Music Center Scholarship Funds. As guest with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday evening, Mr. Arrau will be heard in the Piano Concerto No. 4 by Beethoven.

When Mr. Arrau performed at Tanglewood last summer his Berkshire Festival appearances came immediately after a four-month tour of Europe and three days before he embarked on a South American tour of 17 concerts in 22 days.

His 1961 visit to Tanglewood comes after three concerts at London's Royal Festival Hall where he performed nine concertos in three concerts and after two recitals for Pablo Casals in Puerto Rico. After his two performances at Tanglewood Mr. Arrau hopes to spend a few days of rest with his family at their newly purchased farm in Vermont before—in early September—he performs in Honolulu en route to Japan for his first extensive tour of that country.

Mr. Arrau's programs at Tanglewood:

Wednesday, Aug. 16
8.30 Theater
Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital
Annees de Pelerinage excerpts, two Etudes d'Execution Transcendante, Ballade No. 2, Benediction de Dieu, Mephisto Waltz.

Friday, Aug. 18
8.30 Shed
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Conductor: Charles Munch
Mendelssohn: Octet for Strings Debussy: La Mer
Beethoven: Piano Concerto No. 4 (Claudio Arrau, soloist).

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Circ. 10,381
AUG 15 1961

Claudio Arrau, Pianist, To Appear at Tanglewood

Claudio Arrau, the pianist, will make two appearances at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox Mass., this week.

Wednesday evening Mr. Arrau will present a recital of piano music by Franz Liszt. For this recital, which will be held in the Tanglewood Theatre at 8:30, Mr. Arrau has contributed his services to benefit the Berkshire Music Center Scholarship Funds. As guest with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday evening, Mr. Arrau will be heard in the Piano Concerto No. 4 by Beethoven.

When Mr. Arrau performed at Tanglewood last summer his Berkshire Festival appearances came immediately after a four month tour of Europe and three days before he embarked on a South American tour of 17 concerts in 22 days.

His 1961 visit to Tanglewood comes after three concerts at London's Royal Festival Hall where he performed nine concertos in three concerts and after two recitals for Pablo Casals in Puerto Rico.

After his two performances at Tanglewood Mr. Arrau hopes to spend a few days of rest with his family at their newly purchased farm in Vermont before September when he performs in Honolulu en rout to Japan for his first extensive tour of that country.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
AUG 14 1961

Arrau Will Play Twice This Week At Tanglewood

Claudio Arrau, the pianist who is almost as famed for his indefatigability and his transhemispheric tours as he is for his pianism, will make two appearances at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, this week.

Wednesday evening Mr. Arrau will present a recital of piano music by Franz Liszt. For this recital, which will be held in the Tanglewood Theater at 8:30, Mr. Arrau has contributed his services to benefit the Berkshire Music Center Scholarship Funds.

As guest with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday evening, Mr. Arrau will be heard in the Piano Concerto No. 4 by Beethoven.

When Mr. Arrau performed at Tanglewood last summer his Berkshire Festival appearances came immediately after a four-month tour of Europe and three days before he embarked on a South American tour of 17 concerts in 22 days.

His 1961 visit to Tanglewood comes after three concerts at London's Royal Festival Hall where he performed nine concertos in three concerts and after two recitals for Pablo Casals in Puerto Rico. After his two performances at Tanglewood Mr. Arrau hopes to spend a few days of rest with his family at their newly purchased farm in Vermont before—in early September—he performs in Honolulu en-route to Japan for his first extensive tour of that country.

Mr. Arrau's program of Liszt works Wednesday evening, marking the composer's sesquicentennial year, will include excerpts from "Annees de Pelerinage," two Etudes d'Execution Transcendante, the Ballade No. 2, "Benedict de Dieu" and the "Mephisto" Waltz.

B.M.C. Gala – Aug. 17-

184

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

CHARLES MUNCH
Music Director

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASSACHUSETTS

A GALA EVENING

OF THE

BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER

Charles Munch, Director

Thursday, August 17, 1961

For the Benefit of The Berkshire Music Center

BALDWIN PIANO

R.C.A. VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

AUG 16 1961

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127

AUG 14 1961

Two One-Act Operas To Open Gala Evening

Boris Goldovsky, head of the Berkshire Music Center opera department, today announced the program of two one-act operas which his students will present in the Tanglewood Theater at 4 p.m. Thursday as the first event of the Gala Evening — the benefit program for the Berkshire Music Center Scholarship Funds.

Donizetti's "Il Campanello" — "The Night Bell" — "Arlecchino" by Busoni will be performed in productions supervised by Mr. Goldovsky with assistance from Robert K. Evans, Thomas Philips, Frederic Popper, Arthur Schoep, Felix Wolfes, Paul Marantz, Peggy Donovan, Robert Larsen, Norman Womack, James Flannery, Nick Bellini and Kim Brandt.

Both are to be performed in English.

Tanglewood

Choir To Give Supper Concert At 'Gala Evening' Tomorrow

TANGLEWOOD — Hugh Ross, head of the Berkshire Music Center's choral department, has announced the program which his 50-member Tanglewood Choir will perform in a supper concert to be given on the porch of the Main House at Tanglewood tomorrow at 7 p.m. This concert will be part of the Berkshire Music Center's "Gala Evening at Tanglewood" which begins at 4 p.m. with a program of two one-act operas and concludes with a concert by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra at 8:30 p.m.

Alfred Nash Patterson, Willis W. Beckett and Dan Border have assisted Mr. Ross in preparing the choir for this concert.

The program:

"Jubilate Deo," for 8-part chorus and brass ensemble — Gabrieli
Willis W. Beckett, conductor

Trois Chansons — Debussy
Talmon Hers, conductor

"Lark" — Aaron Copland
Seymour Schonberg, conductor

"Le Chant des Oyseaux" — Janequin
Alfred Nash Patterson, William Catherwood, David Fox, Talmon Hers, and Seymour Schonberg, conductors

"I Hear a Harp," song from "Fingal" — Ossian's Brahms
for women's voices, French horn and harp
Arletta Helfrich, conductor

Three Traditional Riddles — William Bergsma
David Fox, conductor

Three Shakespeare Songs — Vaughan Williams
Hugh Ross, conductor

"Tempus Est Locundum" — Lionel Greenberg
Hugh Ross, conductor

Choral Hymn—"Glory and Triumph" for chorus and band — Berlioz
Eleasa de Carvalho, conductor

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879

AUG 19 1961

Berkshire Music Center Presents 'Gala Evening'

Tanglewood "Gala Evening, formerly known as "Tanglewood on Parade," brought a gala audience of all ages, totalling 3630, to its beautifully landscaped grounds on Thursday afternoon. Clear skies and crisp weather made picknicking enjoyable and possible, between performances by the Berkshire Music Center students, starting at four o'clock. Proceeds benefited the center's scholarship funds.

Members of Boris Goldovsky's Opera Department presented two one-act opera in the theatre-concert hall, early and late eighteenth century. The first by Donizetti, follower and contemporary of Rossini, titled "Il Campanello" wa attractively set in an apothecary's shop in Naples. Delightfully written in comique style, the singers expertly unfolded the story of a rake, Enrico, and his machinations with the shop's night bell to keep the elderly druggist, newly married, from his young bride. As Don Pistacchio, the groom, David Clatworthy, was audibly noteworthy.

Both operas were given an English text, the first by R. and A. Hilfreich, the second, "Arlecchino," by M. and B. Hilfreich. Excellent piano accompaniment was produced by Robert K. Evans and Felix Wolfes, with the musical prep- Wolfes, with the musical preparation by Maurits Sillem. A constant seeker after the greatest musical inspiration and expression, Busoni's "Harlequin" reflects an unwieldy combination of traditional and radical ideas. The cast handled their roles remarkably well with Anthony Addison in the title role quite convincing. Another tale of seduction and elopement, Harlequin cautions the audience at the beginning that the opera is "not for children" "things true and false will be shown," and if "some prove provoking," they probably are "only joking"!

In the Chamber-music hall several compositions were heard by members of the Department of Composition under instruction by Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner andRoberto Gerhard. These included a pleasing Divertimento for winds by Chilean Celso Garrido-Lecco, four Piano Variations, with the composer Wesley Fuller. at the piano. compact and clearly stated. Also heard were three Caprices for Clarinet and Piano in a capricious jazz idiom by Michael , Fink, Long Beach California. Fine performances were given by the Fromm Fellowship Players.

Around 7:00, between bites and sips, one could be diverted by the Tanglewood Choir, from the Main House porch, in purely entertaining and pleasurable selections by Gabrieli, Debussy, Brahms, Janequin, Bergsma, Copland, Greenberg and Williams. Hugh Ross, director of the Choral department was capably assitsed by student members.

At 8:30 instead of the usual student conductors, Eleazar de Carvalho, Charles Munch and Aaron Copland directed the Berkshire Center Orchestra in a pretty exciting concert. Good style and studious precision prevailed for the most part. although the Menuetto from Haydn's 99th, the symphony chosen by de Carvalho, was a bit too lyric.

Tschaikowsky's Overture Fantasy, "Romeo and Juliet," suffered somewhat from a numerical lack in the excellent full-toned string sections, overbalance by surprisingly capable brass and wind choirs. The English horn and muted violins in the famous lovers' theme were most appealing musically. Percussion was excellent, rhythmically and tonally. The students will not forget soon this revelatory experience under the stimulating and imaginative baton of Charles Munch.

For a pleasant conclusion to an enlightening and worthwhile occasion, Aaron Copland conducted concert excerpts from his strictly American opera "Tender Land." Soloists were well-chosen members of the Festival Chorus. Almost the entire second act and the finale of the first were performed, Mr. Copland stating in his opening explanatory remarks that while sequence is disconnected, it seems to symbolize his idea contained in the opera.

The listeners were warm and generous with their applause, although some were chilled by the penetratingly cool night air.

Twenty years ago the Berkshire Music Center was established through the guidance of Serge Koussevitsky, director of the Boston Symphony at that time. His idea was that young musicians would sharpen their skills and talents in an environment of professional music making, absorbing some of the exposed wisdom and idealism of the artists. It is interesting to note that 168 students received full or partial scholarship aid this year, through the Revolving Scholarship Fund, supported by gifts from Friends of the Berkshire Center. An appeal was noted in the program for more scholarship aid. The cost per student for operating the school is $625, tuition and dormitory fees for seven weeks, $460, and tuition alone for one student amounts to $220 for the seven weeks.

M deB B

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105

AUG 15 1961

Berkshire Center In Gala Evening

Charles Munch, Aaron Copland and Elzear de Carvalho will conduct the Berkshire Music Center Oarchestra at Tanglewood, Thursday at 8:30 p.m. All students at the Boston Symphony Orchesta's summer school will participate in the Gala, the income from which will ben efit the Center's schoarship funds.

At 4:00 p.m. members of Bris Goldovsky's Opera Department will present a program of oneact operas in the Tanglewood Theater. At 6:00 p.m. in the Chamber Music Hall the fromm Players will give a concert by composers studying at Tanglewood.

The Tanglewood Choir will give a supper concert from the porch of the Main House at 7:00 p.m.

B.M.C. Gala – Aug. 17-

164

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

CHARLES MUNCH
Music Director

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASSACHUSETTS

A GALA EVENING

OF THE

BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER

Charles Munch, Director

Thursday, August 17, 1961

For the Benefit of The Berkshire Music Center

BALDWIN PIANO

R.C.A. VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
AUG 19 1961

Berkshire Music Center Presents 'Gala Evening'

Tanglewood "Gala Evening," formerly known as "Tanglewood on Parade," brought a gala audience of all ages, totalling 3630, to its beautifully landscaped grounds on Thursday afternoon. Clear skies and crisp weather made picknicking" enjoyable and possible, between performances by the Berkshire Music Center students, starting at four o'clock. Proceeds benefited the center's scholarship funds.

Members of Boris Goldovsky's Opera Department presented two one-act opera in the theatre-concert hall, early and late eighteenth century. The first by Donizetti, follower and contemporary of Rossini, titled "Il Campanello" wa attractively set in an apothecary's shop in Naples. Delightfully written in comique style, the singers expertly unfolded the story of a rake, Enrico, and his machinations with the shop's night bell to keep the elderly druggist, newly married, from his young bride. As Don Pistacchio, the groom, David Clatworthy was audibly noteworthy.

Both operas were given an English text, the first by R. and A. Hilfreich, the second, "Arlecchino" by M. and B. Hilfreich. Excellent piano accompaniment was produced by Robert K. Evans and Felix Wolfes, with the musical prep-Wolfes, with the musical preparation by Maurits Sillem. A constant seeker after the greatest musical inspiration and expression Busoni's "Harlequin" reflects an unwieldy combination of traditional and radical ideas. The cast handled their roles remarkably well with Anthony Addison in the title role quite convincing. Another tale of seduction and elopement, Harlequin cautions the audience at the beginning that the opera is "not for children" "things true and false will be shown," and if "some prove provoking," they probably are "only joking"!

In the Chamber-music hall several compositions were heard by members of the Department of Composition under instruction by Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner andRoberto Gerhard. These included a pleasing Divertimento for winds by Chilean Celso Garrido-Lecco, four Piano Variations, with the composer Wesley Fuller at the piano, compact and clearly stated. Also heard were three Caprices for Clarinet and Piano in a capricious jazz idiom by Michael Fink, Long Beach California. Fine performances were given by the Fromm Fellowship Players.

Around 7:00, between bites and sips, one could be diverted by the Tanglewood Choir, from the Main House porch, in purely entertaining and pleasurable selections by Gabrieli, Debussy, Brahms, Janequin, Bergsma, Copland, Greenberg and Williams. Hugh Ross, director of the Choral department was capably assitsed by student members.

At 8:30 instead of the usual student conductors, Eleazar de Carvalho, Charles Munch and Aaron Copland directed the Berkshire Center Orchestra in a pretty exciting concert. Good style and studious precision prevailed for the most part, although the Menuetto from Haydn's 99th, the symphony chosen by de Carvalho, was a bit too lyric.

Tschaikowsky's Overture Fantasy, "Romeo and Juliet," suffered somewhat from a numerical lack in the excellent full-toned string sections, overbalance by surprisingly capable brass and wind choirs. The English horn and muted violins in the famous lovers' theme were most appealing musically. Percussion was excellent, rhythmically and tonally. The students will not forget soon this revelatory experience under the stimulating and imaginative baton of Charles Munch.

For a pleasant conclusion to an enlightening and worthwhile occasion, Aaron Copland conducted concert excerpts from his strictly American opera "Tender Land." Soloists were well-chosen members of the Festival Chorus. Almost the entire second act and the finale of the first were performed, Mr. Copland stating in his opening explanatory remarks that while sequence is disconnected, it seems to symbolize his idea contained in the opera.

The listeners were warm and generous with their applause, although some were chilled by the penetratingly cool night air.

Twenty years ago the Berkshire Music Center was established through the guidance of Serge Koussevitsky, director of the Boston Symphony at that time. His idea was that young musicians would sharpen their skills and talents in an environment of professional music making, absorbing some of the exposed wisdom and idealism of the artists. It is interesting to note that 168 students received full or partial scholarship aid this year, through the Revolving Scholarship Fund, supported by gifts from Friends of the Berkshire Center. An appeal was noted in the program for more scholarship aid. The cost per student for operating the school is $625, tuition and dormitory fees for seven weeks, $460, and tuition alone for one student amounts to $220 for the seven weeks.

M deB B

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 16 1961

Tanglewood

Choir To Give Supper Concert At 'Gala Evening' Tomorrow

TANGLEWOOD — Hugh Ross, head of the Berkshire Music Center's choral department, has announced the program which his 50-member Tanglewood Choir will perform in a supper concert to be given on the porch of the Main House at Tanglewood tomorrow at 7 p.m. This concert will be part of the Berkshire Music Center's "Gala Evening at Tanglewood" which begins at 4 p.m. with a program of two one-act operas and concludes with a concert by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra at 8:30 p.m.

Alfred Nash Patterson, Willis W. Beckett and Dan Border have assisted Mr. Ross in preparing the choir for this concert.

The program:

"Jubilate Deo," for 4-part chorus and brass ensemble — Gabrieli
Willis W. Beckett, conductor
Trois Chansons — Debussy
Talmon Hers, conductor
"Lark" — Aaron Copland
Seymour Schonberg, conductor
"Le Chant des Oyseaux" — Janequin
Alfred Nash Patterson, William Catherwood, David Fox, Talmon Hers, and Seymour Schonberg, conductors
"I Hear a Harp," song from Ossian's "Fingal" — Brahms
for women's voices, French horn and harp
Arletta Helfrich, conductor
Three Traditional Riddles — William Bergsma
David Fox, conductor
Three Shakespeare Songs — Vaughan Williams
Hugh Ross, conductor
"Tempus Est Locundum" — Lionel Greenberg
Hugh Ross, conductor
Choral Hymn—"Glory and Triumph" for chorus and band — Berlioz
Eleazar de Carvalho, conductor

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
AUG 14 1961

Two One-Act Operas To Open Gala Evening

Boris Goldovsky, head of the Berkshire Music Center opera department, today announced the program of two one-act operas which his students will present in the Tanglewood Theater at 4 p.m. Thursday as the first event of the Gala Evening — the benefit program for the Berkshire Music Center Scholarship Funds.

Donizetti's "Il Campanelle" — "The Night Bell" — "Arlecchino" by Busoni will be performed in productions supervised by Mr. Goldovsky with assistance from Robert K. Evans, Thomas Philips, Frederic Popper, Arthur Schoep, Felix Wolfes, Paul Marantz, Peggy Donovan, Robert Larsen, Norman Womack, James Flannery, Nick Bellini and Kim Brandt.

Both are to be performed in English.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
AUG 15 1961

Berkshire Center In Gala Evening

Charles Munch, Aaron Copland and Elzear de Carvalho will conduct the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra at Tanglewood, Thursday at 8:30 p.m. All students at the Boston Symphony Orchestra summer school will participate in the Gala, the income from which will benefit the Center's scholarship funds.

At 4:00 p.m. members of Boris Goldovsky's Opera Department will present a program of one-act operas in the Tanglewood Theater. At 6:00 p.m. in the Chamber Music Hall the Fromm Players will give a concert by composers studying at Tanglewood.

The Tanglewood Choir will give a supper concert from the porch of the Main House at 7.00 p.m.

B. M. C. Gala – Aug. 17-

18

A GALA EVENING AT TANGLEWOOD

Performances by the Berkshire Music Center

PROGRAMS

4:00 OPERA — THEATRE-CONCERT HALL

The Opera Department: Boris Goldovsky, assisted by Robert K. Evans, Thomas Philips, Frederic Popper, Arthur Schoep, Felix Wolfes.

IL CAMPANELLO (The Night Bell)

Opera in One Act

Text and Music by Gaetano Donizetti
English Version by R. and A. Hilfreich

Staged by Arthur Schoep
Piano Accompaniment by Robert K. Evans
Setting and Lighting by Paul Marantz

CAST

Don Annibale Pistacchio, an elderly druggist	David Clatworthy
Serafina, his bride	Jan Saxon
Madame Rosa, her mother	Joan Caplan
Enrico, a rake	Jerold Sien
Spiridione, Don Annibale's servant	James Flannery
Wedding Guests	Members of the Opera Department

The opera takes place in Naples in the eighteenth century.

Musical Preparation: Peggy Donovan, Robert Larsen
Properties: Robert Larsen, James Flannery

INTERMISSION

ARLECCHINO

Text and Music by Ferruccio Busoni
English Version by M. and B. Hilfreich

Staged by Boris Goldovsky
Piano Accompaniment by Felix Wolfes

CAST

Matteo, a tailor	Richard Golden
Cospicuo, a lay brother	Eugene Green
Bombasto, a doctor	Thomas Paul
Arlecchino, a rake	Anthony Addison
Leandro, a singer	Emary McIver
Annunziata, Matteo's wife	Betty Heidema
Colombina, Arlecchino's wife	Judi Turano
Two warriors, a carter, a donkey	Members of the Opera Department

The opera takes place in Bergamo in the eighteenth century.

Musical Preparation: Maurits Sillem

Stage Management and Costume Supervision: Norman Womack
Stage Crew: Nick Bellini, Kim Brandt

COMMITTEE FOR THE GALA EVENING

Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, Chairman

Miss Anna R. Alexandre
Mrs. Bruce Crane
Mrs. William Crane
Mrs. David Huxley
Mr. C. D. Jackson
Mrs. David B. Karrick
Mrs. Shaun Kelly
Mme. Anna de Leuchtenberg
Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller
Mrs. Thomas D. Perry, Jr.
Mrs. Bruce W. Sanborn
Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith

ORCHESTRA OF THE BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER

VIOLINS
Priscilla Brown
Jennifer Creel
H. June DeForest
Lyndl Fowler
Lawrence Franko
Masako Fujii
John Golz
Manfred Horr
Karen Jackson
Oleg Kovalenko
Donna Lohbauer
Sharon Mulligan
Vera Newman
Mary Ann Niemiec
Robert Pecci
Carol Rowles
Isidor Saslav
Martha Strongin
John Wehlan

VIOLAS
Carol Boyd
Pamela Brand
Brenton Crane
Hilary Hollis
Myrna Janzen
Lee Robert
Ronald Sabaroff

VIOLONCELLOS
William Brent
Nancy Hall
Ingrid Heim
Nanette Koch
Ann McMurray
Marianne Marshall
Hasmig Sare-Kechichian
Ronald Saunders
Michael Stoughton

BASSES
Christine Atwood
Diane Bulgarelli
Richard Cohen
George Elvin
F. James Levinson
Donald Martin
James Tranks
Richard Webster

FLUTES
Mary Bovey
Pamela Campbell
Hubert Laws
Dean Miller
Gretchen Moore

OBOES
Jane Ehrlich
Marsha Heller
Jay Light
Janice Miner

CLARINETS
Edward Avedisian
Victor Battipaglia
Herbert Geller
Craig Watjen
William Wrzesien

BASSOONS
E. Grawford Best
Janice Low
Robert Moore
Brent Rickman

FRENCH HORNS
Edward Birdwell
Edwin Black
Marilyn Bone
William Hammond
Ruth Lighty
Joseph Rinello
Mary Anne Stephens

TRUMPETS
Albert Cioffi
John DePetrillo
Carolyn Mawby
Daniel Sapochetti
James Stubbs

TROMBONES
Harold Blevins
Paul Eickmann
Richard Landry
Robert Moore
Kim Taylor

TUBA
Kenneth Faria

TIMPANI-PERCUSSION
Reginald Bonnin
Gerald Carlyss
James Fogg
Douglas Igelsrud
Karen Jackson

HARPS
Lois Brown
Sally Foster

LIBRARIAN
James Whitaker

THE TANGLEWOOD CHOIR

SOPRANOS
Sally Aaronson
Marjorie Axelrad
Roberta Basnett
Beryl Brigham
Patricia Brown
Florence Dispenza
Marion Hakewessell
Arletta Helfrich
Annette Hufendick
Hilda Kaplan
Nancy Lipman
Kathryn Tobey
Mary Violet
Pamela Whinston

ALTOS
Denise Chagnon
C. Sylvia Chapman
Rose Marie Collins
Lula Gentry
Marianne Green
Gloria Paret
Janet Pollitt
Calliope Shenas
Carol Sykes
Nancy Walz

TENORS
George Dunbar
Carl Ericson
Talmon Herz
Alan Mehlman
James Olesen
Bennett Penn
Donald Reber
Ernest Sullivan
Harold Troy
George Vincent

BARITONES
William Cameron
William Catherwood
David Fox
Chandler Gregg
Abraham Lind
Stuart Raleigh
John Rodland
Seymour Schonberg
Walter Westafer

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
AUG 19 1961

Berkshire Music Center Presents 'Gala Evening'

Tanglewood "Gala Evening," formerly known as "Tanglewood on Parade," brought a gala audience of all ages, totalling 3630, to its beautifully landscaped grounds on Thursday afternoon. Clear skies and crisp weather made picknicking" enjoyable and possible, between performances by the Berkshire Music Center students, starting at four o'clock. Proceeds benefited the center's scholarship funds.

Members of Boris Goldovsky's Opera Department presented two one-act opera in the theatre-concert hall, early and late eighteenth century. The first by Donizetti, follower and contemporary of Rossini, titled "Il Campanello" wa attractively set in an apothecary's shop in Naples. Delightfully written in comique style, the singers expertly unfolded the story of a rake, Enrico, and his machinations with the shop's night bell to keep the elderly druggist, newly married, from his young bride. As Don Pistacchio, the groom, David Clatworthy, was audibly noteworthy.

Both operas were given an English text, the first by R. and A. Hilfreich, the second, "Arlecchino," by M. and B. Hilfreich. Excellent piano accompaniment was produced by Robert K. Evans and Felix Wolfes, with the musical preparation by Maurits Sillem. A constant seeker after the greatest musical inspiration and expression, Busoni's "Harlequin" reflects an unwieldy combination of traditional and radical ideas. The cast handled their roles remarkably well with Anthony Addison in the title role quite convincing. Another tale of seduction and elopement, Harlequin cautions the audience at the beginning that the opera is "not for children" "things true and false will be shown," and if "some prove provoking," they probably are "only joking"!

In the Chamber music hall several compositions were heard by members of the Department of Composition under instruction by Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner andRoberto Gerhard. These included a pleasing Divertimento for winds by Chilean Celso Garrido-Lecca, four Piano Variations, with the composer Wesley Fuller, at the piano, compact and clearly stated. Also heard were three Caprices for Clarinet and Piano in a capricious jazz idiom by Michael Fink, Long Beach California. Fine performances were given by the Fromm Fellowship Players.

Around 7:00, between bites and sips, one could be diverted by the Tanglewood Choir, from the Main House porch, in purely entertaining and pleasurable selections by Gabrieli, Debussy, Brahms, Janequin, Bergsma, Copland, Greenberg and Williams. Hugh Ross, director of the Choral department was capably assitsed by student members.

At 8:30 instead of the usual student conductors, Eleazar de Carvalho, Charles Munch and Aaron Copland directed the Berkshire Center Orchestra in a pretty exciting concert. Good style and studious precision prevailed for the most part, although the Menuetto from Haydn's 99th, the symphony chosen by de Carvalho, was a bit too lyric.

Tschaikowsky's Overture Fantasy, "Romeo and Juliet," suffered somewhat from a numerical lack in the excellent full-toned string sections, overbalance by surprisingly capable brass and wind choirs. The English horn and muted violins in the famous lovers' theme were most appealing musically. Percussion was excellent, rhythmically and tonally. The students will not forget soon this revelatory experience under the stimulating and imaginative baton of Charles Munch.

For a pleasant conclusion to an enlightening and worthwhile occasion, Aaron Copland conducted concert excerpts from his strictly American opera "Tender Land." Soloists were well-chosen members of the Festival Chorus. Almost the entire second act and the finale of the first were performed, Mr. Copland stating in his opening explanatory remarks that while sequence is disconnected, it seems to symbolize his idea contained in the opera.

The listeners were warm and generous with their apalause, although some were chilled by the penetratingly cool night air.

Twenty years ago the Berkshire Music Center was established through the guidance of Serge Koussevitsky, director of the Boston Symphony at that time. His idea was that young musicians would sharpen their skills and talents in an environment of professional music making, absorbing some of the exposed wisdom and idealism of the artists. It is interesting to note that 168 students received full or partial scholarship aid this year, through the Revolving Scholarship Fund, supported by gifts from Friends of the Berkshire Center. An appeal was noted in the program for more scholarship aid. The cost per student for operating the school is $625, tuition and dormitory fees for seven weeks, $460, and tuition alone for one student amounts to $220 for the seven weeks.

M deB B

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
AUG 14 1961

Two One-Act Operas To Open Gala Evening

Boris Goldovsky, head of the Berkshire Music Center opera department, today announced the program of two one-act operas which his students will present in the Tanglewood Theater at 4 p.m. Thursday as the first event of the Gala Evening — the benefit program for the Berkshire Music Center Scholarship Funds.

Donizetti's "Il Campanello" — "The Night Bell" — "Arlecchino" by Busoni will be performed in productions supervised by Mr. Goldovsky with assistance from Robert K. Evans, Thomas Philips, Frederic Popper, Arthur Schoep, Felix Wolfes, Paul Marantz, Peggy Donovan, Robert Larsen, Norman Womack, James Flannery, Nick Bellini and Kim Brandt.

Both are to be performed in English.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 16 1961

Tanglewood

Choir To Give Supper Concert At 'Gala Evening' Tomorrow

TANGLEWOOD — Hugh Ross, head of the Berkshire Music Center's choral department, has announced the program which his 50-member Tanglewood Choir will perform in a supper concert to be given on the porch of the Main House at Tanglewood tomorrow at 7 p.m. This concert will be part of the Berkshire Music Center's "Gala Evening at Tanglewood" which begins at 4 p.m. with a program of two one-act operas and concludes with a concert by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra at 8:30 p.m.

Alfred Nash Patterson, Willis W. Beckett and Dan Border have assisted Mr. Ross in preparing the choir for this concert.

The program:

"Jubilate Deo," for 4-part chorus and brass ensemble — Gabrieli
Willis W. Beckett, conductor
Trois Chansons — Debussy
Talmon Herz, conductor
"Lark" — Aaron Copland
Seymour Schonberg, conductor
"Le Chant des Oyseaux" — Janequin
Alfred Nash Patterson, William Catherwood, David Fox, Talmon Herz, and Seymour Schonberg, conductors
"I Hear a Harp," song from "Fingal" — Ossian's — Brahms
for women's voices, French horn and harp
Arletta Helfrich, conductor
Three Traditional Riddles — William Bergsma
David Fox, conductor
Three Shakespeare Songs — Vaughan Williams
Hugh Ross, conductor
"Tempus Est Locundum" — Lionel Greenberg
Hugh Ross, conductor
Choral Hymn—"Glory and Triumph" for chorus and band — Berlioz
Eleazar de Carvalho, conductor

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-420
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
AUG 15 1961

Berkshire Center In Gala Evening

Charles Munch, Aaron Copl and Elzear de Carvalho will c duct the Berkshire Music Cen Oarchestra at Tanglewood, Thu day at 8:30 p.m. All students the Boston Symphony Orchest summer school will participate the Gala, the income from wh will ben. efit the Center's scho ship funds.

At 4:00 p.m. members of B Goldovsky's Opera Departm will present a program of one operas in the Tanglewood Thea At 6:00 p.m. in the Chamber sic Hall the fromm Players give a concert by composers st ing at Tanglewood.

The Tanglewood Choir will a supper concert from the po of the Main House at 7.00 p.m

B. M. C. Gala – Aug. 17 –

184

AT TANGLEWOOD
Berkshire Music Center

RAMS

THEATRE-CONCERT HALL

lovsky, assisted by Robert K. Evans,
r, Arthur Schoep, Felix Wolfes.

(The Night Bell)
One Act
Gaetano Donizetti
R. and A. Hilfreich

thur Schoep
by Robert K. Evans
by Paul Marantz

ST

t	David Clatworthy
. . . . .	Jan Saxon
. . . . .	Joan Caplan
. . . . .	Jerold Sien
. . . . .	James Flannery
. . . . .	Members of the Opera Department

s in the eighteenth century.

van, Robert Larsen
Flannery

SSION

HINO
erruccio Busoni
and B. Hilfreich
Goldovsky
by Felix Wolfes

. . . . .	Richard Golden
. . . . .	Eugene Green
. . . . .	Thomas Paul
. . . . .	Anthony Addison
. . . . .	Emary McIver
. . . . .	Betty Heidema
. . . . .	Judi Turano
. . . . .	Members of the Opera Department

in the eighteenth century.

Maurits Sillem

ersion: Norman Womack
ht

6:00 COMPOSITION — THEATRE-CONCERT HALL

Department of Composition: Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner, Roberto Gerhard

CELSO GARRIDO-LECCA (Santiago, Chile) — DIVERTIMENTO

I Introduccion
II Variaciones
III Nocturno
IV Final—Jazz

WESLEY FULLER (Norton, Massachusetts) — PIANO VARIATIONS

I Adagio
II Presto
III Adagio
IV Allegro
V Moderato

The Composer at the Piano

MICHAEL FINK (Long Beach, California) — CAPRICES FOR CLARINET AND PIANO

I Café
II In Between
III Excursion

PETER LEWIS (Bradford, Rhode Island) — THREE SONGS—1958

I October country (Ray Bradbury)
II The chair was stiff (Artelia Bowne Court)
III The last poem (Robert Desnos)

STANLEY SILVERMAN (New York City) — "WHO HURT YOU SO" (Edna St. Vincent Millay)
For Soprano and Guitar
Guitar Accompaniment by the Composer

ROGER REYNOLDS (Ann Arbor, Michigan) — ACQUAINTANCES

I Abrupt
II Antic
III Acceptance

THE FROMM FELLOWSHIP PLAYERS

Peter Marsh—violin
Theodora Mantz—violin
Paul Hersh—viola
Donald McCall—violoncello
John Perras—flute
David Perkett—oboe
Arthur Bloom—clarinet
Jane Taylor—bassoon
William Brown—French Horn
Paul Jacobs—piano

Marianne Weltman—soprano
Assisting—Richard Webster, Contrabass

7:00 TANGLEWOOD CHOIR — MAIN HOUSE PORCH

Choral Department: Hugh Ross; Willis W. Beckett, Alfred Nash Patterson, Associates; Dan Border, Coordinator

GABRIELI — JUBILATE DEO
For 8-Part Chorus and Brass Ensemble
DONALD REBER—Conductor

DEBUSSY — TROIS CHANSONS (Charles d'Orléans)
Dieu! qu'il la fait bon regarder! (Lord, lovely hast thou made my dear!)
Quant j'ai ouy le tabourin (When'er the tambourine I hear)
Yver, vous n'estes qu'un villain (Cold winter, villain that thou art)
TALMON HERZ—Conductor

AARON COPLAND — LARK
SEYMOUR SCHONBERG—Conductor

JANEQUIN — LE CHANT DES OYSEAUX
ALFRED NASH PATTERSON—Conductor
Madrigal Quartets conducted by William Catherwood, David Fox, Talmon Herz, Seymour Schonberg

BRAHMS — I HEAR A HARP
Song from Ossian's "Fingal,"
For Women's Voices, French Horn, and Harp
ARLETTA HELFRICH—Conductor

WILLIAM BERGSMA — THREE TRADITIONAL RIDDLES
I. The Snow
II. The Egg
III. The Cow
DAVID FOX—Conductor

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS — THREE SHAKESPEARE SONGS
I. Full fathom five
II. The cloud-capp'd towers
III. Over hill, over dale
HUGH ROSS—Conductor

LIONEL GREENBERG — TEMPUS EST YOCUNDUM (Now's the Time for Pleasure)
HUGH ROSS—Conductor

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS — O, CLAP YOUR HANDS
For Chorus and Brass Ensemble

8:30 ORCHESTRA, CHORUS AND SOLOISTS — MUSIC SHED

Orchestral Department: Eleazar de Carvalho, assisted by Seymour Lipkin.

HAYDN — SYMPHONY NO. 99, IN E FLAT MAJOR
I. Adagio; Vivace assai
II. Adagio
III. Menuetto: Allegretto
IV. Finale: Vivace
Conducted by ELEAZAR DE CARVALHO

TCHAIKOVSKY — "ROMEO AND JULIET," OVERTURE—FANTASIA
Conducted by CHARLES MUNCH

INTERMISSION

COPLAND — Concert Excerpts from the Opera, "THE TENDER LAND"
Conducted by the Composer

FESTIVAL CHORUS
SOLOISTS

Laurie . . .	Mary Ellen Pracht	Mr. Splinters . .	Eugene Green
MaMoss . .	Joan Caplan	Mrs. Splinters .	Joy McIntyre
Grandpa . .	Justino Diaz	Mr. Jenks . .	Thomas Paul
Martin . . .	Mark Belfort Chalat	Mrs. Jenks . .	Junetta Jones
Top . . .	Allen Cathcart

Musical Preparation: Peggy Donovan, Robert K. Evans, Robert Larsen, Frederic Popper, Ross Reimueller

---

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
AUG 14 1961

Two One-Act Operas To Open Gala Evening

Boris Goldovsky, head of the Berkshire Music Center opera department, today announced the program of two one-act operas which his students will present in the Tanglewood Theater at 4 p.m. Thursday as the first event of the Gala Evening — the benefit program for the Berkshire Music Center Scholarship Funds.

Donizetti's "Il Campanello" — "The Night Bell" — "Arlecchino" by Busoni will be performed in productions supervised by Mr. Goldovsky with assistance from Robert K. Evans, Thomas Philips, Frederic Popper, Arthur Schoep, Felix Wolfes, Paul Marantz, Peggy Donovan, Robert Larsen, Norman Womack, James Flannery, Nick Bellini and Kim Brandt.

Both are to be performed in English.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 16 1961

Tanglewood

Choir To Give Supper Concert At 'Gala Evening' Tomorrow

TANGLEWOOD — Hugh Ross, head of the Berkshire Music Center's choral department, has announced the program which his 50-member Tanglewood Choir will perform in a supper concert to be given on the porch of the Main House at Tanglewood tomorrow at 7 p.m. This concert will be part of the Berkshire Music Center's "Gala Evening at Tanglewood" which begins at 4 p.m. with a program of two one-act operas and concludes with a concert by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra at 8:30 p.m.

Alfred Nash Patterson, Willis W. Beckett and Dan Border have assisted Mr. Ross in preparing the choir for this concert.

The program:

"Jubilate Deo," for 8-part chorus and brass ensemble — Gabrieli
Willis W. Beckett, conductor
Trois Chansons — Debussy
Talmon Herz, conductor
"Lark" — Aaron Copland
Seymour Schonberg, conductor
"Le Chant des Oyseaux" — Janequin
Alfred Nash Patterson, William Catherwood, David Fox, Talmon Herz, and Seymour Schonberg, conducters
"I Hear a Harp," song from Ossian's "Fingal" — Brahms
for women's voices, French horn and harp
Arletta Helfrich, conductor
Three Traditional Riddles — William Bergsma
David Fox, conductor
Three Shakespeare Songs — Vaughan Williams
Hugh Ross, conductor
"Tempus Est Locundum" — Lionel Greenberg
Hugh Ross, conductor
Choral Hymn—"Glory and Triumph" for chorus and band — Berlioz
Eleazar de Carvalho, conductor

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
AUG 15 1961

Berkshire Center In Gala Evening

Charles Munch, Aaron Copland and Elzear de Carvalho will conduct the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra at Tanglewood, Thursday at 8:30 p.m. All students at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school will participate in the Gala, the income from which will benefit the Center's scholarship funds.

At 4:00 p.m. members of Boris Goldovsky's Opera Department will present a program of one-act operas in the Tanglewood Theater. At 6:00 p.m. in the Chamber Music Hall the fromm Players will give a concert by composers studying at Tanglewood.

The Tanglewood Choir will give a supper concert from the porch of the Main House, at 7.00 p.m.

only joking.

In the Chamber-music hall several compositions were heard by members of the Department of Composition under instruction by Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner and Roberto Gerhard. These included a pleasing Divertimento for winds by Chilean Celso Garrido-Lecco, four Piano Variations, with the composer Wesley Fuller at the piano, compact and clearly stated. Also heard were three Caprices for Clarinet and Piano in a capricious jazz idiom by Michael Fink, Long Beach California. Fine performances were given by the Fromm Fellowship Players.

Around 7:00, between bites and sips, one could be diverted by the Tanglewood Choir, from the Main House porch, in purely entertaining and pleasurable selections by Gabrieli, Debussy, Brahms, Janequin, Bergsma, Copland, Greenberg and Williams. Hugh Ross, director of the Choral department was capably assitsed by student members.

At 8:30 instead of the usual student conductors, Eleazar de Carvalho, Charles Munch and Aaron Copland directed the Berkshire Center Orchestra in a pretty exciting concert. Good style and studious precision prevailed for the most part although the Menuetto from Haydn's 99th, the symphony student for operating the school is $625, tuition and dormitory fees for seven weeks, $460, and tuition alone for one student amounts to $220 for the seven weeks.

M deB E

B.M.C. Gala – Aug. 17-

184

THE BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER

Twenty years ago, in 1940, The Berkshire Music Center was established at Tanglewood. It was the fruition of many years of love, skill, and experience of working with music and musicians by the Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at that time, Serge Koussevitzky. His idea was that young musicians would find their musical talents sharpened and developed by spending an intensive period in an environment of professional music making, working with professional musicians, and following a professional schedule, and that in so doing the younger generation would absorb some of the wisdom, idealism and accumulated understanding of music.

The talent and character of the Tanglewood students has been defined by Ross Parmenter (New York Times, August 6, 1960): "Whether as opera performers, composers of chamber music, choral singers or members of a symphony, they approached their work with the utmost sincerity, with unfailing musical sensibility and with the willingness to submerge their very considerable talents in the re-creation of music they cared about. The artistic integrity of the students, in fact, was just as impressive as the sum total of their gifts and skills. And the extent of those gifts was shown most decisively."

The problem of financing such an undertaking has always been a thorny one, inasmuch as it is done by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is already dependent on contributions for its continuation, and because students of music are seldom persons of means. For example, of the 280 students enrolled at the Berkshire Music Center this year, 186 have had to receive full or partial scholarship aid. The expenses of operating the Music Center will amount to more than $175,000—about $625 per student. The fees, for those who can pay them, are:

Tuition for 7 weeks	$220
Dormitory for 7 weeks	215
Registration and reservation fee	25
	$460

Payment of these fees by students and the grants from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund, supported by the gifts of Friends of the Berkshire Center, provide only $95,000 to offset these $175,000 of expenses. Proceeds from tonight's Gala Evening and from the Boston Pops at Tanglewood on August 3rd will reduce the loss of the undertaking for this season, but there will be a final deficit of considerable size. In order to carry on the work of the Center, more scholarship aid is needed. For anyone who wishes to sponsor a partial or full scholarship, the following amounts are of significance:

$625—The cost per student of operating the school

$460—Tuition and dormitory fees for one student for 7 weeks

$220—Tuition for one student for 7 weeks

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
AUG 19 1961

Berkshire Music Center Presents 'Gala Evening'

Tanglewood's "Gala Evening," formerly known as "Tanglewood on Parade," brought a gala audience of all ages, totalling 3630, to its beautifully landscaped grounds on Thursday afternoon. Clear skies and crisp weather made picknicking enjoyable and possible, between performances by the Berkshire Music Center students, starting at four o'clock. Proceeds benefited the center's scholarship funds.

Members of Boris Goldovsky's Opera Department presented two one-act opera in the theatre-concert hall, early and late eighteenth century. The first by Donizetti, follower and contemporary of Rossini, titled "Il Campanello" wa attractively set in an apothecary's shop in Naples. Delightfully written in comique style, the singers expertly unfolded the story of a rake, Enrico, and his machinations with the shop's night bell to keep the elderly druggist, newly married, from his young bride. As Don Pistacchio, the groom, David Clatworthy, was audibly noteworthy.

Both operas were given an English text, the first by R. and A. Hilfreich, the second, "Arlecchino," by M. and B. Hilfrejch. Excellent piano accompaniment was produced by Robert K. Evans and Felix Wolfes, with the musical prep-Wolfes, with the musical preparation by Maurits Sillem. A constant seeker after the greatest musical inspiration and expression Busoni's "Harlequin" reflects an unwieldy combination of traditional and radical ideas. The cast handled their roles remarkably well with Anthony Addison in the title role quite convincing. Another tale of seduction and elopement, Harlequin cautions the audience at the beginning that the opera is "not for children" "things true and false will be shown," and if "some prove provoking," they probably are "only joking"!

In the Chamber-music hall several compositions were heard by members of the Department of Composition under instruction by Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner andRoberto Gerhard. These included a pleasing Divertimento for winds by Chilean Celso Garrido-Lecco, four Piano Variations, with the composer Wesley Fuller, at the piano, compact and clearly stated. Also heard were three Caprices for Clarinet and Piano in a capricious jazz idiom by Michael Fink, Long Beach California. Fine performances were given by the Fromm Fellowship Players.

Around 7:00, between bites and sips, one could be diverted by the Tanglewood Choir, from the Main House porch, in purely entertaining and pleasurable selections by Gabrieli, Debussy, Brahms, Janequin, Bergsma, Copland, Greenberg and Williams. Hugh Ross, director of the Choral department was capably assitsed by student members.

At 8:30 instead of the usual student conductors, Eleazar de Carvalho, Charles Munch and Aaron Copland directed the Berkshire Center Orchestra in a pretty exciting concert. Good style and studious precision prevailed for the most part, although the Menuetto from Haydn's 98th, the symphony chosen by de Carvalho, was a bit too lyric.

Tschaikowsky's Overture Fantasy, "Romeo and Juliet," suffered somewhat from a numerical lack in the excellent full-toned string sections, overbalance by surprisingly capable brass and wind choirs. The English horn and muted violins in the famous lovers' theme were most appealing musically. Percussion was excellent, rhythmically and tonally. The students will not forget soon this revelatory experience under the stimulating and imaginative baton of Charles Munch.

For a pleasant conclusion to an enlightening and worthwhile occasion, Aaron Copland conducted concert excerpts from his strictly American opera "Tender Land." Soloists were well-chosen members of the Festival Chorus. Almost the entire second act and the finale of the first were performed. Mr. Copland stating in his opening explanatory remarks that while sequence is disconnected, it seems to symbolize his idea contained in the opera.

The listeners were warm and generous with their applause, although some were chilled by the penetratingly cool night air.

Twenty years ago the Berkshire Music Center was established through the guidance of Serge Koussevitsky, director of the Boston Symphony at that time. His idea was that young musicians would sharpen their skills and talents in an environment of professional music making, absorbing some of the exposed wisdom and idealism of the artists. It is interesting to note that 168 students received full or partial scholarship aid this year, through the Revolving Scholarship Fund, supported by gifts from Friends of the Berkshire Center. An appeal was noted in the program for more scholarship aid. The cost per student for operating the school is $625, tuition and dormitory fees for seven weeks, $460, and tuition alone for one student amounts to fi220 for the seven weeks.

M deB B

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 16 1961

Tanglewood

Choir To Give Supper Concert At 'Gala Evening' Tomorrow

TANGLEWOOD — Hugh Ross, head of the Berkshire Music Center's choral department, has announced the program which his 50-member Tanglewood Choir will perform in a supper concert to be given on the porch of the Main House at Tanglewood tomorrow at 7 p.m. This concert will be part of the Berkshire Music Center's "Gala Evening at Tanglewood" which begins at 4 p.m. with a program of two one-act operas and concludes with a concert by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra at 8:30 p.m.

Alfred Nash Patterson, Willis W. Beckett and Dan Border have assisted Mr. Ross in preparing the choir for this concert.

The program:

"Jubilate Deo," for 8-part chorus and brass ensemble — Gabrieli
Willis W. Beckett, conductor
Trois Chansons — Debussy
Talmon Hers, conductor
"Lark" — Aaron Copland
Seymour Schonberg, conductor
"Le Chant des Oyseaux" — Janequin
Alfred Nash Patterson, William Catherwood, David Fox, Talmon Hers, and Seymour Schonberg, conductors
"I Hear a Harp," song from Ossian's "Fingal" — Brahms
for women's voices, French horn and harp
Arletta Helfrich, conductor
Three Traditional Riddles — William Bergsma
David Fox, conductor
Three Shakespeare Songs — Vaughan Williams
Hugh Ross, conductor
"Tempus Est Iocundum" — Lionel Greenberg
Hugh Ross, conductor
Choral Hymn—"Glory and Triumph" — Berlioz for chorus and band
Eleazar de Carvalho, conductor

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
AUG 14 1961

Two One-Act Operas To Open Gala Evening

Boris Goldovsky, head of the Berkshire Music Center opera department, today announced the program of two one-act operas which his students will present in the Tanglewood Theater at 4 p.m. Thursday as the first event of the Gala Evening — the benefit program for the Berkshire Music Center Scholarship Funds.

Donizetti's "Il Campanello" — "The Night Bell" — "Arlecchino" by Busoni will be performed in productions supervised by Mr. Goldovsky with assistance from Robert K. Evans, Thomas Philips, Frederic Popper, Arthur Schoep, Felix Wolfes, Paul Marantz, Peggy Donovan, Robert Larsen, Norman Womack, James Flannery, Nick Bellini and Kim Brandt.

Both are to be performed in English.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
AUG 15 1961

Berkshire Center In Gala Evening

Charles Munch, Aaron Copland and Elzear de Carvalho will conduct the Berkshire Music Center Oarchestra at Tanglewood, Thursday at 8:30 p.m. All students at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school will participate in the Gala, the income from which will ben. efit the Center's schoarship funds.

At 4:00 p.m. members of Bril Goldovsky's Opera Departmen will present a program of one-act operas in the Tanglewood Theater. At 6:00 p.m. in the Chamber Music Hall the fromm Players will give a concert by composers studying at Tanglewood.

The Tanglewood Choir will give a supper concert from the porch of the Main House, at 7.00 p.m.

185

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 17 1961

Whitestone

TONIGHT'S PERFORMERS, members of the student orchestra at the Berkshire Music Center, who will be heard in a concert in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, rehearse the program with Dr. Charles Munch, musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will conduct the group in Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" overture. Eleazar de Carvalho, the Brazilian conductor, and Aaron Copland also will conduct the student orchestra tonight as part of the "gala evening" being held for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center's scholarship fund. Operas are also scheduled in the theater at 4 p.m.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
AUG 8 1961

Berkshire Music Center Benefit Set

Tanglewood Is Site For August 17 Gala

The annual gala benefit for the Berkshire Music Center will be held at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Thursday afternoon and evening, Aug. 17, with all of the center's 284 students taking part. The proceeds will be devoted to its scholarship funds.

The center's opera department, directed by Boris Goldovsky, will open the benefit with a group of one act works at 4 p. m. Chamber music by composers now studing at Tanglewood will be played by the Fromm Players at 6 p. m., and the Tanglewood Choir will sing at 7 p. m. Eleazar de Carvalho, Charles Munch and Aaron Copeland will conduct the center's orchestra at 8:30 in a program including works by Haydn and Tchaikovsky and scenes from Mr. Copeland's opera, "The Tender Land."

As part of its "Today" show, the National Broadcasting Company will telecast a program from Tanglewood from 7 to 9 a. m. this Thursday, Aug. 10, when the Boston Fine Arts Quartet, composed of Boston Symphony musicians, will play, and Mrs. Serge Koussevitsky, Aaron Copeland and Arthur Fiedler, among others, will be interviewed.

Mr. Munch, Mr. Fiedler, Mr. Copland, Richard Burgin, Leonard Bernstein, Erich Leinsdorf and Eugene Ormandy have been invited to discuss the future of the symphony orchestra in America in a fifty minute program to be recorded at Tanglewood tomorrow by the Columbia Broadcasting System. This program will be available for CBS stations by Friday or Saturday, and for National Educational Television stations in the fall.

Opera, Concerts At Tanglewood BMC Benefit

TANGLEWOOD — Students at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center will perform at Tanglewood today in a series of concerts to benefit the school's scholarship funds.

The events, to be held rain or shine, will begin at 4, when students from Boris Goldovsky's opera department will present Donizetti's "Il Campanello" and Busoni's "Arlecchino" in the theater at 4 p.m.

Fromm Concert at 6

At 6, in the theater, the Fromm Foundation Players will give a concert of music by Tanglewood composers who have studied this summer under the direction of Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner and Roberto Gerhard.

The Tanglewood Choir will give a supper concert from the porch of the main house at 7. While the audience picnics on the spacious lawns overlooking Stockbridge Bowl, the 50 members of the choir will present music conducted by Hugh Ross, Alfred Nash Patterson, Willis W. Beckett, Eleazar de Carvalho and members of the choral conducting class.

Charles Munch, Aaron Copland and Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, assisted by the Festival Chorus and soloists from the opera department in the Music Shed at 8:30. The program for this concert includes Haydn's Symphony No. 99 in E flat major, conducted by Eleazar de Carvalho; Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet," Overture-Fantasia, conducted by Charles Munch; and concert excerpts from Aaron Copland's opera, "The Tender Land," conducted by the composer.

Admission to Tanglewood for all events of the "Gala Evening" is $2.50, except for boxes for the Shed concert at 8:30, which are $5.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
AUG 11 1961

Munch, Copland, Carvalho To Conduct Next Thursday

Charles Munch, Aaron Copland and Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox, next Thursday evening at 8:30 as the final event of the Center's annual Gala Evening.

All students at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school —284 from 36 states and 10 foreign countries — will participate in the Gala, the income from which will benefit the Center's scholarship funds.

"Gala Evening"

The Gala Evening will begin at 4 p.m. when members of Boris Goldovsky's Opera Department will present a program of one-act operas in the Tanglewood Theater.

At 6 p.m. in the Chamber Music Hall the Fromm Players, those studying at Tanglewood on fellowships awarded by the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago, will give a concert of music by composers studying under the direction of Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner and Roberto Gerhard at Tanglewood this summer.

The Tanglewood Choir, students from the Department of Choral Music, trained by Hugh Ross, Willis Beckett and Alfred Nash Patterson, will give a supper concert from the porch of the Main House at 7 p.m.

Eleazar de Carvalho, head of the Music Center Orchestra, will conduct Haydn's Symphony No. 99 as the first work in the concert by the school's symphony orchestra in the Music Shed at 8:30. Charles Munch, who is director of the Berkshire Music Center as well as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the students in Tchaikovsky's Overture, "Romeo and Juliet," and Aaron Copland will conduct the orchestra in scenes from his opera "The Tender Land." The Festival Chorus, made up of students from all departments, and soloists from the opera department will be heard in the scenes from Mr. Copland's opera.

Grounds Open at 3

The Tanglewood grounds will be opened at 3 p.m. for the Gala Evening and the Tanglewood cafeteria will be open for those who wish to purchase box suppers in order to picnic.

Over 5,000 unreserved seats in the Music Shed will be available for the evening concert by the orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
AUG 10 1961

TANGLEWOOD'S 284 STUDENTS WILL PERFORM

Gala Today Will Include Everyone in Concerts Starting at 4

LENOX—Charles Munch, Aaron Copland and Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra at Tanglewood today at 8.30 as the final event of the center's annual Gala Evening.

10 Foreign Countries

All students at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school—284 from 36 states and 10 foreign countries—will participate in the Gala, the income from which will benefit the center's scholarship funds.

The Gala Evening will begin at 4 when members of Boris Goldovsky's opera department will present a program of one-act operas in the Tanglewood theater.

At 6 in the Chamber Music Hall the Fromm Players—those studying at Tanglewood on fellowships awarded by the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago—will give a concert of music by composers studying under the direction of Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner and Roberto Gerhard at Tanglewood this summer.

Supper Concert

The Tanglewood Choir — students from the department of choral music, trained by Hugh Ross, Willis Beckett and Alfred Nash Patterson — will give a supper concert from the porch of the Main House at 7.

Eleazar de Carvalho, head of the Music Center Orchestra will conduct Haydn's Symphony No. 99 as the first work in the concert by the school's symphony orchestra in the Music Shed at 8.30.

Charles Munch, who is director of the Berkshire Music Center as well as Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the students in Tchaikovsky's Overture, "Romeo and Juliet," and Aaron Copland will conduct the orchestra in scenes from his opera "The Tender Land."

The Festival Chorus made up of students from all departments and soloists from the Opera Department will be heard in the scenes from Copland's opera.

The Tanglewood grounds will be opened at 3 for the Gala Evening, and the Tanglewood Cafeteria will be open for those who wish to purchase box suppers in order to picnic.

Admission to all events at Tanglewood for the Gala Evening is $2.50, except box seats. More than 5000 unreserved seats in the Music Shed will be available for the evening concert by the orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 19 1961

Final Concert by BMC Students In Music Shed This Afternoon

Seymour Lipkin conducting at Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD — The Berkshire Music Center Orchestra will present its seventh and final concert of the 1961 season at the Music Shed this afternoon at 3.

Through the six concerts thus far, this orchestra has played for over 8,000 Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Funds received by the Friends office for all of the student concerts are presented to the Berkshire Music Center for its support and scholarship funds.

The three active student conductors will share the conducting responsibilities of today's concert with Seymour Lipkin, who has been associate head of the department of instrumental music. Roland Chagnon will open the program with Moussorgsky's Night on Bald Mountain, to be followed by Serge Fournier conducting Roberto Gerhard's Don Quixote. Mr. Gerhard has been one of two guest composers in residence at the Berkshire Music Center this summer.

After the intermission the orchestra will be heard in Samuel Barber's Essay No. 1 for orchestra with Abraham Kaplan conducting. Mr. Lipkin will then direct the orchestra in a performance of Bartok's Dance Suite.

The Sunday morning chamber music program will be presented at 10 a.m. in the theater-concert hall rather than the usual chamber music hall. This is the normal course for the concluding program as the audiences are usually considerably larger at this final concert. The program will consist of two works, Bethoven's Septet in E flat for strings and winds, Opus 20, and the Serenade No. 10 in B flat by Mozart. The Mozart serenade was prepared under the direction of Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinetist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The piece is scored for two oboes, four clarinets, two bassoons, contrabassoon, and four horns. Joseph de Pasquale, principal viola of the Boston Symphony, has coached the rehearsals of the Beethoven Septet, which is scored for clarinet, bassoon, horn, violin, viola, cello, and double bass.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 99,973
AUG 16 1961

TANGLEWOOD GALA EVENING TOMORROW

Charles Munch, Aaron Copland and Eleazar de Carvalho Will Conduct

Charles Munch, Aaron Copland and Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra at Tanglewood tomorrow at 8.30 p. m. as the final event of the center's annual Gala Evening. All students at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school—284 from 36 states and 10 foreign countries—will participate in the gala, the income from which will benefit the center's scholarship funds.

The Gala Evening will begin at 4 p. m. when members of Boris Goldovsky's Opera Department will present a program of one-act operas in the Tanglewood Theater.

At 6 p. m. in the Chamber Music Hall the Fromm Players—those studying at Tanglewood on Fellowships awarded by the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago—will give a concert of music by composers studying under the direction of Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner and Roberto Gerhard at Tanglewood this summer.

The Tanglewood Choir—students from the Department of Choral Music, trained by Hugh Ross, Willis Beckett and Alfred Nash Patterson — will give a supper concert from the porch of the Main House at 7 p. m.

Eleazar de Carvalho—head of the Music Center Orchestra—will conduct Haydn's Symphony No. 99 as the first work in the concert by the school's symphony orchestra (Music Shed, 8.30). Charles Munch, who is director of the Berkshire Music Center as well as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the students in Tchaikovsky's Overture, "Romeo and Juliet," and Aaron Copland will conduct the orchestra in scenes from his opera "The Tender Land." The Festival Chorus—made up of students from all departments—and soloists from the Opera Department will be heard in the scenes from Mr. Copland's opera.

Dr. Munch will conduct the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon. For the last concert of his penultimate season as the orchestra's music director, Doctor Munch has chosen Hector Berlioz' Dramatic Symphony "Romeo and Juliet." At this performance his guests will be contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm plus the Festival Chorus (prepared by Hugh Ross, Alfred Nash Patterson and Willis Beckett). Dr. Munch has invited the fifty members of the University of Montreal Chorus to join the Festival Chorus for this performance; the Montreal chorus has been prepared by its director, Fernand Graton, who is a former student of both choral conducting and orchestral conducting at the Berkshire Music Center.

Pierre Monteux will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Saturday night at 8.30 with pianist Gary Graffman as his guest. Mr. Graffman will be soloist in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2. The remainder of the program will consist of the Suite from "Petrouchka" by Stravinsky and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 10 1961

(Mrs. Koussevitzky Is Chairman Of Tanglewood's Gala Evening

Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky has announced members of the special committee who will assist her in behalf of the gala evening Thursday, Aug. 17, at Tanglewood. The event will benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship funds.

Committee Named

Members of Mrs. Koussevitzky's committee are Miss Anna R. Alexandre, Mme. Anna de Luchtenberg, Mrs. David Huxley and Mrs. Bruce W. Sanborn of Lenox, Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton, Mrs. William Crane and Mrs. Shaun Kelly of Richmond, Mrs. C. D. Jackson, Mrs. David B. Karrick and Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of Stockbridge, Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller of Pittsfield and Mrs. Thomas D. Perry Jr. of West Stockbridge.

The committee invites special donors to occupy boxes at the student orchestra program—to be conducted by Charles Munch, Aaron Copland and Eleazar de Carvalho—which will be given in the Music Shed as the final event of the Gala Evening. Boxes, seating six, are available at $30, the equivalent of one week's tuition for one student at Tanglewood.

Operas Set for 4 p.m.

Preceding the evening program in the Music Shed, students from other Berkshire Music Center departments will present concerts. At 4 p.m. a program of one-act operas will be presented in the theater-concert hall. The Fromm Fellows will perform music written by Tanglewood composers at a concert in the theater-concert hall at 6, and the Tanglewood Choir will give a supper concert from the porch of the main house at 7.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 4,856
AUG 10 1961

Concert to Aid Students' Fund At Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass. — The Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund will benefit through a special Tanglewood performance on Thursday evening, Aug. 17. Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky is committee chairman.

Preceding an evening program in the music shed, students from various Berkshire Music Center departments will present concerts and a program of one-act operas will be given in the theater at 4 p.m.

The Fromm Fellows will perform music written by Tanglewood composers at a 6 p.m. concert, and the Tanglewood Choir will appear from the porch of the main house at 7.

Members of Mrs. Koussevitzky's committee are Miss Anna R. Alexandre, Mme. Anna de Luchtenberg, Mrs. David Hurley and Mrs. Bruce W. Sanborn of Lenox, Mrs. C. D. Jackson, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith and Mrs. David B. Karrick of Stockbridge, Mrs. William Crane and Mrs. Shaun Kelly of Richmond, Mrs. L. K. Miller of Pittsfield and Mrs. Thomas D. Perry of West Stockbridge.

Special boxes for the evening performance, each seating six, are available for the equivalent of a week's tuition for one student at Tanglewood.

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955
AUG 7 1961

Berkshire Music Center Benefit Gala Evening Set For Aug. 17

Charles Munch, Aaron Copland and Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox, Thursday evening, Aug. 17, at 8.30 p.m. as the final event of the Center's annual Gala Evening.

All students at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school 284 — from 36 states and 10 foreign countries — will participate in the Gala, the income from which will benefit the Center's scholarship funds.

The Gala Evening will begin at 4 p.m. when members of Boris Goldovsky's opera department will present a program of one-act operas in the Tanglewood Theatre.

At 6 p.m. in the Chamber Music Hall the Fromm Players — those studying at Tanglewood on fellowships awarded by the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago — will give a concert of music by composers studying under the direction of Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner and Roberto Gerhard at Tanglewood this summer.

The Tanglewood Choir — students from the Department of Choral Music, trained by Hugh Ross, Willie Beckett and Alfred Nash Patterson — will give a supper concert from the porch of the Main House at 7 p.m.

Eleazar de Carvalho — head of the Music Center Orchestra — will conduct Haydn's Symphony No. 99 as the first work in the concert by the school's symphony orchestra in the Music Shed, 8.30. Charles Munch, director of the Berkshire Music Center as well as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the students in Tchaikovsky's Overture, "Romeo and Juliet," and Aaron Copland will conduct the orchestra in scenes from his opera "The Tender Land." The Festival Chorus — made up of students from all departments — and soloists from the opera department will be heard in the scenes from Copland's opera.

The Tanglewood grounds will be opened at 3 p.m. for the Gala Evening and the Tanglewood Cafeteria will be open for those who wish to purchase box suppers in order to picnic.

Over 5000 unreserved seats in the Music Shed will be available for the evening concert by the orchestra.

187

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 9 1961

Gala Night Thursday, Aug. 17, To Aid Berkshire Music Center

TANGLEWOOD — Charles Munch, Aaron Copland and Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra here Thursday evening, Aug. 17, at 8:30 as the final event of the center's annual gala evening. All students at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school —284 from 36 states and 10 foreign countries — will participate in the event, the income from which will benefit the center's scholarship funds.

The gala evening will begin at 4, when members of Boris Goldovsky's opera department will present a program of one-act operas in the Tanglewood theater.

At 6, in the Chamber Music Hall, the Fromm Players—those studying at Tanglewood on fellowships awarded by the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago — will give a concert produced by composers studying under the direction of Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner and Roberto Gerhard at Tanglewood this summer.

The Tanglewood choir — students from the department of choral music trained by Hugh Ross, Willis Beckett and Alfred Nash Patterson — will give a supper concert from the porch of the main House at 7.

Eleazar de Carvalho, head of the Music Center Orchestra, will conduct Haydn's Symphony No. 99 as the first work in the concert by the school's symphony orchestra in the Music Shed at 8:30. Charles Munch, who is director of the Berkshire Music Center as well as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the students in Tchaikovsky's Overture, "Romeo and Juliet," and Aaron Copland will conduct the orchestra in scenes from his opera, "The Tender Land." The Festival Chorus, consisting of students from all departments and soloists from the opera department, will be heard in the scenes from Mr. Copland's opera.

The Tanglewood grounds will be opened at 3 for the gala evening and the Tanglewood cafeteria will be open for those who wish to purchase box suppers in order to picnic.

Admission to all events at Tanglewood for the gala evening is $2.50, except box seats. More than 5,000 unreserved seats in the Music Shed will be available for the evening concert by the orchestra.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 47,136
AUG 8 1961

Tanglewood Schedules 'Gala Evening' for Aug. 17

All 284 students at the Berkshire Music Center will participate in the Aug. 17 "Gala Evening," the final event of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school. The students come this year from 36 states and 10 foreign countries.

* * *

THE GALA Evening will begin at 4 p.m. and the final event will be a concert by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra with Charles Munch, Aaron Copland and Eleazar de Carvalho conducting.

The Tanglewood grounds will be opened at 3 pm. for the event and the Tanglewood cafeteria will be open for those who wish to purchase box suppers in order to picnic. Admission to all events for the Gala Evening is $2.50 and over 5,000 unreserved seats in the music shed will be available for the evening (8:30 pm.) concert by the orchestra.

The program for the day includes one-act operas by members of Boris Goldovsky's opera department in the Tanglewood Theatre at 4 p.m.

* * *

THE FROMM PLAYERS will give a concert at 6 p.m. in the chamber music hall. Music will be by composers studying under the direction of Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner and Roberto Gerhard this summer.

The Tanglewood Choir, students from the department of choral music, trained by Hugh Ross, Willis Beckett and Alfred Nash Patterson, will give a supper concert from the porch of the main house at 7 p.m.

* * *

DE CARVALHO, head of the Music Center Orchestra, will conduct Haydn's "Symphony number 99" as the first work of the evening's concert by the school's symphony orchestra. Dr. Munch, who is director of the Berkshire Music Center as well as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the students in the Overture to "Romeo and Juliet," Tchaikovsky. Copland will conduct the orchestra in scenes from his opera "The Tender Land." The Festival Chorus, made up of students from all departments, and soloists from the opera department will be heard in the scenes from Copland's opera.

GLEN FALLS, N.Y.
TIMES
D: 8,123
AUG 8 1961

Annual Benefit for Berkshire Music Ctr. Scheduled Aug. 17

The annual gala benefit for the Berkshire Music Center will be held at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Thursday afternoon and evening, Aug. 17, with all of the center's 284 students taking part. The proceeds will be devoted to its scholarship funds.

The center's opera department, directed by Boris Goldovsky, will open the benefit with a group of one act works at 4 p.m. Chamber music by composers now studying at Tanglewood will be played by the Fromm Players at 6 p.m., and the Tanglewood Choir will sing at 7 p.m. Eleazar de Carvalho, Charles Munch and Aaron Copeland will conduct the center's orchestra at 8:30 in a program including works by Haydn and Tchaikovsky and scenes from Mr. Copeland's opera, "The Tender Land."

As part of its "Today" show, the National Broadcasting Company will telecast a program from Tanglewood from 7 to 9 a.m. this Thursday, Aug. 10, when the Boston Fine Arts Quartet, composed of Boston Symphony musicians, will play, and Mrs. Serge Koussevitsky, Aaron Copeland and Arthur Fiedler, among others, will be interviewed.

Mr. Munch, Mr. Fiedler, Mr. Copeland, Richard Burgin, Leonard Bernstein, Erich Leinsdorf and Eugene Ormandy have been invited to discuss the future of the symphony orchestra in America in a 50 minute program to be recorded at Tanglewood tomorrow by the Columbia Broadcasting System. This program will be available for CBS stations by Friday or Saturday, and for National Educational Television stations in the fall.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
AUG 8 1961

Berkshire Music Center Benefit Set

Tanglewood Is Site For August 17 Gala

The annual gala benefit for the Berkshire Music Center will be held at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Thursday afternoon and evening, Aug. 17, with all of the center's 284 students taking part. The proceeds will be devoted to its scholarship funds.

The center's opera department, directed by Boris Goldovsky, will open the benefit with a group of one act works at 4 p. m. Chamber music by composers now studing at Tanglewood will be played by the Fromm Players at 6 p. m., and the Tanglewood Choir will sing at 7 p. m. Eleazar de Carvalho, Charles Munch and Aaron Copeland will conduct the center's orchestra at 8:30 in a program including works by Haydn and Tchaikovsky and scenes from Mr. Copeland's opera, "The Tender Land."

As part of its "Today" show, the National Broadcasting Company will telecast a program from Tanglewood from 7 to 9 a. m. this Thursday, Aug. 10, when the Boston Fine Arts Quartet, composed of Boston Symphony musicians, will play, and Mrs. Serge Koussevitsky, Aaron Copeland and Arthur Fiedler, among others, will be interviewed.

Mr. Munch, Mr. Fiedler, Mr. Copeland, Richard Burgin, Leonard Bernstein, Erich Leinsdorf and Eugene Ormandy have been invited to discuss the future of the symphony orchestra in America in a fifty minute program to be recorded at Tanglewood tomorrow by the Columbia Broadcasting System. This program will be available for CBS stations by Friday or Saturday, and for National Educational Television stations in the fall.

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
AUG 9 1961

Mrs. Koussevitzky Names Group For 'Gala Evening'

Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky has announced members of the special committee that will assist her in behalf of the Gala Evening to be held at Tanglewood Thursday evening. Aug. 17, to benefit the Berkshire Music scholarship funds.

Members of Mrs. Koussevitzky's committee are Miss Anna R. Alexandre, Lenox; Mrs. Bruce Crane, Dalton; Mrs. William Crane, Richmond; Mme. Anna de Luchtenberg, Lenox; Mrs. David Huxley, Lenox; Mrs. C. D. Jackson, Stockbridge; Mrs. David B. Karrick, Stockbridge; Mrs. Shaun Kelly, Richmond; Mrs. L. K. Miller, Pittsfield; Mrs. Thomas D. Perry, West Stockbridge; Mrs. Bruce W. Sanborn, Lenox; and Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Stockbridge.

The committee has invited special donors to occupy boxes at the student orchestra program, to be conducted by Charles Munch, Aaron Copland and Eleazar de Carvalho, which will be given in the Music Shed as the final event of the Gala Evening.

Preceding the evening program in the Music Shed, students from other Berkshire Music Center departments will present concerts. At 4 p.m. a program of one-act operas will be presented in the Theater. The Fromm Fellows will perform music written by Tanglewood composers at a concert in the Theater at 6 p.m., and the Tanglewood Choir will give a supper concert from the porch of the main house at 7 p.m.

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
AUG 8 1961

Gala Evening At Tanglewood On The 17th

Charles Munch, Aaron Copland and Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra at Tanglewood Thursday evening, Aug. 17 (8:30) as the final event of the Center's annual Gala Evening. All students at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school — 284 from 36 states and 10 foreign countries — will participate in the Gala, the income from which will benefit the Center's scholarship funds.

The gala evening will begin at 4 p.m. when members of Boris Goldovsky's Opera Dept. will present a program of one-act operas in the Tanglewood Theatre.

At 6 in the Chamber Music Hall the Fromm Players — those studying at Tanglewood on Fellowships awarded by the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago — will give a concert of music by composers studying under the direction of Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner and Roberto Gerhard at Tanglewood this summer.

The Tanglewood Choir—students from the department of choral music, trained by Hugh Ross, Willis Beckett and Alfred Nash Patterson — will give a supper concert from the porch of the main house at 7.

Eleazar de Carvalho—head of the Music Center Orchestra — will conduct Haydn's Symphony No. 99 as the first work in the concert by the school's symphony orchestra (music shed, 8:30). Charles Munch, who is director of the Berkshire Music Center as well as Music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the students in Tchaikovsky's Overture, "Romeo and Juliet," and Aaron Copland will conduct the orchestra in scenes from his opera "The Tender Land." The Festival Chorus—made up of students from all departments —and soloists from the Opera Department will be heard in the scenes from Mr. Copland's opera.

The Tanglewood grounds will be opened at 3 and the Tanglewood cafeteria will be open for those who wish to purchase box suppers in order to picnic.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 14 1961

Opera Program Announced for 'Gala Evening'

TANGLEWOOD—Boris Goldovsky, head of the Berkshire Music Center opera department, today announced the program of two one-act operas which his students will present in the Tanglewood theater-concert hall at 4 p.m. Thursday as the first event of the "Gala Evening," the benefit program for the Berkshire Music Center Scholarship Funds.

Donizetti's "Il Campanello," (The Night Bell) and "Arlecchno" by Busoni will be performed in productions supervised by Mr. Goldovsky with assistance from Robert K. Evans, Thomas Philips, Frederic Popper, Arthur Schoep, Felix Wolfes, Paul Marantz, Peggy Donovan, Robert Larsen, Norman Womack, James Flannery, Nick Bellini and Kim Brandt.

Casts for Operas

The casts for the two operas, both to be performed in English follow:

IL CAMPANELLO

Don Annibale Pistacchio, an elderly druggist — David Clatworthy
Serafina, his bride — Jan Saxon
Madame Rosa, her mother — Joan Caplan
Enrico, a rake — Jerold Siem
Spiridione, Don Annibale's servant — James Flannery
Wedding Guests — Members of the Opera Department

Staged by Arthur Schoep; piano accompaniment by Robert K. Evans; setting and lighting by Paul Marantz

ARLECCHINO

Matteo, a tailor — Richard Golden
Cospicuo, a lay brother — Eugene Green
Bombasto, a doctor — Thomas Paul
Arlecchino, a rake — Anthony Addison
Leandro, a singer — Emary McIver
Annunziata, Matteo's wife — Betty Heidema
Colombina, Arlecchino's wife — Judi Turano
Two warriors, a carter, a donkey — Members of the Opera Department

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 92,860
AUG 18 1961

The Evening Gazette

TANGLEWOOD

Students Give Varied Program

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — "A Gala Evening at Tanglewood," offered by students, and devoting the proceeds to the Berkshire Music Center began at 4 p.m. yesterday and continued until late evening The attendance of 3,630, as against last year's, 2,448, marked a healthy growth of interest.

One sheds no tears for "Tanglewood on Parade," the melange which endeavored, until last year, to present in one day all the aspects of Tanglewood, both professional and amateur. This year, the devotees of the Boston "Pops" have had their chance to turn out in great numbers on Aug. 3, and the friends of student activities came yesterday to enjoy the many branches of the school itself.

The opera department, headed by Boris Goldovsky, presented two one-act operas in the Theatre-Concert Hall. "Il Campaneilo" (The Night Bell) by Donizetti, and "Arlecchino" by Busoni. The productions involved a dozen student principals and ensembles drawn from the opera department.

Fromm Players

The department of composition, headed by Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner and Roberto Gerhard, took over at 6, using the Fromm Fellowship Players, assisted by Marianne Wellman, soprano, to perform orginal compositions of Berkshire Music Center students. The composers represented were Celso Garrido-Lecca of Santiago, Chile, Wesley Fuller of Norton, Mass., Michael Fink of Long Beach, Cal., Peter Lewis of Bradford, R.I., Stanley Silverman of New York, and Roger Reynolds of Ann Arbor, Mich.

The open-air concert at 7 on the porch of the Main House, by the Tanglewood Choir of 43 voices, used brass ensemble at times, also French horn and harp, to vary the a cappella program The group was conducted by Hugh Ross, Alfred Nash Patterson Donald Reber, Talmon Herz Seymour Schonberg William Catgerwood, Arletta Helfrich and David Fox.

The evening concert was placed in the immense music shed, to the advantage of the orchestral numbers and somewhat to the disadvantage of the opera excerpts

86 Students

Eleazar de Carvalho, head of the orchestral department, led the 86 student players in a neat rendition of Haydn's Symphony No. 99 in E flat major. The opening movement had a well-schooled alternation of sweetness and emphasis, while the thoughtful themes of the second movement grew into a climax of impressive sonority. The Menuetto gave good square-toed values, and the Finale mingled speed with alertness, contributing some of the best playing of the symphony, as well as a few ragged phrases.

Charles Munch drew a splendid response from the orchestra in Tchaikovsky's Overture Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet." The performance was zestful, the colors were alluring, and the wide variety of moods gained faithful portrayal. The climax of the overture worked up and up, aided by eloquent and tuneful brasses and clever percussion Aaron Copland conducted most of Act II, and the finale of Act 1, from his opera, "The Tender Land." The Festival Chorus of more than 100 voices and the principal characters, singing in concert style. Copland gave the audience an amusing and appreciated synopsis. The dance episodes came through well, also the "Promise of Living" choral number, but many lovely details of the music were lost in the reaches of the vast shed and in the shivering of the not too adequately clad summer audience.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 19 1961

188

Plouffe

THE TANGLEWOOD CHOIR entertained picnickers and other early arrivals at the "gala evening" held Thursday for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center. Donald Reber and Seymour Schonberg conducted the group in works by Gabrieli and Debussy. A crowd of 3,630 attended. The program featured one-act operas in the afternoon, a concert by the Fromm Players, and a concert in the Music Shed by the student orchestra. The sum of $8,000 was realized from the benefit. Conductors at the Shed concert were Charles Munch, Eleazar de Carvalho and Aaron Copland.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
AUG 18 1961

TANGLEWOOD'S CLASSES SHOW SKILL AT GALA

Students of Music Center Perform for 3630 at Benefit Program

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—Tanglewood put its best foot forward Thursday and offered a gala day for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, founded by Serge Koussevitzky. In spite of perfect weather, a starlit sky and a moon, an audience estimated at 3630 people were on hand to enjoy all that was placed before them. This, in spite of a superior program, varied and all embracing.

Two Operas Offered

Things started at 4 p. m., at which time the opera department under Boris Goldovsky, offered two one-act operas, "Il Campanello" or "The Night Bell" by Donizetti and "Arlecchino" by Busoni. Both were sung in English by casts that boasted some admirable male voices.

Unless it was a question of timing, getting two one-act operas into a two-hour stretch, why oh why were these operas resurrected? The time for ressurection has long since past and they might well have been left to molder.

Donizetti wrote his own libretto, which might as well have had a Figaro of Mozart without the Figaro. There was even a quintet to keep up the Donizetti tradition. What was fine was the imaginative setting and lighting.

Busoni's opus was more involved and subtle, but it gave one little musically and had it not been for setting, lighting and Goldovsky's masterly handling of stage action, it also could have been kept below decks.

Student Compositions

Next on the program was a concert of compositions written by students of composition at the Berkshire Music Center. Those we heard had merit technically but were so advanced that one hearing was hardly enough to absorb them. They were all performed by the Fromm Fellowship Players, and very well performed.

An outdoor concert by the Tanglewood Choir, a group of picked voices, drew a large audience to the lawns about the main house. Here one heard excellent singing of some weird and difficult music. Conductors included Hugh Ross, Seymour Schonberg, Alfred Nash Patterson, Arletta Helfrich and others. Presumably the learning of these works will be invaluable in the future to the students.

The evening concert by the student orchestra was splendid. It seems to us that the students in this department carry more away with them than in any other department. By more, we mean more repertoire and sound training. The program opened with a fine performance of Haydn's "Symphony No. 99, in E Flat Major," directed by Eleazar de Carvalho, who heads this department. The orchestra is large and the strings are particularly good.

Munch Comes On

Charles Munch came on to conduct an admirable performance of the "Romeo and Juliet" Overture fantasia. It was an excellent performance, vital, well proportioned and just the kind to rouse a sympathetic audience.

Aaron Copland conducted concert excerpts from his opera, "The Tender Land." He had the festival chorus and soloists from the opera department to help out. We have enjoyed the orchestral suite from this opera more than the opera itself and Thursday night seemed to clinch our preference. The audience reaction was enthusiastic.

As noted this gala was for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center and it is estimated that about $8000 was taken in for this worthy project.

189

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,783
AUG 18 1961

Music: Berkshire Center Has 'Gala Evening'

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The Berkshire Music Center put on a "gala evening" yesterday which benefited it financially by over $10,000 and demonstrated its remarkable musical abilities before combined audiences of 3,630.

Main event was last night's orchestral concert in the music Symphony No. 99 in E flat major, conducted by Eleazar de Carvalho; Tchaikovsky's overture Charles Munch, and excerpts from Aaron Copland's opera, festival chorus and 10 soloists. The composer conducted.

This was no ordinary student orchestra. No compromises in tempos or interpretive details were necessary. In fact, we've not heard a more refreshing or downright exciting performance of the "Romeo and Juliet" from any of the so-called Grade B professional orchestras.

Sensitive Response

Munch must have been highly gratified with the aplomb and sensitivity with which his young players responded to his every directive. The Friar Laurence theme was richly intoned by the strings. There wasn't a smudge in the pizzicato passages. Montague and Capulet sequences were powerful and affluently toned and the love theme received an expressive initiation in woodwinds, carried through in strings. The "epilogue" was magnificent in sound, poise and climactic effect.

The Haydn symphony was less satisfactory. It was expressive enough, particularly in the slow movement, and the young people did their best to allow Carvalho freedom in shaping his balances freely and in materializing high spots. The "menuetto" was sluggish, but had good quality in strings if not in winds.

Carvalho placed the orchestra at a disadvantage in the finale with an absurdly fast tempo. The strings came close to accommodating him, but the woodwinds trailed behind.

Copland Humorous

Copland regaled the audience with a humorous account of his "Tendeland," and introduced each of the soloists individually and by name. He probably will never hear or direct a more zestful performance of the work.

melodies were brought forward with clarity and warmth.

All concerened acquitted themselves with distinction, producing a quality of vitality and spontaneity that could come only from earnest and enthusiastic effort.

The opening program in the afternoon demonstrated the work of Boris Goldovsky's opera department with two productions that should have remained in their state of merciful neglect — Donizetti's "Il Campanello" (The Night Bell), and Bousoni's "Arlecchino."

Nevertheless, there were factors to admire. Foremost was the diligence with which both were undertaken. Staging was excellent. Sets and coustumes showed originality and care. Also, there is merit in attempting to revive operatic corpses in the vain hope that they have been resting in peace unjustly.

Lacks Central Figure

The Donizetti opus (a Neapolitan farce of the 18th century) is gossipy with spit-fire recitative for solos and cominations. Its propelling force rests with a kind of "Figaro" motive without the benefit o fa powerful central figure.

An elderly druggist is engaged to a youn ggirl. She has a young admirer who uses a series of disguises to vanquish his rival with complications. David Clatworthy gave the druggist a resonant baritone voice. Jerold Sein portrayed the contesting rake simialarly. Beyond that, one was entertained mostly through the eyes.

"Arlecchino" is a wearying and implausible tale of invasion by barbarians in the Bergamo district of Italy, also 18th century. Busoni's extravagant accompaniment and weird make-ups soon lost all luster and forced the audience to state itself with impoverished melody and a stage otherwise deserted for long intervals except for the leading character communicating dull matter to the audience.

Chilean Music

The composition department's presentations gave added proof of the consensus that contemporary music-making is in a state of "evolution." A quintet of Fromm Fellowship players gave in intense and conscientious performance of a "Divertimento" by Celso Garrido-Lecca of Chile.

Best of the four movements was the "nocturne." It has ornamental passages in flute (well-played by John Perras) which are skillfully enclosed by oboe, clarinet, oboe and French horn.

Wesley Fuller of Norton played his "Piano Variations." The moods were well-defined, technique fluent, and indication was that the composer-pianist was bound by a positive approach. But the message of his music was an enigma to at least one listener.

The final weekend of the Berkshire Festival begins tonight. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings in E flat major, Opus 20, and Arrau will be soloist in Beethov- Debussy's. "La Mer.". Claudio Arrau will be soloist in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4 in G major, Opus 58.

Aunt Mary's

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
AUG 18 1961

At Tanglewood

Gala Evening Attendance Raises Harsh Questions

GALA EVENING, presented at Tanglewood, Lenox, by students in opera, composing, conducting, choral and orchestral sections of the Berkshire Music Center, assisted by members of the faculty, for the benefit of the Center's scholarship fund.

By FRANK PATTERSON

Unable to attend the Opera Department's one-act offerings in the afternoon, the "Gala Evening" began for us in the Chamber Music Hall with music composed by the students, and performed by musicians of the Fromm Music Foundation.

Though admittedly much contemporary music seems at times an affront to the intelligence of the performer and listener alike, there is as yet no better method known to find the true value of a work than to test it in concert. In addition, however, the six puzzling pieces presented by the students of Copland, Fortner and Gerhard seemed geared to make a guinea pig of the audience.

Stand Ground

However, despite repeated thrusts of hard, sharp, dull and awkward dissonances, abbreviated themes, embarrassing moments of profound sound lapse, the listeners not only stood their ground, but from appearances and applause seemed also to carefully judge the merits of what they heard. Rhythm and complexity is still the bete noir of the tome row cult, especially this lack of rhythm which creates so dull an exterior to the piece that one can find no crack to probe below the pleasure of mere surface listening, I'm afraid my hat is off to the audience.

The chorus under Ross, Patterson and student conductors created a thin powerless tone from its opportunistic stage on the porch of the Main House. Here it was smothered by standees, bedeviled by airplanes, kiddies and, most unfortunate, unsupported by a true acoustical shell.

The first piece by Gabrieli, Jubilate Deo, conducted by Reber, overcame this last difficulty by reason of its support by a brass ensemble. Le Chant des Oyseaux by Janequin drew quiet and attention by its novel grouping of four quartettes and a choir, all stationed at different points (including a second-story window) to create its effect, but the other works such as Brahms, Debussy and Williams were lost to the audience. The piano accompanist, who generally suffers less in such an open environment, was neither seen nor much heard, a modest merit but certainly an artistic fault.

Opened by de Carvalho

The Brazilian conductor, Eleazar de Carvalho, a former pupil of Koussevitzky and now a teacher of conducting at Tanglewood, opened the Shed concert with a superb reading of Haydn's Symphony No. 99.

That approximately only 3,600 came to hear this orchestra which probably rates with any U. S. orchestra in a city of up to 300,000 persons, raises some harsh questions. Are Berkshire audiences so blase? Is the B.S.O. so much more fashionable? Fie! Fie! When or where can one hear a musician like Munch fan enough confidence, music and fire into a six-week-old orchestra to make the Tchaikovsky overture "Romeo and Juliet" sound like success. Or, take Aaron Copland who not only composes, teaches and writes wonderfully, but conducts as well?

Alack, too honestly modest and respectful to be a great conductor, his compositions such as last night's excerpts from "The Tender Land," present music as it was surely intended to be. He leaves a listener always on top of his emotions, never a product of them; serious at times, yes, but seldom, if ever, sentimental. His slappy, tricky rhythms, characteristic trumpet brightness was, with this fine chorus, expert soloists and orchestra, a remarkable close to a remarkable evening.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 92,860
AUG 21 1961

Berlioz Work Rings Curtain At Tanglewood

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — When the Boston Symphony Orchestra first visited the Berkshires in 1936, it gave three concerts to audiences totaling 15,000. The 1961 Festival, concluded yesterday, was held for seven weeks and more than 210,000 heard its concerts, as against the 1960 Festival of six weeks, attended by more than 175,000. Next year the season will be further extended to eight weeks.

The final weekend brought Claudio Arrau as soloist on Fri- certo No. 4, and Gary Graffman on Saturday in the Rachmaninoff Piano Concerto No. 2. Both artists were highly praised, as were the conductors, Charles Munch in Mendelssohn and Debussy, and Pierre Monteux in Stravinsky and Tchaikovsky.

The season's last concert, yesterday afternoon, was a major work involving chorus and soloists, as has been the custom. In an effort to vary the fare from the Beethoven Ninth Symphony, which prevailed for several years, Dr. Munch chose Berlioz for the second year, shifting from last year's "The Damnation of Faust" to the dramatic symphony, "Romeo and Juliet."

Identical Number

The resulting audience numbered 8,860, almost identical with last year's attendance and far from a record-breaker. It would seem that audiences still like solo instrumentalists rather than large works involving choruses, except in the special case of Beethoven's Ninth, which always drew huge audiences.

The concert yesterday revealed virtuosic work by the 104-piece orchestra, the soloists, Florence Kopleff, contralto, John McCollum, tenor, and Donald Gramm, baritone, and by the Festival Chorus prepared by Hugh Ross, Alfred Nash Patterson and Willis Beckett. Nevertheless, one left with a confused feeling. The composer did a unique piece of work here, but he mixed his metaphors.

He insisted on eliminating Romeo and Juliet as real people, describing their love in orchestral passages. The chorus at first talks about the story, as does the contralto. But soon the tenor is given a part of Queen Mab's speech to sing, and later 29 men sing as young Capulets, definitely characterized.

Pure Bombast

And at the end, for something like 15 minutes, the bass, definitely singing as Friar Laurence, argues the definitely characterized Montague and Capulet throng into reconciliation. So Berlioz's boast that he was writing a symphony with no trace in it of opera or cantata was pure bombast. He wrote what he chose when he chose.

The beauties of the love scene were so great that one can only with embarrassment offer the comment that the story by that time seemed unreal, legendary and abstract rather than the warm human feelings of the world's most famous pair.

The chorus in the first half was about 80 voices, doubled later for the tremendous final scenes.

190 -1

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
AUG 21 1961

Tanglewood Ends

Seventh, Final Glorious Weekend Presented by BSO

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox.

Friday

Mendelssohn Octet for Strings
Debussy La Mer
Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 4
Charles Munch, Conductor

Saturday

Stravinsky Petrouchka
Rachmaninoff Piano Cncerto No. 2
Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 6
Pierre Monteux, Conductor

Sunday

Berlioz Romeo et Juliette
Charles Munch, Conductor

By FRANK PATTERSON

The seventh and final glorious weekend at Tanglewood proves quite adequately that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will not run out of steam when next year's eighth week rolls around. Two main dishes to this weekend's fare were the Beethoven Fourth and Rachmaninoff Second Piano Concertos, performed respectively by Arrau on a Baldwin Friday and Graffman on a Steinway Saturday.

No Just Comparison

A just comparison of these two keyboard artists based on such dissimilar music as Rachmaninoff and Beethoven is next to impossible. Mr. Arrau played from the piano opening theme to the cadenza of the first movement as straight an emotional performance as the demands of the work would allow. A reliance on amazing physical strength and brilliant piano technique is one's lasting impression of the artist's work. Though the cadenza and the succeeding movements showed a nuance of greater warmth his general performance left many conscicuous gaps of colorlessly executed material which unfortunately was of neutral value to the work as a whole in the first place.

Mr. Graffman's task with the 60-year-old Second Concerto was, to my mind, a larger problem. The work must have been noble and dignified at its first performance. However, the years of use have swollen its lush and graceful profile to a somewhat overweight and gushing Mrs. 1901. The wistful now seem coquette, the melancholy, maudlin; the exquisite themes a recall of a thousand blaring juke boxes.

The orchestra padding about quietly in the background, was under the circumstances both polite and helpful. Graffman's many attempts to ignite the work failed to produce a glowing fire; however, his intentions were most laudable. Though neither his technique nor physical power equaled that of the Chilean pianist, his expressiveness and warmth were on many occasions impressive. However, all the artist's care and all the orchestra's men could not instill life in this work again.

More Than Refreshing

In an age when to many a concert goer flashy conducting seems necessary to create "drama" in music, it is more than refreshing to hear the best in music directed with as reasonable restraint and self discipline as does Pierre Monteux. At 86 this musical titan to any podium has paid tribute not only to his own fabulous musical intellect but also amply indicated that those in front of the podium are not all recalcitrant numbskulls requiring outlandish antics to grasp a musical idea. Whether it be the rhythmical complexities of Stravinsky or the romantic indulgence of Tchaikovsky, only the mildest flurry of a baton is engaged by Monteux to produce the desired effect. This, mind you, is not at all a new result of old age, he has always conducted in this manner and he will undoubtedly retain this manner in his new position as conductor of the London Symphony.

Mr. Munch, who seems to like something happening all the time, managed to accomplish this during almost all of the Berlioz on Sunday. The chorus, amplified by 64 voices from the University and Civic Chorus of Montreal (provided on this trip by the Canadian government) performed their part well, albeit some lack of precision. And though the orchestra shared in some of these defects, the soloists, John McCollum, tenor and especially Donald Gramm, baritone, were nothing short of superb. Gramm's voice is a marvelous instrument in all its ranges. The ease with which he employs it, creates the deceptive impression that something must be missing. I'm qhite sure there isn't.

Roar of Applause

The roar of applause that met the musicians at the close of this work was not only for the Berlioz but for the entire season at Tanglewood. Despite ultra-sensitive critics, the standard peculiarities of weather, the massive problem of traffic to and from each concert, the occasional physical inadequacies and inconveniences, the so-called "provincial" programming, etc., etc., there appeared to be, from this applause, far more assets than debits to be remembered of the 1961 season.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 21 1961

Mitchell

LEAVING the Boston Symphony Orchestra are these two musicians who were presented to the audience at the end of the Festival season at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon by Dr. Charles Munch, center, conductor of the BSO. At left, Emil Korsand, a first violinist, who is retiring, and, at right, Theodore Brewster, a bassoon player, whose future plans are unknown.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Circ. 25,742
AUG 28 1961

191

Grace Notes — Summer Music Events Reviewed

TANGLEWOOD

Friday by E. G. S.

Both Tanglewood and its audience justified the extension of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer series to 7 weeks when the large audience heard one of the most rewarding programs of the season.

The first half of the program included music which was especially suited to the great talents of the orchestra's eminent conductor, Charles Munch. Clarity of design and brilliancy of string tone characterized Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings which although written for eight instruments was enhanced by the larger body of tone provided by the full string section. In the last movement Mr. Munch demanded the almost impossible in tempo but the players achieved even this.

In Debussy's La Mer it was obvious that Dr. Munch loves this music. Here was a master interpreter at work, combining the vivid and striking portrayal of the varying moods of the sea with the elusive impressions of the composer.

Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4 in G Major provided contrast in the last half of the program. To this, soloist Claudio Arrau brought conciseness, power, and brilliant technique.

Saturday by C. H. Thacher

Pierre Monteux conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra to a near capacity crowd. The performance consisted of works by Tchaikovsky, Rachmaninoff, and Stravinsky. This trio of Russian-born artists, have left an indelible mark on the music world.

Stravinsky's Suite from the Ballet Petrouchaka was a delightful piece in which the piano of Bernard Zighera was at times pitted against the sighing and braying of strident brass. Sometimes spritely, sometimes moody and somber, sometimes breaking into a tuneful melody, but always it was thoroughly enjoyable. The Suite was conducted with a sureness and perhaps a sense of nostalgia for it was Mr. Monteux's baton that first lead the Ballet 50 years ago at the Theâtre du Châtelet in Paris on June 13, 1911.

Gary Graffman was featured in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2. It was a masterful display of concert artistry with Mr. Graffman able to move from lyric sweetness to pyrotechnical frenzy with ease and sureness.

Last was heard Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6, Pathetique with its ever-familiar, ever-moving themes deftly woven throughout the entire work by a composer at the peak of his creative prowess.

Sunday by G. G. V.

The Boston Symphony wound up its annual summer stand with the Dramatic Symphony Romeo et Juliette, Op. 17 by Hector Berlioz. Inspired by Shakespeare's famous tragedy, the Berlioz Romeo incorporated innumerable musical innovations when written in 1839. Not only has it withstood the test of time but it is music of a genre with which Conductor Munch is most sympathetic.

Of the instrumental portions of this nearly two hour long work, the Queen Mab Scherzo gets our nod. This airy, fairy music demonstrated real virtuosity, both in writing and performance. Tenor soloist John McCollum showed considerable musicianship as well as fine French diction. Contralto Florence Kopleff and baritone Donald Gramm also did creditable jobs.

Much of this piece depends upon effective choral work. It is worthy of note that a very slightly augmented Tanglewood Choir of perhaps 60 voices carried this assignment for the first, and longer section of Romeo. The 24 or so men of this group provoked uniformly favorable comment in the eminently singable Ah, quelle nuit, quel festin. For the last half, the Festival Chorus was ably abetted by a group of Habitants who had come down from Montreal just for the occasion. Why mention of them was omitted from the program remains one of the unsolved mysteries of the summer.

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES
D. 34,403
AUG 24 1961

Monteux, Students Score In Tanglewood Events

By FREDERICK J. KOUNTZ

The Boston Orchestra's Berkshire Festival and Berkshire Music Center which have been materially flourishing at Tanglewood in western Massachusetts since 1940, concluded their work for the summer last weekend. So too did the Marlboro Music Festival and Marlboro School of Music in southern Vermont, which have been materially struggling since 1950.

At the last but one of the Berkshire concerts Pierre Monteux, who, at an age when most conductors have already been inactivated for a decade or more, has lately been appointed music director of the London Philharmonic, was the conductor; Gary Graffman, a pianist of high technical proficiency, was the soloist, and the Boston Orchestra of course was simply itself, which, in the Berkshire surroundings at least, remains a very fine commodity in music. Mr. Monteux directed the playing of Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" Suite, Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2, and Tchaikowsky's Symphony No. 6 And on hand to listen to all these matters was an audience of slightly more than 12,000.

Students Do Well

Earlier in the same day a substantial segment of the 12,000 had attended a concert by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, a group composed entirely of instrumental students in the center. This orchestra was directed for the occasion only by student conductors, two from France, two from our country, all of them trained to a high degree of technical skill, one of them, beyond his technical prowess, already a musician of perception. The student orchestra was instrumentally skillful, eagerly responsive, and trained to a remarkably cohesive unity. And the communal sound it made was amazingly exact and sonorous.

This summer undertaking of the Boston Orchestra, school and public concerts, is by far the largest, most efficient, and most productive of its kind in the country. Many observers, who have known it since its inception, have professed to feel that it has become commercial. It is commercial in the sense that every summer it gives more public concerts, trains more students toward the professional practice of music and affords a larger income to more professional musicians than any like enterprise in our land.

Enlargement Causes Concern

Others have been concerned that in its constant enlargement it is in the way of becoming something other than its founder, Serge Koussevitzky, ever intended it should be. The tenth anniversary of Mr. Koussevitzky's death was commemorated in three concerts by the orchestra this summer. And now, after 10 years without the man who founded and nurtured the undertaking to a kind of granite-like durability, what we should remember of him is not so much what he planned, but what he did. Had there been no Koussevitzky there would presently be no Berkshire Festival as this one is constituted.

And in a country as large and as materially flourishing as ours there is a place for a matter like the Berkshire Festival. In no other locality could one have heard this summer so brilliant, so glittering, so exactly perceptive, so wholly electrifying a performance of Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" as I heard from Mr. Monteux, the man who was on the podium in Paris when the work received its first public performance, and from the Boston Orchestra which, when it is enlightened, is capable of playing Stravinsky's music in utterly matchless fashion.

In no other locality this summer could one have observed a student orchestra so professionally prepared for the professional life which presumably lies ahead of most of its members.

It is indeed an enormous business in music, set in the most breath-takingly beautiful surroundings, conducted with a maximum of professional efficiency.

Not only is there a place for this kind of thing; in our kind of country there is a need of it. But there is also a need that it should be recognized for what it is; that other, completely different, and balancing undertakings in music should be recognized for what they are. We shall recognize one of them tomorrow.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Circ. 25,742
AUG 28 1961

Grace Notes — Summer Music Events Reviewed

TANGLEWOOD

Friday by E. G. S.

Both Tanglewood and its audience justified the extension of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer series to 7 weeks when the large audience heard one of the most rewarding programs of the season.

The first half of the program included music which was especially suited to the great talents of the orchestra's eminent conductor, Charles Munch. Clarity of design and brilliancy of string tone characterized Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings which although written for eight instruments was enhanced by the larger body of tone provided by the full string section. In the last movement Mr. Munch demanded the almost impossible in tempo but the players achieved even this.

In Debussy's La Mer it was obvious that Dr. Munch loves this music. Here was a master interpreter at work, combining the vivid and striking portrayal of the varying moods of the sea with the elusive impressions of the composer.

Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4 in G Major provided contrast in the last half of the program. To this, soloist Claudio Arrau brought conciseness, power, and brilliant technique.

Saturday by C. H. Thacher

Pierre Monteux conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra to a near capacity crowd. The performance consisted of works by Tchaikovsky, Rachmaninoff, and Stravinsky. This trio of Russian-born artists, have left an indelible mark on the music world.

Stravinsky's Suite from the Ballet Petrouchaka was a delightful piece in which the piano of Bernard Zighera was at times pitted against the sighing and braying of strident brass. Sometimes spritely, sometimes moody and somber, sometimes breaking into a tuneful melody, but always it was thoroughly enjoyable. The Suite was conducted with a sureness and perhaps a sense of nostalgia for it was Mr. Monteux's baton that first lead the Ballet 50 years ago at the Theâtre du Châtelet in Paris on June 13, 1911.

Gary Graffman was featured in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2. It was a masterful display of concert artistry with Mr. Graffman able to move from lyric sweetness to pyrotechnical frenzy with ease and sureness.

Last was heard Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6, Pathetique with its ever-familiar, ever-moving themes deftly woven throughout the entire work by a composer at the peak of his creative prowess.

Sunday by G. G. V.

The Boston Symphony wound up its annual summer stand with the Dramatic Symphony Romeo et Juliette, Op. 17 by Hector Berlioz. Inspired by Shakespeare's famous tragedy, the Berlioz Romeo incorporated innumerable musical innovations when written in 1839. Not only has it withstood the test of time but it is music of a genre with which Conductor Munch is most sympathetic.

Of the instrumental portions of this nearly two hour long work, the Queen Mab Scherzo gets our nod. This airy, fairy music demonstrated real virtuosity, both in writing and performance. Tenor soloist John McCollum showed considerable musicianship as well as fine French diction. Contralto Florence Kopleff and baritone Donald Gramm also did creditable jobs.

Much of this piece depends upon effective choral work. It is worthy of note that a very slightly augmented Tanglewood Choir of perhaps 60 voices carried this assignment for the first, and longer section of Romeo. The 24 or so men of this group provoked uniformly favorable comment in the eminently singable Ah, quelle nuit, quel festin. For the last half, the Festival Chorus was ably abetted by a group of Habitants who had come down from Montreal just for the occasion. Why mention of them was omitted from the program remains one of the unsolved mysteries of the summer.

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES
D. 34,403
AUG 24 1961

Monteux, Students Score In Tanglewood Events

By FREDERICK J. KOUNTZ

The Boston Orchestra's Berkshire Festival and Berkshire Music Center which have been materially flourishing at Tanglewood in western Massachusetts since 1940, concluded their work for the summer last weekend. So too did the Marlboro Music Festival and Marlboro School of Music in southern Vermont, which have been materially struggling since 1950.

At the last but one of the Berkshire concerts Pierre Monteux, who, at an age when most conductors have already been inactivated for a decade or more, has lately been appointed music director of the London Philharmonic, was the conductor, Gary Graffman, a pianist of high technical proficiency, was the soloist, and the Boston Orchestra of course was simply itself, which, in the Berkshire surroundings, at least, remains a very fine commodity in music. Mr. Monteux directed the playing of Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" Suite, Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2, and Tchaikowsky's Symphony No. 6. And on hand to listen to all these matters was an audience of slightly more than 12,000.

Students Do Well

Earlier in the same day a substantial segment of the 12,000 had attended a concert by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, a group composed entirely of instrumental students in the center. This orchestra was directed for the occasion only by student conductors, two from France, two from our country, all of them trained to a high degree of technical skill, one of them, beyond his technical prowess, already a musician of perception. The student orchestra was instrumentally skillful, eagerly responsive, and trained to a remarkably cohesive unity. And the communal sound it made was amazingly exact and sonorous.

This summer undertaking of the Boston Orchestra, school and public concerts, is by far the largest, most efficient, and most productive of its kind in the country. Many observers who have known it since its inception have professed to feel that it has become commercial. It is commercial in the sense that every summer it gives more public concerts, trains more students toward the professional practice of music and affords a larger income to more professional musicians than any like enterprise in our land.

Enlargement Causes Concern

Others have been concerned that in its constant enlargement it is in the way of becoming something other than its founder, Serge Koussevitzky, ever intended it should be. The tenth anniversary of Mr. Koussevitzky's death was commemorated in three concerts by the orchestra this summer. And now, after 10 years without the man who founded and nurtured the undertaking to a kind of granite-like durability, what we should remember of him is not so much what he planned, but what he did. Had there been no Koussevitzky there would presently be no Berkshire Festival as this one is constituted.

And in a country as large and as materially flourishing as ours there is a place for a matter like the Berkshire Festival. In no other locality could one have heard this summer so brilliant, so glittering, so exactly perceptive, so wholly electrifying a performance of Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" as I heard from Mr. Monteux, the man who was on the podium in Paris when the work received its first public performance, and from the Boston Orchestra which, when it is enlightened, is capable of playing Stravinsky's music in utterly matchless fashion.

In no other locality this summer could one have observed a student orchestra so professionally prepared for the professional life which presumably lies ahead of most of its members.

It is indeed an enormous business in music, set in the most breath-takingly beautiful surroundings, conducted with a maximum of professional efficiency.

Not only is there a place for this kind of thing; in our kind of country there is a need of it. But there is also a need that it should be recognized for what it is; that other, completely different, and balancing undertakings in music should be recognized for what they are. We shall recognize one of them tomorrow.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122

AUG 27 1961

Second Thoughts On Music

Tanglewood's Final Week Credit to Fine Conductors

Messrs. Munch and Monteux Manifest Great Eloquence and Skill in Berkshire Concerts

By WILLARD M. CLARK

The final week-end concerts of the 1961 Berkshire Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on its estate, "Tanglewood," was made eloquent by the musical approach and skill of conductors Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux, the latter making the third and last appearance of the season. Monteux's visit to Tanglewood this season has been a triumph. Now as principal conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra, he goes on to new triumphs at an age, 87, when most people are retired or thinking more of pipe and slippers than of their profession.

Attractive Program

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened the week end concert with an attractive program which included Mendelssohn's "Octet for Strings in E flat major" "La Mer" by Debussy and Beethoven's "Piano Concerto No. 4 in G. major" with Claudio Arrau as soloist.

Mendelssohn's opus is a challenge for any orchestra and seemed made to order for the magnificent string section of the BSO. One listened to highly polished, beautifully toned playing of a real virtuoso type. Mr. Munch had everything well in hand as tempo grew faster. This was a glittering performance which few orchestras today can duplicate.

Debussy and Munch seem to go together. The French conductor knows Debussy's medium well and his interpretations of the master's work are perceptive and extremely beautiful. In "La Mer," Mr. Munch created an ensemble in which every note was given its due; every phrase became a picture and every color imaginable was used to paint this impression of the sea in its many moods.

Grateful Ground

Having given a recital devoted to the piano music of Franz Liszt, Claudio Arrau found himself on more grateful ground as he played Beethoven's G major piano concerto. The Chilean pianist is a good workman relying as much on intellect as technique to communicate music.

He played with notable style, exquisite taste and had he had a piano responsive to his demands, this would have been an outstanding performance. Several times during this season, pianists have appeared handicapped by non-responsive pianos.

The appearance of Monteux at the second concert was cause for considerable tumult—a sort of "Hail and Farewell" affair. He opened his program with a strong performance of a suite from Stravinsky's ballet "Petrouchka," a work with which he has been closely associated since its first performance.

Using a minimum of gestures, Monteux was able to evoke impressive sonorities and some lovely, delicate phrases. The ballet unfolded with a naturalness which needed only the dancers and settings to become a live performance. Stravinsky's music is often wry and sour in sound, but his uncanny skill of creating a whole tapestry out of scattered melodic material offsets much of the aural unpleasantness which may be caused the listener. Monteux's performance was warm, vital and to the point.

good one this season, was on hand as were soloists, Florence Kopleff as Juliet; John McCollum as Romeo and Donald Gramm as Friar Laurence.

Challenges Offered

There are powerful passages in this work along with passages of extreme delicacy and incomparable beauty. There are also challenges for the singers, as for example the tenuous, lively Scherzetto for tenor which Mr. McCollum made more of an operatic aria than we believe was intended by the composer. It was also sung too slowly.

There are no vocal problems for Florence Kopleff, she just opens her mouth and an even, gorgeous flow of tone emerges. She sang Juliet in the grand manner, yet with a sense of youthfulness inherent in the character. Vocal honor must also go to bass-baritone Donald Gramm. He sang with wonderful vitality and provided a gorgeous tone which soared over the orchestra at all times. Gramm has always done a fine job at Tanglewood and is always welcome.

The reaction of the audience to this final performance was tremendous. It was as though feelings kept in hand during the past seven weeks were unleashed and that shriek of bravos and pounding applause were necessary to express the appreciation of the audience.

Mr. Munch will be at Tanglewood next season for a period of eight weeks, after which his resignation will become effective. It seems to us that Munch will go down in the orchestra's history as a conductor who lived up to his initial words to the orchestra, "Let us make beautiful music together." That he has done.

Tasteful Performance

Gary Graffman is an American pianist who has climbed steadily to his present eminence. He is a direct young man who becomes fully engrossed in whatever he is playing and puts on a neat, tasteful performance. Graffman is not as flashy as some of his colleagues, but he is sound and was able to play Rachmaninoff's "Piano concerto in C minor" with a style and technical efficiency that made it something more than a vehicle for display. He received fine collaboration from Mr. Munch and the orchestra.

The final work on the Monteux program was Tschaikowsky's "Symphony No. 6 in B minor," (the Pathetique). There is little one can add to the reams of words written about this symphony and the manner of its interpretation. Monteux drew on his vast experience, his understanding of the score and the readiness of the music itself to move a listener, and provided an expansive, full-throated performance which brought him a well deserved ovation.

Charles Munch assumed direction of the orchestra for the final concert of the season. It has been traditional to end the festival with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, but this year, Munch chose to close with "Romeo and Juliet," the symphonic drama by Hector Berlioz.

It drew a sizeable audience as it had not been heard for several seasons. The Tanglewood Festival Chorus, a very

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
AUG 21 1961

TANGLEWOOD'S FINALE DRAWS LARGE CROWD

Performances Hailed as 24th Berkshire Festival Is Concluded

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — The 24th Berkshire festival ended Sunday afternoon with a large audience on hand to hear a stunning performance of that tremendous dramatic symphony "Romeo and Juliet" by Hector Berlioz, conducted by Charles Munch. The performance was a notable achievement for all participants.

"Beautifully Controlled"

The glorious voice of Florence Kopleff assumed the role of Juliet. John McCollom struggled with the role of Romeo and Donald Gramm proved a sonorous and vital Friar Lawrence. The festival chorus, augmented by a group of voices from Montreal, sang with beautifully controlled tone and a fine display of subtle colorations, as, for example, in the "Calm Night," where the male section provided particularly fine texture.

The work is long but had been liberally cut for this performance. Miss Kopleff, looking very lovely, sang with tonal opulence and the perfect technique which characterizes all her singing. Fine enunciation of the French text was also noted, with the chorus coming in for special recognition in this area. Mr. McCollom sang the treacherous, demanding scherzetto with considerable style and obvious effort. We have heard this excellent tenor to better advantage during his several visits to Tanglewood.

Donald Gramm, in the finale of this work, sang with superb assurance, brilliant tone and power. As Friar Lawrence, his plea for peace between the Capulets and Montagues was probably the finest individual bit of the afternoon. The final oath of reconciliation between the two houses found the chorus at its best.

Orchestra Is Glory

After all, the glory of this performance was the orchestra. Like Wagner, Berlioz could pour out his heart and use his skill most completely with only the orchestra and some of the most arresting moments occur when the singers are silent. (Witness the gossamer magic of the Queen Mab scherzo or the grandeur of festivities at the Capulets'.) Mr. Munch conducted with sure touch and full acquaintance with the score. It was no wonder that the audience reaction was a tumultuous ovation — perhaps a release of feeling after seven weeks of music.

There are statistics about this seven weeks season which may prove of interest. For the money-minded, let it be known that the attendance totaled 210,438 persons, while the 1960 six-week season drew 173,539.

The two gala performances for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center brought a total of 14,429 persons as against 15,616 in 1960. For the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund seven open rehearsals drew 26,675 persons and the Danny Kaye concert drew 6300. For this concert ticket sales were limited to Shed capacity plus bleachers. No general admission tickets were sold.

Music: Berkshire Festival Ends With Berlioz

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The 24th Berkshire Music Festival ended yesterday afternoon at Tanglewood with the lavish solemnity of Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" Dramatic Symphony, Opus 17.

Charles Munch conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra and festival chorus of Berkshire Center students, joined by 50 members of the University of Montreal Chorus. Soloists were Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor; Donald Gramm, baritone.

Yesterday's audience of 8,860 brought the total on weekends to 28,721.

Total attendance for the seven weeks was 163,034, with receipts of $533,136, as against last summer's six-week attendance of 138,871, totalling receipts of $452,112.50.

The choice of the Berlioz masterwork for yesterday's closing concert certainly wasn't by public acclamation. It obviously is a favorite of Munch, whose status as a Berlioz interpreter is not to be challenged.

"Romeo and Juliet," in the Berlioz setting, is heard mostly in orchestral-excerpt form. It fares best in this version. No matter how nostalgic one might feel about Berlioz, or rhapsodic over Shakespeare's story, the blunt fact remains that large segments of the symphony are downright bore—for example, the "Love Scene" in orchestral form that goes on and on.

Romantic Cellos

Since Berlioz adamantly avoided creating dramatic personalities in the operatic or cantata sense, one encounters Romeo only in the cello sertion. Juliet, Mercutio and Friar Laurence sing narration in the style of brief recitatives. The chorus has the most to say, but it, too, makes periodic news reports.

Accepting these conditions as the status quo, what one heard yesterday was a marvelous performance of the work as it stands.

It was Munch's prerogative to lead the orchestra through an introduction that sounded hurried, excitable, verging on the melodramatic. Declarative statements reverberated through low brass, interspersed with typical Berlioz devices, including rough, separated pizzicatos and growls in low strings.

The orchestra excelled in three portions upon which the work rests most of its weight. "Romeo Alone" was depicted with rare richness by the strings, bridged to the "Festivity Scene" with a fervid mood in clarinets. The culmination was a boisterous demonstration, an aliveness that the performance lacked up to this point.

Second orchestral highspot was the "Queen Mab Scherzo." It was admirably fragile, played at high speed, perfectly coordinated within strings and woodwinds. The effect was a hive of buzzing insects to which miniature cymbals added bright color.

The third orchestral triumph was the "Invocation," set in the tomb of the Capulets. Munch tastefully dramatized the sequence from Juliet's awakening to Romeo's despair, depicted in brash, brassy screams over droning low strings.

It's a wonder that the chorus had a clear knowledge of exactly what it was expected to accomplish. The center chorus had been "prepared" by Hugh Ross, Alfred Nash Patterson and Willis Beckett. The Montreal group was "prepared" by Fernand Graton, and, of course, Munch conducted. Who said, "Too many cooks spoil the broth?"

French pronunciations were excellent and many singers made the effort to memorize their scores. While some choral results weren't particularly exciting, there were outstanding moments.

Persuasive Prologue

The prologue was persuasively sung, making clear issue of the "two households in Fair Verona . . . and their ancient grudge." The single-tone dirge in Juliet's funeral music was deeply-ingrained with fervor, but the bulk of the credit goes to the men's chorus for exhilirating songs of revelry, interjected in the orchestral love scene.

Miss Kopleff sang her two metrical verses with a rich-qualitied voice, projected with ease and sensitively phrased. In appearance and interpretation, however, she gave little credence to the romantic ardor with which Juliet sings of love's delights.

McCollum was a bit wooden in Mercutio's difficult "Queen Mab speech." He sang the animated and wordy message with thin tones, half-spoken style and operatic traces alien to the intentions of the composer.

A compelling dramatic spirit surrounded Gramm's soliloquy, in which Friar Laurence persuades the Montagues and Capulets to look upon the deaths of the lovers as a dread example of folly.

193

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 21 1961

Music Review

Glorious Finale at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE 1961 Berkshire Festival came to a triumphal close yesterday afternoon with a deeply moving performance of Belioz' dramatic symphony "Romeo et Juliette." The Boston Symphony Orchestra was assisted by the Festival Chorus and three soloists. Charles Munch, who will terminate his association with the orchestra one year hence, was accorded a tremendous tribute at the close, and had to stop the demonstration diplomatically so he could get away to catch his plane for Paris.

Each conductor has his favorites. For Munch it has been Berlioz, and the Boston programs have never included so many of his works under any other leader. Through this acquaintanceship Berlioz has thus assumed his true size in musicdom's picture, and yesterday's exhibit was the most telling evidence of his eminence in musical history. How much Wagner is indebted to him can be at least partially gauged by this magnificent performance of "Romeo."

* * *

THE SYMPHONY follows the Shakespearean play fairly faithfully, and Berlioz utilizes his vast resourcefulness in picturing the high lights of the drama. He depicts the initial tumult by a fugue which is the least academic exercise of this form imaginable. This leads into the first chorus in which the hatred between the Capulets and Montagues is related.

Contralto soloist Florence Kopleff did the strophic song with pristine beauty. Her voice had a stunningly easy and powerful fluency in the first verse with only a harp background. The second time the cellos have a lovely obbligato melody.

Tenor John McCollum's assignment is a volatile set of verses for Mercutio which he discharged with a fine sense of propriety and humor. Berlioz' grasp of situations prompted him to delineate Romeo's sadness with the first violins unaccompanied singing a melancholy plaint. This same command and comprehension served him later in a similar manner when, for Juliet's funeral procession, he was evidently convinced that no harmonic devices could reveal tragedy as well as monotone voices intoning and reiterating "lay the flowers."

* * *

THE FESTIVAL was augmented by the chorus of the University of Montreal whose preparation by Fernand Graton was recognized when he was called out with Hugh Ross at the end of the symphony. The maintainence of an exquisite timbre in the most restrained sections here was one of the marvels of the afternoon. The Boston viola section distinguished itself in the following movement.

Baritone Donald Gramm has his ample opportunities only in the last half. As Friar Lawrence, he sang with dominant vitality. He first has a declamation to make but later his "aura sa peine" was magnificently shaped. Munch made the reconciliation of the two families at the close of the symphony awesome. The purely orchestral movements, the love scene and the Queen Mab scherzo were poignant and brilliant.

* * *

ONE OF THE sober functions which have become a feature of the season's final concert is the presentation to the audience of the men who are to retire from the orchestra. Munch brought up bassoonist Theodore Brewster, who is leaving the orchestra for other pursuits, and Emil Kornsand who is retiring after long service in the first violin section and who is to devote himself to composition.

Gary Graffman

* * *

SATURDAY NIGHT there was an all-Russian program: Stravinsky, Rachmaninoff and Tchaikovsky. A near-record audience, favored by one of Berkshire's clearest evenings, and at tinderheat all night, was ignited into typical Tanglewood excitment by the sparks of the Boston Orchestra with Pierre Monteux as conductor and Gary Graffman, piano soloist.

In 1911 in Paris, Monteux conducted the premiere of Stravinsky's ballet, Petrouchka. Saturday he played a suite from it which omits most of the first scene and starts with the boisterous Russian dance, played with high exhilaration by pianist Bernard Zighera, which was devised to astonish the commedia dell'arte audience.

* * *

THE SUITE makes but short stops in the score until it arrives at the fourth scene—the grand carnival — and then it ends unexpectedly and unsatisfactorily while the masqueraders are still dancing in full fury before the death of Pierrot (or Petrouchka as he was called in Russia) occurs in the ballet.

This was epoch-making music. The imaginative orchestration goes beyond previously established concepts; the rhythmic and harmonic innovations and the whole drama made this a landmark in muscial progress and probably of more historical importance than the soon-to-follow, "Sacre" which marked the peak of Stravinsky's exploration in that direction. The Bostonians made it vivid and fanatically vehement for Monteux. He brought Zighera to the front on one of his recalls to allow the huge, enraptured audience to show him their ela-tion.

GRAFFMAN PLAYED the immensely popular second concerto of Rachmaninoff, a work of his late '20s, as Petrouchka had been of Stravinsky. The rich and luscious allotments the composer gives the orchestra no doubt contribute immensely to the winning qualities of this concerto. How familiar George Gershwin was with this music would reveal much of what we categorize as "Broadway." Just what the name of the street in Moscow may be where in 1900 such lush material found fertile soil might label it more definitely.

The music sways very close to comic opera style at times, but it is infectiously ingratiating. That Rachmaninoff, himself one of the outstanding pianists of his generation, should know how to favor his instrument is not suprising, but Graffman took full advantage of all the titanic opportunities permitted him. The tremendously effective nine bars of chords in the introduction were not only deeply sonorous but advanced from modesty to passion with discernible cumulative steps. Graffman practically made his keyboard sing with the material an operatic tenor would just love to open his throat with. The slow movement is a lachrymose holiday for a pianist. Graffman kept the sentiment restrained emotionally, but pianistically indulged in all the inflections to which his high sense of artistry guided him. All who love a good cry had, with the Pathetique which was to follow, a field day.

* * *

GRAFFMAN ROSE to scintillating heights in the gayer finale. His playing was marked with quiet confidence and absolute command, and the clarity of the swift passages always was subservient to a round and strong tone. The performance won a veritable and deserved explosion of applause which continued to reverberate through many recalls.

Monteux's reading of the Tchaikovsky "sixth" is somewhat more classical than those commonly encountered. It never sacrifices any of the inner romantic content, yet it never subsides into affectation. The orchestra sounded magnificent.

* * *

IF ONE ASKS the question of what it is that attracts huge audiences to Tanglewood, the answer might include the standard of the performances, one's preference in programing, the individual artists, the grounds, the area, the milling crowds, and so on, but the intangible excitement which is Tanglewood is probably the most memorable feature of the adventure. The demonstrations which follow the big performances, and even, sad to say, some less discriminatingly applauded, are outlets which no other cultural institution affords. One can't climb Mt. Everest every day, but Tanglewood over the years and certainly this season carried its audiences to heights of supreme terrestrial loftiness and sometimes even beyond.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • KIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 19 1961

Music Review

Tanglewood's Home Stretch

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

TANGLEWOOD 1961 has but two concerts to go, tonight and tomorrow afternoon. Last night a program of Mendelssohn, Debussy and Beethoven brought a crowd of 7,163 to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch with Claudio Arrau as piano soloist.

This is the first year that the season has been extended to seven weeks. Interest and attendance have vindicated the decision to add the extra week. The plan to extend it still another week next year, to eight weeks, is already announced.

Munch led the string section of the orchestra in the Mendelssohn octet, a brilliant work no matter what the age of the composer, but when written by a 16-year-old it seems almost incredible. It was intended to be played by four violins and two each of violas and cellos. Only a virtuoso orchestra should dare it. The Bostonians played it with moderate brillance.

* * *

MUNCH SET a space-capsule tempo where it was at all possible but it failed to strike sparks. it was heavy and pedestrian and the balance was off-kilter. He tolerated accents beyond requirements and requested a flexibility outside of symemtry. It's still good music and the 58-man string section of the Boston orchestra is an instrument of superlative competence.

From the definite and precise Mendelssohn to the gossamer, diaphanous Debussy is a vast distance. The same qualities that permit the Bostonians to do the nimble midsummer night's dream dances of Mendelssohn serve then to draw the vague transient lines and shapes of "La Mer." Debussy rarely established a rhythm, but shifts from one metric pattern to another. The three movements of La Mer record his seaside impressions and require no great imagination to visualize.

This is music in which Munch revels, and in which the orchestra puts its extravagant talents to best display. Debussy writes wonderfully grateful parts for the horns and the harps, and also for the reeds. In fact, no section has a dull moment and Munch brought them together with easy coherence.

* * *

ARRAU PLAYED the Beethoven fourth concerto in G major, Opus 58, a work of the same period as the fifth symphony. The soloist did not reach his normal high plane until well along in the concerto. At the outset he tried too hard, it seemed. He strived for simplicity with the result that his playing sounded strained.

In the swift arpeggios he was extremely reliant but the pauses were excessive, and in the slow movement he tried for tone and neglected the cantabile feature of the content. In the rondo, however, he was again the Arrau who can fix and hold an audience by his gusto. The reception he received showed that the audience was delighted with his performance.

Show for Weller

JAMAICA, N.Y.
LONG ISLAND PRESS
D. 295,125 S. 374,507
AUG 26 1961

194

These Days

Fiddlers Don't Make the Met

By GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY

The strike of the Metropolitan Opera musicians may be settled before this is printed, but the subject requires discussion just the same.

George Sokolsky

The musicians of the Metropolitan Opera demanded an increase of from $170 to $248 a week, with a decrease of performances from seven to six weekly. This demand was made despite the fact that the total deficit of the opera last year was $840,000. If business is business, when there is a deficit of this magnitude the place must sooner or later close down.

It can be argued that if a man works on a job he is entitled to the pay he can get despite deficits. But that does not hold for an opera company, which always produces a deficit. As a matter of fact, many of the subscribers, in addition to paying for their seats, make a contribution to cut down the deficit. This cannot go on forever.

A musician does not earn as much as many truck drivers, but then he has freedom of choice. He can stop playing the bassoon and get a job as a truck driver and join Mr. Hoffa's union.

* * *

THIS CHARACTERISTIC of a free society, namely, that a man chooses his own way of life and suffers the consequences of his choice, is too often forgotten these days.

All fiddlers start out more or less the same but one becomes a Kreisler or an Elman and another plays sweet music in a dark restaurant. All sorts of factors enter into this one fact in life. Toscanini played a cello; Monteux played a violin; Koussevitzky played a bass fiddle — but these men became great conductors, among the greatest of all time. Who can explain why Mozart could play the piano at 3 years of age or that Beethoven could compose the world's most glorious music despite of being deaf?

Those who play in the Metropolitan Orchestra must be excellent musicians just as those who sing in the chorus possess fine quality — but there was only one Caruso, one Farrar, one Schumann-Heink, only one Chaliapin. There are no choruses of such voices or of such actors.

The Metropolitan is not a burlesque show and cannot find artists in the honky-tonks. Its stars are difficult to discover. It is true that sometimes a wonder is found in a Rumanian restaurant or in a movie house but this happens so rarely that it makes news. Generally the stars are hard-drilled artists who come by their positions through Herculean labors. Whereas it is possible to find a dozen second violinists, it is not easy to find one great tenor or one glorious baritone. This takes constant searching and seeking and among opera houses there is a constant competition for the best. European opera houses have government subsidies which help cover the high cost of stars.

What has happened is that the musicians' union began to make its compromises too late and many of the best stars made other commitments. Of course, should the strike be settled, it might be possible for Rudolph Bing to find young Americans or young Europeans who could step forward. It might be a wonderful opportunity for a young man or young woman.

* * *

LAST SUNDAY, I heard such a baritone who sang Berlioz's "Romeo et Juliette" at Tanglewood. You may recall that the very end of this operatic symphony deals with the reconciliation of the two quarrelsome households. It is such music as can only come from Heaven, and Donald Gramm, the baritone, sang like an angel.

Something happened to that audience of several thousand. During the performance, the silence was as powerful as the music and when Charles Munch put down his baton, the huge audience rose, as one man, and cheered as though somehow they had broken through all the miseries of this era and had found the road to an armistice and peace.

True an orchestra and a chorus helped to produce this glorious music, but certain artists stood out because art is individual.

I must have gone to many hundreds of concerts in my day but I never encountered an emotional experience like this. It was not superb; it was grandiloquent and one felt small as before a giant sequoia.

Munch embraced the young baritone as each of us wanted to. Genius can be found but it does not bargain for bread.

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
AUG 23 1961

Berkshire Festival Ends With 'Romeo And Juliet'

Three exceptional concerts marked the seventh and final weekend of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. It was brought to an inspirational close Sunday afternoon by Charles Munch, with the performance of Berlioz' Dramatic Symphony, "Romeo and Juliet."

The impressive work is dedicated to Paganini, who may have been its benefactor. Emotional inspiration was derived from performances of the Shakespearean play at the Odeon theatre in Paris in 1827, whose star, Henrietta Smithson, Berlioz wooed madly for six years, and finally won as his wife. It was first performed in 1839, the year it was composed, with the composer conducting. Richard Wagner, whose name was on Berlioz' free ticket list, attended, and was one of the many who were outspokenly enthusiastic by its wonderful combination of music and poetry.

An accepted master of Berlioz' works, Mr. Munch, with his musicians and singers, transmitted the appealing purity and uplifted mood of the music with meticulous attention to every precise detail. In the first section Florence Kopleff was heard in the contralto role, and John McCollum in the tenor parts, agreeably voiced. The University of Montreal Chorus performed with exactitude and sensitivity, as the chorus, their diction not the least part of the enjoyment. They were joined by the Festival Chorus and baritone Donald Gramm for the final scenes.

The cumulative effect of the orchestration carried the performers to an ecstatic climax upheld by the magic of Munch's conducting. All participants shared in a standing ovation from the listeners which lasted for many minutes.

Friday evening's concert began with Mendelssohn's magnificent Octet for Strings. Still a model of its type, the first of its kind, it is staggering to realize that this cleanly wrought piece was written by a fastidious and knowing youth of sixteen. The exposition was flawless, the Scherzo softly staccato throughout, a delicious morsel. Debussy's impressionistic "La Mer" was drawn with haunting fascination and pure style by Dr. Munch and the symphony, the audience transported from beginning to end.

For Claudio Arrau's second appearance during the week at Tanglewood, the artist chose Beethoven's fourth piano concerto in G major. If the piano could have spoken as evocatively as Mr. Arrau, the performance would have been outstanding. Nuances were finished with grace and exactitude, the reading much better than the instrument, whose resonance was blanketed and dull. Listeners were demonstrably appreciative of the artist and the orchestra, along with their co-ordinator, Charles Munch.

Saturday evening, newly appointed director of the London Symphony, Pierre Monteux, was greeted by a crowd of 12,698. The Music Shed had been sold out since noon. A sparkling beginning was Stravinsky's Suite from the Ballet "Petrouchka." New discoveries were made with this relaxed reading, so graphically displayed, with crystal clear exposition of every mood.

Gary Graffman was soloist next in Rachmaninoff's second piano concerto. A follower and disciple of Tschaikowsky, though not in an emotional sense, Rachmaninoff was avowedly indebted to a pioneer in autosuggestion, Dr. N. Dahl, for renewing his creative urge in order to write this work. The performance was more moving than the Tschaikowsky "Pathetique" which closed the program. Mr. Graffman's weighted tone resounded throbbingly, his prodigious technique overpowering in the composer's demands. Applause was spontaneous and lengthy.

Mr. Monteux savored every phrase of the Pathetique, his classic interpretation sound but not sensuous. There was no over emphasis on any of the well-known melodies, the tone silken, not velvet.

Total attendance for the seventh weekend reached 33,239. This is the 11th and penultimate season of Charles Munch's Symphony and Festival direction. Total for the six weeks was 175,759, as compared to 1960's 173,579. Grand total for the increased seven weeks was 210,438.

The 1962 Berkshire Festival will be extended from seven to eight weeks. It will open on July 6 and will consist of 24 weekend concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra plus a chamber music series on Wednesday evenings and events by students of the Berkshire Music Center, the Orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood.

— M. deB. B.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
AUG 19 1961

Orchestra, Soloist Hailed For Tanglewood Program

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — The first of the three final week-end concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood drew an audience of 7163 to the Music Shed to hear a program which contained such delicacies as Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings in E Flat Major, Debussy's La Mer and Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4 in G Major with Claudio Arrau as soloist.

Resplendent Playing

This was a perfect evening, one of the best the Berkshires has given us in the past seven weeks. The Boston Symphony players and Dr. Charles Munch were in top form. One heard some resplendent playing, particularly in the octet where the magnificent strings of this orchestra sang gloriously. There may be some who regard the playing of this work as a stunt. It is far more than that; rather, it is a demonstration of beautiful tone and superb discipline. Munch and the players provided a finely proportioned, wondrously detailed performance.

When it comes to Debussy, few conductors have the understanding of his works as does Charles Munch. He is inclined to let the music speak for itself which it can do in eloquent manner. Everything in the performance was clean cut; every tiny melody was heard and some impressive sonorities were reached. La Mer is an impressionistic creation which has strength, imagination and exquisite colorations. With Munch at his best the performance became a memorable one, another spectacular achievement of the current festival.

Last Wednesday Claudio Arrau played an all-Liszt recital and with the material at hand provided some excellent pianism, if not absorbing interest. To listen to Arrau play with an orchestra is something else again. By temperament, he seemed entirely suited to Beethoven's G Major piano concerto. Only momentarily does this concerto become a flamboyant creation. Its very gentleness, its delicate embroidery for the piano and its uncomplicated melodies bring it quickly to the hearts of the audience. Mr. Arrau provided some compelling movements during the concert and Mr. Munch and the orchestra were his expert partners. Festival audiences are quick to react to a soloist and Arrau was given a warm welcome and tremendous applause when the concerto was over.

Monteux to Podium

Saturday night Pierre Monteux returns to the podium for his final appearance of the season. He is always welcome and the applause Saturday night will have a bit of sadness, for he is going to London to become principal conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra.

He will offer works with which he has been long associated. These will include Stravinsky's Suite from Petrouchka and Tschaikowsky's Sixth Symphony. Gary Graffman will be the soloist in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2 in C minor.

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
AUG 20 1961

MONTEUX HAILED IN LAST PROGRAM AT TANGLEWOOD

12,698 On Hand for Exceptional Performance In Music Shed

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—There was a rousing cheer for Pierre Monteux when he mounted the podium in the Music Shed for his final appearance as guest conductor of the current Berkshire festival here at Tanglewood. A total of 12,698 persons was on hand to hear an exceptional program consisting of a suite from Stravinsky's Petrouchka; Rachmaninoff's "Piano Concerto No. 2" with Gary Graffman as soloist and finally, Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique" symphony.

"Masterly Performance"

These are all familiar war horses and works very close to Mr. Monteux. Gary Graffman is a young pianist who addresses entirely to the task at hand. He gave a masterly performance of the Rachmaninoff concerto, playing brilliantly and clearly. He received a superlative collaboration from Mr. Munch and the orchestra. Graffman is less flashy than some of his colleagues, but he is entirely solid and a pleasure to hear. The concerto has had a success ever since its first performance and it is entirely possible that it will always have success if it is played with the freedom, dash and depth of feeling it was given Saturday night.

(See MONTEUX HAILED, (Page 14A)

Stravinsky's music for the ballet Petrouchka is wry, a bit sourish and highly descriptive. The ballet was produced in Paris by Diaghilev in 1911 and while it did not create the hysteria of Le Sacre du Printemps, it has remained a favorite in the repertoire. Aside from the dancing itself, the music is so forceful, spacious and satisfying that the ballet becomes an entity from beginning to end. Mr. Monteux conducted with firmness and he got marvelous response from the players, the work emerging like a great light. There was infinite coloration and rhythmic insistance.

The program concluded with Tschaikowsky's Pathetique symphony. There is little left to write about a performance of the Pathetique. One heard Saturday night a performance richly detailed, filled with a wealth of temperament and conducted in the great tradition by a man who has become a tradition himself. Monteux seldom allows muic to distract him or move him to excesses. In his quiet, unassuming direction he never fails to make each phrase crystal clear and in perfect balance with the others. This was no exception and the 12,698 persons realized that they had heard an exceptional performance and Mr. Monteux was given a richly deserved ovation. The fact that it was his final appearance here and that he has assumed principal direction of the London Symphony Orchestra also contributed to the warmth of the applause.

195

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,088
AUG 21 1961

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,456
AUG 20 1961

Music:

Monteux, Graffman At Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Last night at Tanglewood, Pierre Monteux and the Boston Symphony, brilliantly asisted by piano soloist Gary Graffman, turned a standard program into one of this Berkshire Festival's most exciting events.

There was an audience of 12,698.

The program was in reverse from custom. It opened with the suite from Stravinsky's ballet, "Petrouchka," and closed with Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6 in B Minor, Opus 74, "Pathetique." Graffman received an ovation for his performance of Rachmaninoff's Concerto No. 2 in C Minor, Opus 18.

Interpretive Vitality

Repetitive as the observation may be, Monteux again gave an amazing demonstration of interpretive vitality in "Petrouchka" with an ease that defied credulity. It was perhaps less of a surprise to those who have seen him conduct Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring."

The audience was immediately swept off its feet with the "Russian Dance," a brilliant burst of tonal color harnessed to compulsive rhythms. In rapid succession the moods were changed with the speed of camera slides.

This was just enough clatter in timpani, chatter in piano, and general "huzzah." The sharp exclamations in "Chez Petrouchka" were mingled with startling descriptions of the Puppet. From the "Grand Carnival" forward was a hodgepodge of wild sound, amazingly controlled by Monteux with economical gestures.

Counter rhythms were solidly entrenched with domineering beats, giving a barbaric effect, instead of the frequently confused mess. The brasses cut through the mixture without brittleness. Monteux called Bernard Zighera forward to acknowledge applause for his excellent playing of the piano score.

Graffman's performance of the Rachmaninoff concerto was both scholarly and dazzling. He is one of the ideal pianists of the younger set. It takes ingenuity (and self-conviction) to inject individuality into this hardy perennial without defacing it.

Monteux and Graffman have much in common which eloquently served the concerto. The pianist is equally devoid of mannerism, visual embellishment, and "video-spectacular nonsense."

Obviously there was physical effort in such a dynamic performance as Graffman gave last night, but certainly no apparent strain on his technical equipment. Monteux and the orchestra gave him a sumptuous accompaniement, overflowing with warmth and perfectly tailored to his style.

Singing Tone

Graffman was quite businesslike about the romantic themes, but what came out was a gorgeous singing tone, neither sentimental nor effusive. The march-like, explosive section of the first movement was approached without undue haste in orchestra, and dealt with powerfully by the soloist.

The slow movement received tender care by the pianist, matched by the solo flute of Doriot Anthony Dwyer. In fact, secondary solos in strings and woodwinds were so expressive that Graffman deserves extra credit for keeping the piano score in the foreground.

Graffman didn't go on a rampage with the last movement. The speed was right, but one had the feeling that there was a reservoir behind it.

The festival ends this afternoon. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Sumphony and festival chorus in Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet," Dramatic Symphony, Opus 17. Soloists will be Florence Kleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor; Donald Gramm, baritone.

Tradition Is Broken In Tanglewood Finale

By GEORGE W. STOWE

Lenox, Mass. — Charles Munch broke with a hallowed Tanglewood tradition Sunday afternoon by devoting his final program to Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet," rather than the Beethoven Ninth Symphony.

And it was a happy alternative for Munch remains the great Berlioz interpreter today, particularly since neither Toscanini nor Sir Thomas Beechan are among us to infuse the works of the French composer with their own magical touch.

Even though "Romeo and Juliet" has its dull moments, not a few of which are allotted to Friar Laurence, it has so much that is the purest musical inspiration that it will be played as long as there are orchestras in our midst. From the opening symphonic fugato to the closing choral finale, it is the work of a genius.

* * *

MR. MUNCH is temperamentally attuned to the high-flown romanticism of Berlioz and there was no gainsaying his sensitive reading of the Love Scene, the Fete of the Capulets or Juliet's Funeral procession.

Only in the Queen Mab Scherzo is the conductor less than wholly convincing. Those who have heard Toscanini's grossamer reading of this miraculous music have a standard that is not likely to be surpassed.

* * *

FLORENCE KOPLEFF natched the sumptuous ound of the Boston orchesra in her solo work in the irst half of the program, ouring forth a column of ound that was rich and fine- disciplined. John McColum brought a sardonic flavor o his single solo, a vocal version of the Queen Mab Scherzo.

If the first half of this "dramatic symphony," as Berlioz so characterized it, is more inspired than what follows, there are some inimitable Berliozan touches throughout. The overwhelming pathos of Juliet's funeral march with the intoning chorus in the background and the brawling music of the feuding Montagues and Capulets are two excellent examples.

* * *

DONALD GRAMM brought so much musical intelligence and tonal warmth to the music of Friar Laurence that one almost forgot that this is hardly Berlioz at his best. At times his top notes were a little pinched but otherwise he was in admirable vocal form.

To augment the Festival chorus Mr. Munch imported a chorus from Montreal University which lent authentic Gallic flavor to the proceedings. Outside of a ragged entrance in the finale, the large chorus did a highly creditable and expressive job.

All things considered, this was one of the most artistically satisfying events of the season, a climactic finale. Some 8,900 people attended the Sunday concert, while Saturday's concert drew 12,698 customers.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,783
AUG 19 1961

Music:

Berkshire Festival In Final Weekend

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX—Superb playing by the Boston Symphony, inspired conducting by Charles Munch, and the piano solo performance of Claudio Arrau gave an auspicious start last night to the Berkshire Music Festival's final weekend at Tanglewood.

The program was designed especialy to "build up" the recently conservative-sized Friday night audiences. It attracted 7,163, somewhat more than in previous weeks.

Munch conducted the orchestra in Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings in E Flat and Debussy's "La Mer." Arrau was soloist in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4 in G. Major, Opus 58.

Just about every type program seems to receive criticism at Tanglewood — too much contemporary music — too little — not enough familiar music, etc.

Last night's program had powerful appeal for several reasons. The late Serge Koussevitzky built the orchestra's string section to a point of uncontested supremacy. It certainly hasn't deriorated Munch's regime.

Youthful Ebulience

The youthful Mendelssohn octet has a glowing beauty that the violins, violas and cellos (no basses in the score) displayed with brilliance. Debussy's "Sea Symphony" undoubtedly is his finest orchestral work and, in Munch's hands, received the benefit of a French impressionistic mastercraftsman.

Arrau, though a romantically-dispositioned pianist, also is a clear thinker, with a thoroughly competent technique. His playing of the Beethoven concerto was closer to the surface than the core. Nevertheless, it sounded remarkably well and received an accompanist intimately attuned to his style. It might have been a different story had Munch elected to revise the tempo after the lonely solo introduction to the first movement.

Munch wasn't merely efficient in conducting the Mendelssohn octet as abstract, clearly-notated scoring. He was downright clever in achieving full potentials from his orchestra.

It must be the greatest of luxuries for a conductor to have an orchestra from which he can exact such spirited tempos as Munch ordered in the scherzo and finale of the Mendelssohn.

The first violins played as a 19-man virtuoso unit. Within the first movement alone was dazzling technique and a tone of gorgeous hues in the middle part.

Munch carefully guarded the cheerful charcter of the slow movement, the start of which is tinged with sorrow. The muted, pizzicato scherzo was a marvel of synchronization. The only thing to match it was the dashing fugue beginning the finale.

Conductor and orchestra gave everyone a memorable musical experience with Debussy's "La Mer." It was a phantasmagoria of the spirit — shimmering and murmuring, with mystical tonal colorations.

Monteux Conducts Tonight

For the benefit of those who listened to the work analytically (and, of course, it has to be conducted that way), Munch not only exposed its inner workings, but stressed the themes neatly packaging its three sketchlike movements. This same tight webbing of structure, in Beethoven's more formal style, was divulged clearly in the piano concerto. In the slow introduction, Arrau exposed the work's true character, duplicated to perfection by the orchestra.

The pianist gave a tasteful, competent, accurate account of technical foibles in the first and final movements. They're just exposed enough to magnify flaws automatically.

The really impressive interpretation, however, was in the slow movement, where piano and orchestra conduct a stirring dialouge. Arrau replied to the orchestra's stern statements with a tone of melting gentleness closing the movement with a whispering, suspended chord.

Tonight, Pierre Monteux will conduct the orchestra in the suite from Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" and Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique" Symphony. Gary Graffman will be soloist in Rachmaninoff's celebrated Second Piano Concerto.

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

198 -1

T. V. Panel Show -

CHARLESTON, S.C.
NEWS AND COURIER
D G1 644 S 73,228
AUG 2 1961

Musical Notes And Reviews

The Musician's Lot Called Gloomy One

By CLAIRE McPHAIL

Six of the nation's most distinguished musical personalities —Leonard Bernstein, Erich Leinsdorf, Arthur Fiedler, Aaron Copland, Richard Burgin and Gary Graffman—recently expressed a gloomy outlook for the young musician seeking to make a career in the symphonic field. They were members of a panel assembled in the Music Shed of Tanglewood's Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Massachusetts, which was narrated by Mr. Copland.

During the discussion, which was taped and later broadcast on the CBS Radio network, Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops said: "I think we have much to worry about with regard to the young musician seeking to make a career in the symphonic field. I believe the main trouble is that the orchestral-symphonic seasons are too short to maintain a young man. The future is too insecure for him. He is particularly fortunate if he can get into the San Francisco Orchestra where he may work for 23 weeks. What does he do the rest of the time? If he went into electronics or something like that and he's an intelligent young man as we expect all musicians to be, he is pretty well assured of a year 'round position."

Leonard Bernstein, distinguished conductor-composer, stated: "Almost any problem you can single out in the domain of symphony orchestras is a financial problem ultimately. Obviously, the money has to come from the government. We are not by nature predisposed to such support for private institutions, although what's so private about museums and orchestras and opera companies beats me.

"But we still persist in calling them private and any mention of government support on a state, municipal or federal level always meets with shrieks of socialism.

"I think this is unjust. Some of our favorite capitalist allies support the arts to an extraordinary extent including Italy, France, the Scandinavian countries and so on. Obviously nothing is going to improve until we get some national subsidy. . . ."

The words of these musical giants may well be considered by the young musician today. Their comments, which were made prior to the decision to close the Metropolitan Opera because of conflicts between the musicians union and the opera association, reflect the insecurity that faces not only young musicians, but musicians who are tops in their field, such as the members of Metropolitan orchestra. Many members of the Met's orchestra still find it necessary to accept jobs outside their chosen field to augment their income. The solution to these problems has many musicians worried.

RECORD REVIEWS: Last week I mentioned Wagner's opera, "The Flying Dutchman," which RCA-Victor has just released on LM 6156. With the release of this new album, "The Flying Dutchman" becomes the most-recorded of Wagner's music dramas.

If you are contemplating the purchase of the recorded work, I urge you to hear the RCA-Victor release before purchasing. It has many points in its favor.

George London and Leonie Rysanek, as the Dutchman and Senta, are superb. Their voices are well-suited to the demanding roles, and they are well-cast.

Giorgio Tozzi, as Daland, Karl Liebl, as Erik, Richard Lewis, as the steersman, and Rosalind Elias, as Mary, combine their exceptional talents to complete a fine cast.

Perhaps a little more spark might be expected from the orchestra of the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden, under Antal Dorati's conducting, but the lack of it does not seriously detract from the over-all excellence of the production. Douglas Robinson is chorus master.

RADIO-TELEVISION DAILY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
D: 10,727
AUG 14 1961

Bernstein, Copland, Fiedler, Leinsdorf In Music Seminar

Six of the nation's most distinguished musical personalities —Leonard Bernstein, Erich Leinsdorf, Arthur Fiedler, Aaron Copland, Richard Burgin and Gary Graffman —will participate in a specially produced seminar titled, "The Direction of Music in America," presented on the CBS Radio Network Friday night. (On WCBS Radio, Saturday night).

Their conversation was taped this week in the Music Shed of Tanglewood's Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Massachusetts. The general subject to which they have addressed themselves is: "Music: the Art, the Artist and the Future."

Despite their common interest and involvement in the famed Berkshire music center, this was the first time in many years that all six were present at Tanglewood simultaneously.

Copland Moderator

Copland will be moderator. Graffman, is a well-known pianist who has toured extensively.

Erich Leinsdorf, currently musical consultant to the General Manager and Conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Association, will assume the post of music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the fall of 1962. Fiedler is conductor of the famed Boston Pops and Burgin, associate conductor and concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The broadcast is produced by Joel Heller of the Public Affairs Department of CBS News.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
AUG 8 1961

Ask 7 to Share In CBS Program At Tanglewood

Seven prominent figures in the musical world, all associated this summer with the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, have been invited to discuss "The Future of the Symphony Orchestra in America" in a special 50-minute program to be recorded at Tanglewood tomorrow by the Columbia Broadcasting System and for National Educational Television.

They are Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music Center; Richard Burgin, associate conductor and concertmaster of the Boston Symphony; Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra; Leonard Bernstein, music director of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra; Aaron Copland, composer and chairman of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center; Erich Leinsdorf, musical consultant to the general manager and conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Assn. who has been named to succeed Munch as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in September next year, and Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Messrs Bernstein, Copland and Ormandy have been guest conductors at Tanglewood this season.

Messrs. Munch, Burgin, Fiedler, Bernstein, and Copland who will be moderator have accepted the invitation to participate; Messrs. Leindorf and Ormandy have previous engagements for this date but they are attempting to change their schedules to allow them to join their colleagues on the program.

The program will be available to approximately 200 CBS stations in the United States for use beginning Aug. 11 or 12. It will be available to National Educational Television stations in the fall.

NASHVILLE, TENN.
TENNESSEAN
D. 128,798 S. 205,371
SEP 3 1961

Is Subsidy The Answer?

★ ★

The Met's' Financial Ills Are of National Concern

By LOUIS NICHOLAS

IT APPEARS that once more the threat to the continuance of the Metropolitan Opera has been avoided, but the very fact of its recurrence is a very disturbing thing.

Mr. Bing may find that his threat of "no season" may become a cry of "Wolf, wolf" that is treated with derision and ennui, however steadfastly he means what he says. I, for one, do not doubt that Mr. Bingo would do just as he threatens if he were permitted to do so, but it seems unlikely that this would be permitted as things are now.

Nicholas

However, the fault is certainly not all on one side, as Irving Kolodin points out in last week's Saturday Review. The Musicians Union made demands for the orchestra men which were not unreasonable from their point of view, but were quite out of line with the agreements reached with the other unions.

There are unsettling indications that the opening of the opera's new home in the Lincoln Center, now set for 1964, will raise more problems than it will settle.

It has long been realized that the Metropolitan Opera house is very inadequate for the presentation of the season of opera it offers, mainly because of its antiquated backstage facilities and lack of storage space.

Rumblings

The employees are already saying that such a handsome new home for the opera should mean salaries commensurate with its costliness. This doubtless means a rash of demands for much higher wages all round. The question is where the money to meet these demands will come from. In spite of near-capacity houses all season, the Metropolitan always has a deficit. Somehow, over a period of more than a quarter century, Gatti-Casazza managed to build up a reserve in his operating of the Metropolitan, but this has not been possible since that time. Nor does it appear that it will ever be possible again.

What is the answer? The suggestion being advance more and more enthusiastically by more and more people is the desirability and eventual necessity of government subsidy.

A booklet, "Subsidy Makes Sense," which is a reprint of a series of articles in the American Federation of Musicians publication, International Musician, makes a good case for this. Despite some inaccuracies and questionable statements, Hope Stoddard, associate editor of the International Musician, shows clearly the need for subsidy; the various patterns of subsidy that obtain in various European and other nations, with particular attention to Canada which has a system that might work in our own country; and the various kinds of subsidy that are so much a pattern of our government in other areas than the arts.

Resource

It is perhaps more widely realized today than ever before that our musical and artistic talent and institutions are a cultural wealth that have long been undervalued, and that represent us more impressively among other nations than almost any other manifestation of our national life.

Yet the outlook for the professional musician is rather gloomy. This was pointed up by a seminar on "The Direction of Music in America" recently taped in the Music Shed of Tanglewood's Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Massachusetts, and broadcast on the CBS Radio Network, Friday, August 18.

Arthur Fielder, Boston Pops conductor, pointed out the shortness of symphony orchestra seasons which makes it difficult for the musician to attain financial security for himself and his family.

Richard Burgin, associate conductor and concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, spoke in favor of broadening the audience for symphony concerts by giving concerts for those unacquainted with symphonic music in situations more relaxed than those of the usual symphonic concert.

Special Concerts

"Perhaps we should have special concerts where these audiences would feel more at ease, could participate, in a way, with the orchestra." (Many orchestras have tried, or are trying this with success, including the Nashville Symphony in its NASHVILLE TENNESSEAN sponsored Centennial Park concerts.)

Leonard Bernstein stated that most of the orchestras' problems are ultimately financial ones, and that obviously the money has to come from the government.

"We are not by nature predisposed to such support for private institutions, although what's so private about museums and orchestras and opera companies beats me. But we still persist in calling them private and any mention of government support on a state, municipal or federal level always meets with shrieks of socialism.

"I think this is unjust. Some of our favorite capitalist allies. . . . support the arts to an extraordinary extent including. . . . Italy, Frances, the Scandinavian countries and so on. Obviously nothing is going to improve until we get some national subsidy. . . ."

Aaron Copeland lamented the fact that contemporary works of a more advanced kind are being played less and less on symphony programs, so that young composers are turning to other mediums of expression in which there is more likelihood of their works having a hearing.

* * *

The Music Mart, 521 Union Street, presents Michael Aaron in a lecture on the "Michael Aaron Piano Course," Tuesday, at the store, 9:30 a.m. to 1:00 p.m. All piano teachers and others who are interested are invited to attend.

199

CHICAGO, ILL.
CHICAGO COURIER
D. 6,255

SEP 2 1961

GEORGE E. PITTS SEZ . . .

American Concert Music in Healthy State

A gloomy outlook for music and musicians in America, particularly the symphony orchestra and symphony musicians, was predicted by a distinguished panel of musical personalities, yet other facts seem to disprove this contention.

Said Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the famed Boston Pops: "I think we have much to worry about with regard to the young musician seeking to make a career in the symphonic field. I believe the main trouble is that the orchestral-symphonic seasons are too short to maintain a young man. The future is too insecure for him."

Mr. Pitts

Richard Burgin, associate conductor and concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said: "I think the problem goes deeper. I think a symphony orchestra depends upon the audience . . . as things stand now, we have a limited audience. A white collar worker or laborer may not want to go into a hall where he would have to dress up."

Leonard Bernstein, distinguished conductor-composer, stated: Almost any problem you can single out in the domain of symphony orchestra is a financial problem ultimately. Obviously, the money has to come from the government . . . nothing is going to improve until we get some national subsidy."

These complaints from people who should know probably are to be well taken, but Broadcast Music Incorporated (BMI) reports on the general trend that "the field of American concert music has grown 44 per cent faster than the total economy during the past 20 years.

"More than half of all the symphony orchestras in the world are in the United States.

"More than 9,000,000 children play musical instruments and receive musical instruction in schools and with private teachers.

"Americans spend more money for purchase of recordings of concert music and high fidelity equipment than they do on all spectator sports."

These facts were reported in Concert Music USA, the 1961 edition just released by BMI. "Sales of musical instruments, accessories and sheet music have increased more than 500 per cent in two decades, reaching over $500,000,000 in 1960. Record sales of all kinds have increased 900 per cent from $50,000,000 in sales to approximately $500,000,000 in 1960," the report stated.

The tremendous growth in concert music, the report says, is reflected in these facts:

"More than half of the 2,000 symphony orchestras of the wrold are in the United States.

"There are 1,177 symphony orchestras in the United States, compared with about 100 in 1920.

"More people attend concerts in the United States than go to baseball games, both major and minor league, including the World Series.

"More than 9,000,000 children play musical instruments and receive musical instruction in schools and with private teachers, compared with 2,500,000 in 1947.

"There are more than 73,000 instrumental organizations in schools in the United States, with 25,000 orchestras and 48,000 bands.

VARIETY - Aug. 16, 1961

CBS Radio will receive crawl credit for producing a tv show. This is how it happened. Last week CBS Radio was set to tape a seminar at the Music Shed of Tanglewood's Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass. The seminar included Leonard Bernstein, Erich Leinsdorf, Arthur Fiedler, Aaron Copland, Richard Burgin and pianist Gary Graffman. Bernstein was there for a CBS Radio broadcast scheduled for Friday (18) under the title of "The Direction of Music in America."

National Educational Television and Radio Center, learning of the special AM airing, asked CBS Radio for permission to videotape the round-table talk. CBS Radio okayed the request for videotaping in fall over 2y stations. Since CBS Radio produced show, approved ...ge, and indicated general conversational areas, CBS Radio will ...eive crawl credit. Joel Heller, manager for radio of CBS News ...Sales Development, supervised the program.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
CHRONICLE
D. 278,059 S. 314,832

SEP 1 1961

Lively Arts

Gloomy Future for Young Musicians

Dean Wallace

THERE IS AN OLD SAYING among professional musicians: "If your kid starts to show musical talent, break his arm."

This sentiment was reiterated on a nationwide radio broadcast a few days ago called "The Direction of Music in America." A panel of six, Leonard Bernstein, Arthur Fiedler, Aaron Copland, Erich Leinsdorf, Richard Burgin, and Gary Graffman — six of the country's most successful musicians — painted a gloomy picture.

Fiedler's gloom was explicit. For the young man, he said, the future is most discouraging. "He is fortunate if he can get into the San Francisco orchestra where he may work for 23 weeks. What does he do the rest of the time? If he went into electronics or something like that, he is pretty well assured of a year-around position."

Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, put the blame on what he termed "a limited audience." "We appeal to a certain small upper middle class of people. In order to assure the future of symphony, we must make it possible for broader masses to acquaint themselves with our music."

Copland took a different slant. "Young composers are not thinking in terms of symphony orchestras. The cure is simple. Our orchestras must start thinking of our young composers. Contemporary works are becoming less and less played . . . The young composer who writes a score and has little hope of having it performed by a major orchestra would normally turn to other forms of musical expression."

Leinsdorf lamented that today's composers do not know for whom they are writing. He cited Haydn, who had worked for Prince Esterhazy for years. When someone asked him why he had never written a string quintet, he replied that he had never been told to.

Not too surprisingly, it was Bernstein who finally broached the main issue—which must be resolved if our cultural institutions are to be kept alive.

"Obviously," he said, "money has to come from the government. We are not . . . disposed to such support for private institutions. Any mention of government support meets with shrieks of 'socialism.'

"I think this is unjust. Some of our favorite capitalist allies . . . support the arts to an extraordinary extent. Obviously nothing is going to improve until we get some national subsidy . . .

Mr. Kennedy, meet Mr. Bernstein.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 189,553

AUG 6 1961

Good Music for This Week

A CONCERT conducted by American composer Aaron Copland at the Gulbenkian Festival in Lisbon, Portugal, will be broadcast on World Music Festivals, Saturday at 8:30 p.m. on WEAN and WPJB-FM. The broadcast opens with a performance of Copland's An Outdoor Overture by the National Radio Symphony Orchestra conducted by the composer. This is followed by the Concerto in G minor for Harp and Orchestra by Elisa Parish-Alvars, the 19th Century English harpist and composer. Spanish harpist Nicanor Zabaleta is the soloist. To conclude the concert, Mr. Copland will conduct his own Symphony No. 3.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be heard in another concert from Tanglewood, Monday at 8:30 p.m. on WXCN-FM. Pierre Monteux will lead the orchestra in a performance of Schumann's Piano Concerto, with soloist Eugene Istomin, and the Symphony No. 2 by Jan Sibelius.

The Opera, Saturday at 2:05 on the same station, will bring listeners a performance of Il Trovatore by Giuseppi Verdi. The cast features Renata Tebaldi, Mario del Monaco and Giuletta Simionato. Alberto Erede conducts the orchestra and chorus of the Maggio Musicale Fiorentino.

Works to be heard on Symphony Hall, Monday at 8:06 on WPFM-FM, will be The Huns by Liszt, Symphony No. 2 in C minor by Tchaikovsky, the overture to Balfe's The Bohemian Girl and Piano Concerto No. 1 in E minor by Chopin.

Alexander Schreiner, at the Tabernacle Organ, will perform Mendelssohn's Sonata No. 1 and Schumann Canons, Monday at 9:30 p.m. on WGBH-TV.

WPJB-FM's At the Opera, Friday at 7:30 p.m., will present a recording of Fidelio, Beethoven's opera in two acts, conducted by Arturo Toscanini and the NBC Symphony Orchestra, and the Le Coq d'Or Suite by Rimsky-Korsakov, conducted by Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

199

CHICAGO, ILL.
CHICAGO COURIER
D. 6,255

SEP 2 1961

GEORGE E. PITTS SEZ . . .

American Concert Music in Healthy State

A gloomy outlook for music and musicians in America, particularly the symphony orchestra and symphony musicians, was predicted by a distinguished panel of musical personalities, yet other facts seem to disprove this contention.

Said Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the famed Boston Pops: "I think we have much to worry about with regard to the young musician seeking to make a career in the symphonic field. I believe the main trouble is that the orchestral-symphonic seasons are too short to maintain a young man. The future is too insecure for him."

Mr. Pitts

Richard Burgin, associate conductor and concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said: "I think the problem goes deeper. I think a symphony orchestra depends upon the audience . . . as things stand now, we have a limited audience. A white collar worker or laborer may not want to go into a hall where he would have to dress up."

Leonard Bernstein, distinguished conductor-composer, stated: Almost any problem you can single out in the domain of symphony orchestra is a financial problem ultimately. Obviously, the money has to come from the government . . . nothing is going to improve until we get some national subsidy."

These complaints from people who should know probably are to be well taken, but Broadcast Music Incorporated (BMI) reports on the general trend that "the field of American concert music has grown 44 per cent faster than the total economy during the past 20 years.

"More than half of all the symphony orchestras in the world are in the United States.

"More than 9,000,000 children play musical instruments and receive musical instruction in schools and with private teachers.

"Americans spend more money for purchase of recordings of concert music and high fidelity equipment than they do on all spectator sports."

These facts were reported in Concert Music USA, the 1961 edition just released by BMI. "Sales of musical instruments, accessories have increased more than 500 per cen reaching over $500,000,000 in 1960. R kinds have increased 900 per cent fr sales to approximately $500,000,000 port stated.

The tremendous growth in concer port says, is reflected in these facts:

"More than half of the 2,000 symphony orchestras of the wrold are in the United States.

"There are 1,177 symphony orchestras in the United States, compared with about 100 in 1920.

"More people attend concerts in the United States than go to baseball games, both major and minor league, including the World Series.

"More than 9,000,000 children play musical instruments and receive musical instruction in schools and with private teachers, compared with 2,500,000 in 1947.

"There are more than 73,000 instrumental organizations in schools in the United States, with 25,000 orchestras and 48,000 bands.

VARIETY - AUG 23 1961

CBS Radio will receive crawl credit for producing a tv show. This is how it happened. Last week CBS Radio was set to tape a seminar at the Music Shed of Tanglewood's Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass. The seminar included Leonard Bernstein, Erich Leinsdorf, Arthur Fiedler, Aaron Copland, Richard Burgin and pianist Gary Graffman. Sextet was there for a CBS Radio broadcast scheduled for Friday (18) under the title of "The Direction of Music in America."

National Educational Television and Radio Center, learning of the special AM airing, asked CBS Radio for permission to videotape the round-table talk. CBS Radio okayed the request for telecasting in the fall over tv stations. Since CBS Radio produced show, approved guests, and indicated general conversational areas, CBS Radio will receive crawl credit. Joel Heller, manager for radio of CBS News publicity department, supervised the program.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 189,553

AUG 6 1961

Good Music for This Week

A CONCERT conducted by American composer Aaron Copland at the Gulbenkian Festival in Lisbon, Portugal, will be broadcast on World Music Festivals, Saturday at 8:30 p.m. on WEAN and WPJB-FM. The broadcast opens with a performance of Copland's An Outdoor Overture by the National Radio Symphony Orchestra conducted by the composer. This is followed by the Concerto in G minor for Harp and Orchestra by Elias Parish-Alvars, the 19th Century English harpist and composer. Spanish harpist Nicanor Zabaleta is the soloist. To conclude the concert, Mr. Copland will conduct his own Symphony No. 3.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be heard in another concert from Tanglewood, Monday at 8:30 p.m. on WXCN-FM. Pierre Monteux will lead the orchestra in a performance of Schumann's Piano Concerto, with soloist Eugene Istomin, and the Symphony No. 2 by Jan Sibelius.

The Opera, Saturday at 2:05 on the same station, will bring listeners a performance of Il Trovatore by Giuseppi Verdi. The cast features Renata Tebaldi, Mario del Monaco and Giuletta Simionato. Alberto Erede conducts the orchestra and chorus of the Maggio Musicale Fiorentino.

Works to be heard on Symphony Hall, Monday at 8:06 on WPFM-FM, will be The Hüns by Liszt, Symphony No. 2 in C minor by Tchaikovsky, the overture to Balfe's The Bohemian Girl and Piano Concerto No. 1 in E minor by Chopin.

Alexander Schreiner, at the Tabernacle Organ, will perform Mendelssohn's Sonata No. 1 and Schumann Canons, Monday at 9:30 p.m. on WGBH-TV.

WPJB-FM's At the Opera, Friday at 7:30 p.m., will present a recording of Fidelio, Beethoven's opera in two acts, conducted by Arturo Toscanini and the NBC Symphony Orchestra, and the Le Coq d'Or Suite by Rimsky-Korsakov, conducted by Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
CHRONICLE
D. 278,059 S. 314,832

SEP 1 1961

Lively Arts

Gloomy Future for Young Musicians

Dean Wallace

THERE IS AN OLD SAYING among professional musicians: "If your kid starts to show musical talent, break his arm."

This sentiment was reiterated on a nationwide radio broadcast a few days ago called "The Direction of Music in America." A panel of six, Leonard Bernstein, Arthur Fiedler, Aaron Copland, Erich Leinsdorf, Richard Burgin, and Gary Graffman — six of the country's most successful musicians — painted a gloomy picture.

Fiedler's gloom was explicit. For the young man, he said, the future is most discouraging. "He is fortunate if he can get into the San Francisco orchestra where he may work for 23 weeks. What does he do the rest of the time? If he went into electronics or something like that, he is pretty well assured of a year-around position."

Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, put the blame on what he termed "a limited audience." "We appeal to a certain small upper middle class of people. In order to assure the future of symphony, we must make it possible for broader masses to acquaint themselves with our music."

Copland took a different slant. "Young composers are not thinking in terms of symphony orchestras. The cure is simple. Our orchestras must start thinking of our young composers. Contemporary works are becoming less and less played . . . The young composer who writes a score and has little hope of having it performed by a major orchestra would normally turn to other forms of musical expression."

Leinsdorf lamented that today's composers do not know for whom they are writing. He cited Haydn, who had worked for Prince Esterhazy for years. When someone asked him why he had never written a string quintet, he replied that he had never been told to.

Not too surprisingly, it was Bernstein who finally broached the main issue—which must be resolved if our cultural institutions are to be kept alive.

"Obviously," he said, "money has to come from the government. We are not . . . disposed to such support for private institutions. Any mention of government support meets with shrieks of socialism.'

"I think this is unjust. Some of our favorite capitalist allies . . . support the arts to an extraordinary extent. Obviously nothing is going to improve until we get some national subsidy . . .

Mr. Kennedy, meet Mr. Bernstein.

LANSING, MICH
STATE JOURNAL
D 66,403 S: 85,
SEP 3 1961

The
Six of the nation' tinguished musical ies — Leonard Bern
Leinsdorf, Arthur Fie
Copland, Richard ary Graffman —
a specially produc
ently broadcast o
radio network.
heir conversation
the Music Shed
d's Berkshire
ox, Massachuset land the mode
eral topic was "
of Music in Am n the subject of he symphony or phony musicians
essed some g ur Fiedler, cond
d Boston Pops: much to worry
rd to the youn ng to make a c
phonic field.
URE UNINVITI believe the mai the orchestra seasons are too sho tain a young man. T too insecure for him ticularly fortunate if into the San Francisc where he may wo weeks. What does he of the time? If he electronics or som that and he's an young man as we ex
sicians to be, he is assured of a year
tion."
Richard Burgin, as ductor and concert
the Boston Symphony added: "I think th goes deeper. I think orchestra depends u dience. I believe as t
now, we have a' li ence. We appeal to small middle class or dle class of people.
"In order to secu
ture of symphony, make it possible f
masses to acquaint with our music. The roundings must be white collar worker may not want to g
where he would ha
up.
"Perhaps we shou
cial concerts where ences would feel m could participate, with the orchestra."
Leonard Bernstein
guished conducto stated: "Almost a you can single out in of symphony orches nancial problem ulti viously, the money from the governme
"We are not by disposed to such private institutio what's so private seums and orchestr companies beats m
still persist in callin
vate and any mentio
ment support on a st pal or federal le
meets with shrieks
"I think this is i f our favorite cap
. . support the a raordinary extent i taly, France, the S
ountries and to o
othing is going to l we get some dy . . ."
Speaking of the pung symphonic
r. Copland said:
sers are not think symphony orches
re is simple.
All that has to h orchestras mus of our young Contemporary re advanced ing less and les phony progra composer who and has very l ing it perform orchestra wou to other form
pression."

LANSING, MICH.
STATE JOURNAL
D 66,493 S: 65 765
SEP 3 1961

The Music World

Six of the nation's most distinguished musical personalities — Leonard Bernstein, Erich Leinsdorf, Arthur Fiedler, Aaron Copland, Richard Burgin and Gary Graffman — participated in a specially produced seminar, recently broadcast on the C. B. S. radio network.

Their conversation was taped in the Music Shed of Tanglewood's Berkshire festival at Lenox, Massachusetts, with Mr. Copland the moderator. The general topic was "The Direction of Music in America."

On the subject of the future of the symphony orchestra and symphony musicians, the panel expressed some gloom. Said Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the famed Boston Pops: "I think we have much to worry about with regard to the young musician seeking to make a career in the symphonic field.

FUTURE UNINVITING

"I believe the main trouble is that the orchestral-symphonic seasons are too short to maintain a young man. The future is too insecure for him. He is particularly fortunate if he can get into the San Francisco orchestra where he may work for 23 weeks. What does he do the rest of the time? If he went into electronics or something like that and he's an intelligent young man as we expect all musicians to be, he is pretty well assured of a year 'round position."

Richard Burgin, associate conductor and concert master of the Boston Symphony orchestra, added: "I think the problem goes deeper. I think a symphony orchestra depends upon the audience. I believe as things stand now, we have a limited audience. We appeal to a certain small middle class or upper middle class of people.

"In order to secure the future of symphony, we must make it possible for broader masses to acquaint themselves with our music. Then, the surroundings must be right. A white collar worker or laborer may not want to go to a hall where he would have to dress up.

"Perhaps we should have special concerts where these audiences would feel more at ease, could participate, in a way, with the orchestra."

Leonard Bernstein, distinguished conductor-composer, stated: "Almost any problem you can single out in the domain of symphony orchestras is a financial problem ultimately. Obviously, the money has to come from the government.

"We are not by nature predisposed to such support for private institutions, although what's so private about museums and orchestras and opera companies beats me. But we still persist in calling them private and any mention of government support on a state, municipal or federal level always meets with shrieks of socialism.

"I think this is injust. Some of our favorite capitalist allies . . . support the arts to an extraordinary extent including . . . Italy, France, the Scandinavian countries and so on. Obviously nothing is going to improve until we get some national subsidy . . ."

Speaking of the aspirations of young symphonic composers, Mr. Copland said: "Young composers are not thinking in terms of symphony orchestras, and the cure is simple.

All that has to happen is that our orchestras must start thinking of our young composers.

"Contemporary works of a more advanced kind are becoming less and less played on symphony programs. The young composer who writes a score and has very little hope of having it performed by a major orchestra would normally turn to other forms of musical expression."

STITUTES ORIGINALITY

stitutes originality in composition," Mr. Bernstein stated. "The good scores are the ones that are original without trying without the composer necessarily saying: 'I am going to write this series of notes precisely because they have never been written before, not because they express something.' That attitude immediately shows up on the paper when you look at a new score."

Discussing the problem of public acceptance of a new, unorthodox classical composition, Mr. Leinsdorf insisted: "The performer cannot exist unless he gets a supply of new, vital, and interesting music. This is really the vital concern of all of us."

KOUSSEVITZKY BERATED

Mr. Bernstein then paid tribute to the late Serge Koussevitzky, observing: "Often he was abused in the newspapers and by mail if he played a new work in which he believed. His answer was simply to play it again the next week or the next month or the next year. He had a way of believing in pieces with an intensity I have never seen matched.

"I played one of Mr. Copland's compositions on a children's television show this season. It was a particularly dissonant one and I did it for that reason. I was explaining that aspect of Mr. Copland's music which I think I called 'thorny,' or something like that. Do you know I only had one letter of complaint. And I believe it was from a parent, not a youngster. The kids are much more receptive to new stuff because they are not conditioned against it."

AUDIENCE UNKNOWN

Mr. Leinsdorf added: "I feel very sad for the young composer of today who does not know for whom he is writing. Haydn . . . knew he was writing for Prince Esterhazy for many years. In fact, when somebody asked the old master, 'why have you written so many quartets, so many symphonies, so many sonatas, so many baritone trios? Why have you never written a quintet?', Haydn thought a bit and replied, 'Because nobody ever asked me to write any.' Haydn . . . then was writing for an audience whom he knew. I feel very keenly for the loneliness of today's young composer who is writing for an unknown audience."

On the question of "what constitutes originality in composition," Bernstein stated: "The good scores are the ones that are original without trying, without the composer necessarily saying: 'I am going to write this series of notes precisely because they have never been written before, not because they express something.' That attitude immediately shows up on the paper when you look at a new score."

Discussing the problem of public acceptance of a new, unorthodox classical composition, Leinsdorf insisted: "The performer cannot exist unless he gets a supply of new, vital, and interesting music. This is really the vital concern of all of us."

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO
VINDICATOR
D. 102,922 S. 149,235
AUG 24 1961

Television and Radio—

Predict Gloomy Future For Music, Orchestras

By Adrian M. Slifka
(Vindicator TV-Radio Editor)

Negotiations between the Metropolitan Opera Co. and its musicians' union have focused public attention on the critical status of quality entertainment in this country. That's why the recent CBS broadcast of the seminar, "The Direction of Music in America," proved to be particularly timely and informative.

Six of the nation's top musical personalities — Leonard Bernstein, Erich Leinsdorf, Arthur Fiedler, Aaron Copland, Richard Burgin and Gary Graffman—participated in the program. Their conversation was taped in the Music Shed of Tanglewood's Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., with Copland as moderator.

On the future of the symphony orchestra and symphony musicians, the panel expressed some gloom.

Cites Short Seasons

"I think we have much to worry about with regard to the young musician seeking to make a career in the symphonic field," said Fiedler, conductor of the famed Boston Pops.

"I believe the main trouble is that the orchestral-symphonic seasons are too short to maintain a young man. He is particularly fortunate if he can get into the San Francisco Orchestra where he may work for 23 weeks.

"What does he do the rest of the time? If he went into electronics or something like that and he's an intelligent young man as we expect all musicians to be, he is pretty well assured of a year 'round position."

Depends Upon Audience

Burgin, associate conductor and concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, added:

"I think the problem goes deeper. I think a symphony orchestra depends upon the audience. I believe as things stand now, we have a limited audience. We appeal to a certain small middle class or upper middle class of people. In order to secure the future of symphony, we must make it possible for broader masses to acquaint themselves with our music.

"Then, the surroundings must be right. A white-collar worker or laborer may not want to go to a hall where he would have to dress up. Perhaps we should have special concerts where these audiences would feel more at ease, could participate, in a way, with the orchestra."

Need Financial Help

Bernstein, composer-conductor, voiced this opinion; "Almost any problem you can single out in the domain of symphony orchestras is a financial problem ultimately. Obviously, the money has to come from the government.

"We are not by nature predisposed to such support for private institutions, although what's so private about museums and orchestras and opera companies beats me. But we still persist in calling them private and any mention of governmen support on a state, municipal or federal level always meets with shrieks of socialism.

"I think this is unjust. Some of our favorite capitalist allies, including France, Italy and the Scandinavian countries, support the arts to an extraordinary extent. Obviously, nothing is going to improve until we get some national subsidy."

Speaking of the aspirations of young symphonic composers, Copland said: "Young composers are not thinking in terms of symphony orchestras, and the cure is simple.

"All that has to happen is that our orchestras must start thinking of our young composers. Contemporary works of a more advanced kind are becoming less and less played on symphony programs. The young composer who writes a score and has very little hope of having it performed by a major orchestra would normally turn to other forms of musical expression."

Leinsdorf added: "I feel very sad for the young composer of today who does not know for whom he is writing. Haydn . . . knew he was writing for Prince Estrehazy for many years. In fact, when somebody asked the old master, 'why have you written so many quartets, so many symphonies, so many sonatas so many baritone trios? Why have you never written a quintet'? Haydn thougnt a bit and replied, 'because nobody ever asked me to write any.' Haydn . . . then was writing for an audience whom he knew. I feel very keenly for the loneliness of today's young composer who is writing for an unknownaudience."

On the question of "what constitutes originality in composition," Bernstein stated: "The good scores are the ones that are original without trying, without the composer necessarily saying: 'I am going to write this series of notes precisely because they have never been written before, not because they express something.' That attitude immediately shows up on the paper when you look at a new score."

Discussing the problem of public acceptance of a new, unorthodox classical composition, Leinsdorf insisted: "The performer cannot exist unless he gets a supply of new, vital, and interesting music. This is really the vital concern of all of us."

28 Youngstown Vindicator
Thursday, August 24, 1961

E NEW YORK TIMES, THURSDAY, AUGUST 17, 1961.

TV SHOWS TO DEAL WITH HIGH SOCIETY

Two Documentary Programs Scheduled by N. B. C.

By VAL ADAMS

Two hour-long documentary programs dealing with high society will be televised next season by the National Broadcasting Company. They are entitled "Diary of a Debutante" and "The Vanishing Four Hundred."

"Diary of a Debutante" is tentatively scheduled for January. It will depict the activities of a debutante at the time of the coming-out party at which she is presented to society.

"The Vanishing Four Hundred" will report on the current status of American society. The date has not been set.

Both programs will be produced by Bill Wilson, who was President Kennedy's television producer during the election campaign last year. Mr. Wilson joined the N. B. C. news department last month.

*

Return to the Wastelands

Robert Alan Aurthur, author of "My Flight from the Wastelands of TV" in the September issue of Esquire magazine, returned to the wastelands before the issue reached the newsstands. The producer and author has been appointed a vice president of Talent Associates-Paramount, Ltd., a television production company.

The announcement was made by David Susskind, executive vice president of the company. In the article Mr. Aurthur, formerly a producer for the National Broadcasting Company, expressed "fear for my many dear friends still in TV" and urged them to "get out" is possible.

*

Football Telecasts Slated

Two exhibition football games featuring the Cleveland Browns will be televised live from California over Channel 9.

The first, which will be presented in color, will begin at 4:30 P. M. Sunday. The Browns will play the San Francisco Forty-niners. A game with the Los Angeles Rams will be televised at 11:15 P. M. Friday, Aug. 25.

Music Seminar to Be Aired

"The Direction of Music in America," a seminar recently recorded at Tanglewood's Berkshire Festival in Lenox, Mass., will be broadcast by radio station WCBS on Saturday at 10:10 P. M. Those to be heard are Aaron Copland, composer, who moderated the discussion;

Leonard Bernstein, Erich Leinsdorf, Arthur Fiedler and Richard Burgin, conductors, and Gary Graffman, pianist.

*

Help for Perry Mason

201

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

AUG 10 1961

Whitestone

RADIO PANELISTS on the Columbia Broadcasting System program which was taped in the Music Shed at Tanglewood last evening discuss "The Direction of Music in America." The program also was filmed for use later by the National Education Television System. Taking part are, clockwise, Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops; Erich Leinsdorf, musical director of the Metropolitan Opera Company, who will succeed Charles Munch as BSO conductor in September, 1962; Aaron Copland, the composer and assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center, who was the moderator; Leonard Bernstein, conductor of the New York Philharmonic, who will be guest conductor with the BSO Saturday night at Tanglewood, and Gary Graffman, pianist, who will appear as soloist in the Music Shed Saturday, Aug. 19, when Pierre Monteux will be guest conductor with the BSO.

RICHARD BURGIN, Arthur Fiedler, Erich Leinsdorf, Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein and Gary Graffman will be participants in a special seminar, "The Direction of Music in America," tonight at 10:10 on CBS Radio.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS AND NEWS
D, 381 987

AUG 18 1961

Tanglewood Musical Hour Won't Be Heard

WGAR-Radio, one of Cleveland's good music stations, will not carry a special hour-long network program tonight, featuring six well-known creators of good music.

The CBS-Radio network, of which WGAR is the local affiliate, will carry "The Direction of Music in America" at 9:10 p. m. tonight, a seminar taped this week at Tanglewood's Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass.

Carl George, WGAR station manager, said he didn't know why the station wasn't carrying the seminar, other than that he didn't like to interfere with the regular schedule.

Aaron Copland, composer, will moderate a discussion on "Music: The Art, the Artist and the Future." Participating in the seminar will be Leonard Bernstein, Erich Leinsdorf, Arthur Fiedler, Richard Burgin and Gary Graffman.

This was the first time all six musical personalities were present at Tanglewood at the same time.

Instead of the discussion, WGAR will present its usual Music After Dark program.

—By HARRIET PETERS.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

AUG 23 1961

202 -1

SYMPHS' SWEET & SOUR NOTES

MIXED VIEWS ON LONGHAIRS

By MIKE GROSS

The longhair musical picture in the U. S. is good and bad—depending upon where you sit. If you're sitting on a panel in Tanglewood, Mass., for a specially produced seminar which was broadcast by the CBS Radio network last Friday (18), the outlook is gloomy. If you're sitting at Broadcast Music Inc. in N. Y. and publishing a booklet called "Concert Music USA," the prospects are optimistic and encouraging.

The topic of the CBS Radio show was "The Direction of Music In America." On the panel were composer Aaron Copland, as moderator, with Leonard Bernstein, N. Y. Philharmonic conductor; Richard Burgin, associate conductor and concert master of the Boston Symphony; Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops; Garry Graffman, concert pianist, and Erich Leinsdorf, music consultant and conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Assn., as guests.

Fiedler set the pessimistic tone with "I think we have much to worry about with regard to the young musician seeking to make a career in the symphonic field. I believe the main trouble is that the orchestral-symphonic seasons are too short to maintain a young man. The future is too insecure for him.

"He is particularly fortunate if he can get into the San Francisco Orchestra where he may work for 23 weeks. What does he do the rest of the time? If he went into electronics or something like that and he's an intelligent young man as we expect all musicians to be, he is pretty well assured of a year 'round position."

Burgin's target was the audience. He said, "I think a symphony orchestra depends upon the audience. I believe as things stand now, we have a limited audience. We appeal to a certain middle class or upper middle class of people. In order to secure the future of symphony, we must make it possible for broader masses to acquaint themselves with our music.

"Then, the surroundings must be right. A white collar worker or laborer may not want to go to a hall where he would have to dress up. Perhaps we should have special concerts where these audiences would feel more at ease, could participate, in a way, with the orchestra."

Financial Aspects

Bernstein's angle was on the economic aspects. He said, "Almost any problem you can single out in the domain of symphony orchestras is a financial problem ultimately. Obviously the money has to come from the government. We are not by nature predisposed to such support for private institutions, although what's so private about museums and orchestras and opera companies beats me.

"But we still persist in calling them private and any mention of government support on a state, municipal or federal level always meets with shrieks of socialism. I think this is unjust. Some of our favorite capitalist allies support the arts to an extraordinary extent including Italy, France, the Scandinavian countries and so on. Obviously nothing is going to improve until we get some national subsidy."

BMI, on the other hand, has a happier view. In the 1961 edition of "Concert Music USA" (the eighth revised edition of the brochure), a report shows that during the past two decades there's been an increase of 640% in the dollar volume of sales of records, musical instruments, performing rights and other aspects of American musical interest. It claims that the field of concert music has grown 44% faster than the total economy during the past 20 years and that more than half of all the symphony orchestras in the world are in the U. S.

The BMI brochure spotlights the growth in concert music with these facts: 1) There are 1,177 symphony orchestras in the U. S. today compared with about 100 in 1920. 2) More people attend concerts in the U. S. than go to baseball games. 3) More than 9,000,000 children play musical instruments and receive musical instruction in schools and with private teachers, compared with 2,500,000 in 1947.

(Continued on page 47)

Symphs

Continued from page 43

73,000 Musical Orgs

4) There are more than 73,000 instrumental musical organizations in schools in the U. S., with 25,000 orchestras and 48,000 bands.

5) Americans spend more money for the purchase of recordings of concert music and high fidelity equipment on which to play these recordings than they do on spectator sports. 6) In 1961 an average of 13,759.8 hours of concert music per week is being programmed by 1,250 AM and FM radio stations, or an average of 10.9 hours per station per week. 7) There are 754 opera-producing groups in the U. S. 8) There are more than 250 educational institutions in the U. S. offering degree courses in music and advanced-level musical training.

The CBS Radio panelists may be painting the picture too dark and BMI may be painting it too bright but some industryites seem to think that the cancellation of the N. Y. Metropolitan Opera season because of a financial hassle with the musicians union is one indication of the way the longhair pendulum may be swinging.

BLANK PAGE

T.V. Today Show

204

Pittsfield, Massachusetts, Thursday, August 10, 1961.

Whitestone

RADIO PANELISTS on the Columbia Broadcasting System program which was taped in the Music Shed at Tanglewood last evening discuss "The Direction of Music in America." The program also was filmed for use later by the National Education Television System. Taking part are, clockwise, Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops; Erich Leinsdorf, musical director of the Metropolitan Opera Company, who will succeed Charles Munch as BSO conductor in September, 1962; Aaron Copland, the composer and assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center, who was the moderator; Leonard Bernstein, conductor of the New York Philharmonic, who will be guest conductor with the BSO Saturday night at Tanglewood, and Gary Graffman, pianist, who will appear as soloist in the Music Shed Saturday, Aug. 19, when Pierre Monteux will be guest conductor with the BSO.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 22 1961

Notes and Footnotes

BACKSTAGE with a television show, or "Today" actually is yesterday and the day before, redoubled. Which brings us to the log of "Today's" telecast from the Berkshires Aug. 10 and 11.

It all started as an idea of Harry Beall, Boston Symphony Orchestra press department head which emerged early last December as he planned Tanglewood publicity possibilities. On Dec. 16, 1960, he wrote two friends for leads to the "Today" show, and March 21 wrote to Garroway or how about his show coming to Tanglewood. Long silence followed and April 28 wrote another friend who had an in with NBC, asking him "to stir up the water" if possible.

Nothing stirred until early July. Then Tanglewood phone rang, and assistant to associate producer of "Today" said the letter of March 21 had finally worked its way from mail room to associate producer, who was so impressed by the "propaganda" that "Today" would indeed come to Tanglewood for five days.

So you think Mr. Beall was out of the woods, eh? He was, and into the frying pan. A thousand phone calls flashed between Tanglewood and "Today" in New York City. The five days dropped to three, Aug. 2, 3 and 4. July 22 about 10 people from "Today" staff came to Tanglewood for lunch with Boston Orchestra officials and to make definite schedules, look over the ground and escape New York's heat.

Suddenly the frying pan landed on the front burner. Problems sprang up, like various union regulations, and extra costs because none of the show could be taped ahead, but must go out "live." For a time it appeared that the whole business must be abandoned. Then the impasse was dissolved about July 25, but because of the added costs, NBC cut the program to two days.

So it was out of the frying pan and, you guessed it, into the fire. Having ironed everything out, what happened? The Foreign Ministers Conference in Paris was announced for the August dates they had picked. The conference had to be covered by "Today," and everyone settled on Aug. 10 for Tanglewood and Aug. 11 for something outside of the music festival, with Music Inn picked later. And that's how it all came about, and certainly worth it. Six million people saw the program from coast to coast, with the Berkshires presented in a most favorable light.

Pittsfield, Massachusetts, Tuesday, August 8, 1961.

Seven Conductors on CBS Tanglewood Show

50-Minute Program Set for Tomorrow; 'Today' Thursday

TANGLEWOOD — Seven conductors have been invited to take part in a special 50-minute program to be recorded here tomorrow by the Columbia Broadcasting System and for National Educational Television.

Closed to Public

At the same time National Broadcasting Company crews will start moving into Tanglewood to prepare the Today television show, which will be telecast live from here Thursday morning between 7 and 9. The Tanglewood grounds will be closed to the public during the Today program.

Invited to take part in the special CBS program, which will be carried over WBRK, a CBS affiliate, at a time to be announced, are Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music Center; Richard Burgin, associate conductor and concertmaster of the BSO; Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra; Leonard Bernstein, music director of the New York Philharmonic, who will be guest conductor with the BSO here Saturday night; Aaron Copland, composer, guest conductor of the BSO and chairman of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center; Erich Leinsdorf, musical consultant to the general manager and conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Association, who will succeed Dr. Munch as BSO music director in September, 1962; and Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, a summer resident of Southern Berkshire.

Frank Blair — Anita Colby — John Chancellor

Copland Moderator

They will discuss on the CBS program, "The Future of the Symphony Orchestra in America." Mr. Copland will be moderator. All except Mr. Leinsdorf and Mr. Ormandy have accepted the invitations to take part, but both are attempting to change their schedules in order to participate.

The program will be available to about 200 CBS stations in the United States for use beginning this weekend. It will be made available to National Educational Television stations in the fall.

Meanwhile, arrangements are being made to house the NBC Today staff members, who started arriving in the area this afternoon. Ronald Filkins of Dalton, who operates Ted's Mobilehomes, has moved five of his new units to the Music Inn grounds, where the NBC staff will stay while the live TV show is being produced.

John Chancellor, who succeeded Dave Garroway as host of the Today program, will arrive here early tomorrow afternoon along with his associates Frank Blair, Anita Colby and Betty Clooney. They will interview Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, Aaron Copland and Arthur Fiedler, among others. The Boston Fine Arts Quartet will perform, as well as members of the Royal Danish Ballet, who will open a two-week engagement at the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival tonight.

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO
VINDICATOR
D. 102,822 S. 149,235
AUG 8 1961

205

Television and Radio—

'Today' Plans Program At Berkshire Festival

By Adrian M. Sliffka
(Vindicator TV-Radio Editor)

TUESDAY NOTES: American Composer Aaron Copland has been added to the list of guests to be interviewed on NBC-TV's "Today" Thursday, when a major part of the program (7 to 9 a.m., Channel 21) will be devoted to live coverage of the Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Mass.

John Chancellor, host of "Today," will interview Copeland, who is chairman of the Berkshire music faculty and head of the composition department. Other guests on the program will be Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra since 1930, and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, wife of the late conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The telecast will include music by the Boston Fine Arts Quartet, four members of the Boston Symphony who have formed a string ensemble, and a performance by the Royal Danish Ballet, featuring prima ballerina Inga Sand and Jorn Madson.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
AUG 7 1961

Popular Show At Tanglewood On Thursday

The National Broadcasting Company's Today Show will come to Tanglewood Thursday. The program will be televised "live" from 7 to 9 a. m. (EST) from the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 210-acre estate in Lenox, to a nationwide audience estimated at 6,000,000 viewers.

John Chancellor, who succeeded Dave Garroway as host on the program, and his associates including Frank Blair, Anita Colby and Betty Clooney, will interview Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, Aaron Copland, and Arthur Fiedler, among others, and the Boston Fine Arts Quartet (members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra) will perform.

In order to transmit portions of its program from Tanglewood rather than from its normal base of operations in a New York City studio, NBC will move a 35-foot trailer to Tanglewood to serve as a television control and operations center for transmission of the program. From Tanglewood the Today Show will be transmitted to Albany, New York, via micro-wave relay. From Albany it will be transmitted to New York on the network's leased telephone lines and sent across the nation from New York City.

Fifty members of the Today staff will be at Tanglewood. The first group will arrive in Lenox today to prepare the script. On Tuesday 20 technicians will survey the Tanglewood grounds to determine television locations, and on Wednesday they will be joined by other members of the technical and administrative staffs.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
AUG 7 1961

NBC's 'Today' Show From Tanglewood 'Live' on Thursday

Fifty members of the Today staff will be at Tanglewood. The first group arrived in Lenox today to prepare the script. Tomorrow 20 technicians will survey the Tanglewood grounds to determine television locations, and on Wednesday they will be joined by other members of the technical and administrative staffs.

At 12:01 a. m. Thursday the technical staff will begin final preparations for the 7 a. m. telecast, the administrative staff will begin its final preparations at 4 a. m., and Mr. Chancellor, his personal staff and the Tanglewood participants will begin their final preparations at approximately 6 a. m.

The National Broadcasting Co.'s Today Show will come to Tanglewood Thursday. The program will be televised "live" from 7 to 9 a. m. from the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 210-acre site in Lenox, to a nationwide audience estimated at 6,000,000 viewers.

John Chancellor, who succeeded Dave Garroway as host on the program, and his associates including Frank Blair, Anita Colby and Betty Clooney, will interview Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, Aaron Copland and Arthur Fiedler, among others, and the Boston Fine Arts Quartet — members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra — will perform.

In order to transmit portions of its program from Tanglewood rather than from its normal base of operations in a New York City studio, NBC will move a 35-foot trailer to Tanglewood to serve as a television control and operations center for transmission of the program. From Tanglewood the Today show will be transmitted to Albany, N. Y., via microwave relay. From Albany it will be transmitted to New York on the network's leased telephone lines and sent across the nation from New York City.

ASBURY PARK, N.J.
PRESS
D. 35,771 S. 34,732
AUG 8 1961

Symphony Program Set for Thursday

ASBURY PARK — Television viewers from the Shore area will be able to see a two-hour musical program on the NBC "Today" show Thursday from 7 to 9 a.m. when a "live" show will be telecast from the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

John Chancellor, who succeeded Dave Garroway as host, with Frank Blair, Anita Colby and Betty Clooney, will interview Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, Aaron Copland, and Arthur Fiedler. The Boston Fine Arts Quartet (members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra) will perform.

BUFFALO COURIER EXPRESS
Thursday, August 10, 1961

Radio-Television

Berkshire Festival Scheduled on 'Today'

By DANIEL P. GREGORY

FESTIVAL—Music, dance and interviews from the famed Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., are included in the "Today" show at 7 this morning on Ch. 2.

The Boston Fine Arts Quartet, a string ensemble comprising four members of the Boston Symphony, will highlight the musical portion of the program originating at Tanglewood. A dance selection will be performed by the Royal Danish Ballet featuring prima ballerina Inge Sand. The interviewees will be Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra; Mrs. Serge Koussevitsky, wife of the late conductor of the Boston Symphony, and Aaron Copland, distinguished American composer.

MURDER — Tonight's "Great Ghost Tales" presentation (Ch. 2, 9:30) concerns a young couple who rent a deserted cottage in Devon late in the season only to find that mysteriously it reflects all the circumstances of a murder they have committed.

Their suspicion of the cottage's owner mounts as they find each piece of evidence that points to a knowledge of their crime. Believing their landlord is about to expose them, they plot his death with ensuing eerie results. The title is "Summer Rental."

DEBUT — Rep. William E. Miller of Olcott and John Bailey of Connecticut will appear on the inaugural program of "Joint Appearance," a CBS-TV presentation at 10 tonight on Ch. 4. Chairmen, respectively, of the Republican and Democratic National Committees, will offer divergent views on issues agitating the nation on the live, new CBS News program. Handling the interview will be CBS News Correspondents Walter Cronkite, Paul Niven and Roger Mudd.

JOCKEY — "Eddie Arcaro-Little Giant," on "The Summer Sports Spectacular," (7:30 tonight, Ch. 4) will review the career of one of the great jockeys of all time. Arcaro has ridden more than 4,700 winners which netted their owners upwards of a record $28-million in purses. The filmed program includes scenes of Arcaro's five Kentucky Derby victories and his almost fatal fall from Black Hills in the 1949 Belmont Stakes.

HUNT—WEBR's Jack Eno will be host today of the WEBR-Crystal Beach Treasure Hunt. Special cards with Eno's picture will be distributed to bus passengers and those using the parking lots at the beach. If the card's number matches that posted at each ride, the card holder rides free —as Eno's guest.

Journalist Warren Miller will discuss "What It's Like to Be a Cuban in Cuba Today" on WBEN's "People and Ideas" program at 8:30 tonight. Miller, author of "Ninety Miles From Home," will be guest of hostess Lee Graham.

Coloratura soprano Anna Maria Alberghetti, Pete King Chorale, pianists Ferrante and Teicher, Morris Stoloff's Orchestra and The Cleabanoff Strings will be heard on "The Best in Hi-Fi Music" program at 8 tonight on WBEN-FM. Also to be heard are Mishel Piastro and his Concert Orchestra in "Danube Waves" and "Die Schonbrunner" Waltz.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 7 1961

Live Telecast

Tanglewood on TV Thursday Over NBC's 'Today' Program

LENOX — The National Broadcasting Company's Today show will come to Tanglewood Thursday. The program will be televised live from 7 to 9 a.m. from the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 210-acre estate here to a nationwide audience estimated at 6 million viewers.

John Chancellor, who succeeded Dave Garroway as host on the program, and his associates, including Frank Blair, Anita Colby and Betty Clooney, will interview Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, Aaron Copland, and Arthur Fiedler, among others, and the Boston Fine Arts Quartet, made up of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will perform.

Ballet Performance

Also scheduled for the nationwide TV show from Tanglewood will be a performance by the Royal Danish Ballet, which will open a two-week engagement tomorrow at Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival. Featured with the ballet company on TV will be the prima ballerina Inga Sand and Jorn Madson.

In order to transmit portions of its program from Tanglewood rather than from its normal base of operations in a New York City studio, NBC will move a 35-foot trailer to Tanglewood to serve as a television control and operations center. From Tanglewood the Today show will be transmitted to Albany, N.Y., via microwave relay. From Albany it will be transmitted to New York on the network's leased telephone lines and sent across the nation from New York City.

50 Staffers Coming

Fifty members of the Today show staff will be at Tanglewood. The first group arrived in Lenox today to prepare the script. Tomorrow 20 technicians will survey the Tanglewood grounds to determine television locations, and on Wednesday they will be joined by other members of the technical and administrative staffs.

At 12:01 a.m. Thursday morning the technical staff will begin final preparations for the 7 a.m. telecast; the administrative staff will begin its final preparations at 4 a.m.; and Mr. Chancellor, his personal staff and the Tanglewood participants will begin their final preparations at approximately 6 a.m.

'Today' Show Features Tanglewood Artists

The National Broadcasting Company's "Today Show" comes to Tanglewood today. The program will be televised "live" from 7:00 a.m. to 9:00 a.m. (EDT) from the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 210-acre estate in Lenox, Mass. to a nationwide audience estimated at 6,000,000 viewers.

Continued on Page Three

Continued from Page One

John Chancellor, who succeeded Dave Garroway as host on the program, and his associates including Frank Blair, Anita Colby and Betty Clooney, will interview Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, Aaron Copland, and Arthur Fiedler, among others, and the Boston Fine Arts Quartet (members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra) will perform.

In order to transmit portions of its program from Tanglewood rather than from its normal base of operations in a New York City studio, NBC will move a 35-foot trailer to Tanglewood to serve as a television control and operations center for transmission of the program. From Tanglewood the "Today Show" will be transmitted to Albany, New York, via micro-wave relay. From Albany it will be transmitted to New York on the network's leased telephone lines and sent across the nation from New York City.

Fifty members of the TODAY staff will be at Tanglewood. The first group arrived in Lenox on Monday (August 7) to prepare the script. On Tuesday (August 8) twenty technicians will survey the Tanglewood grounds to determine television locations, and on Wednesday they will be joined by other members of the technical and administrative staffs.

At 12:01 a.m. Thursday morning (August 10) the technical staff will begin final preparations for the 7:00 a.m. telecast, the administrative saff will begin its final preparations at 4:00 a.m., and Mr. Chancellor, his personal staff and the Tanglewood participants will begin their final preparations at approximately 6:00 a.m.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
BANY. N.Y.
SPAPER
PPINGS
E NEW YORK
ERVICE

INDEPENDENT
August 10, 1961

Front Row Center

by Frank Strauss

ELLA: We spent the summer's best evening Saturday at the Forest Hills Music Festival listening to a one-woman concert by Ella Fitzgerald. Without even trying (although we know she always does), this is one girl who can make all other popular as well as jazz stylists look second rate. She lampooned the rock and roll singers delightfully in her version of "Blue Moon" and amazed the audience with her knack of putting words to songs on the spur of the moment. Backed by a well disciplined Lou Levy Quartet, Ella easily proved why those who know refer to her simply as "the greatest." She truly is.

This Saturday, that lovable Dane Victor Borge visits the festival and should bring along with him stories to delight young and old alike. Borge has toured every state in the Union, Australia, South Africa, Sweden, Denmark, Ireland and Great Britain since he held court for nearly three years on Broadway. He is currently on another tour of Europe testing new material which he will unveil for the first time in America Saturday.

SCHEDULE CHANGE: Bergen Mall producer Robert Ludlum this week announced a change in plays at the nearby Jersey house. Beginning Monday, Bert Lahr will star in "Harvey," the Pulitzer Prize winning family comedy by Mary Chase. Lahr had been scheduled to do a pre-Broadway version of the French play "The Ostrich and His Egg," but delays in the American adaptation caused the Playhouse management to prefer "Harvey." Lahr's interpretation of the role of Elwood P. Dowd has been considered by many as one of the highlights of his career.

TV AT TANGLEWOOD: The NBC "Today" show visits Tanglewood this morning with a live two-hour program emanating from the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 210 estate in Lenox, Mass. John Chancellor and his associates will interview Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, Aaron Copeland and Arthur Fiedler.

This weekend at the Berkshire Festival, three concerts have been scheduled in tribute to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky who died June 4, 1951. In addition, the concerts will also mark the 26th anniversary of the first Tanglewood concert in the Berkshires.

Richard Burgin and Leonard Bernstein, both friends and colleagues of Koussevitzky will conduct Friday and Saturday evening respectively and Charles Munch, who succeeded Koussevitzky as the BSO's music director in 1949, will conduct Sunday afternoon.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 9 1961

Music Inn Features Added To TV Show at Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD — Two script writers started preparing copy this morning for the National Broadcasting Company's "Today" television show which will originate here tomorrow morning from 7 to 9. John Lord and Barbara Walters spent the morning interviewing persons identified with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center, as well as Music Barn and the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival.

NBC announced this morning an additional feature to the "Today" program tomorrow will be the appearance on the live TV show of the Kai Winding Sextet and the Grandison Singers, who will be heard in pick-ups from Music Inn.

Winding is a former lead trombonist with Stan Kenton's Orchestra and former partner with J. J. Johnson in the J. J. and Kai Quintet. The Grandison Singers are a group of Negro gospel singers who perform the same music in nightspots and in church.

The Gerry Mulligan Quintet and the Williams College Dixieland Jazz Band, originally scheduled for the program, will not appear.

Copland on Program

Aaron Copland, assistant director of the Music Center, has been added to the list of guests to be interviewed on the Today show. John Chancellor, host of the Today program, who arrived here this afternoon will interview Mr. Copland. Other guests will include Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzy, widow of the late BSO conductor and founder of the Music Center. The program also will include music by the Boston Fine Arts Quartet and a performance by the 10 Young Danes of the Royal Danish Ballet, who opened a two-week engagement last night at the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival.

Public Barred

The public will not be admitted to the Tanglewood grounds during the Today show.

This evening the Columbia Broadcasting System and the National Education Television System will tape a program here which will be made available to the CBS nationwide network Friday, Aug. 18 from 9 to 10 p.m., except for New York City which will run the shown on Aug. 19 from 10 to 11 p.m.

The subject has been changed from "The Future of Symphony Orchestras in America," to "The Direction of Music in America." Participating will be Leonard Bernstein, conductor of the New York Philharmonic, Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the BSO, Aaron Copland, Arthur Fielder, Pianist Gary Graffman and Erich Leinsdorf, musical director of the Metropolitan Opera Company, who will succeed Charles Munch as BSO conductor in September, 1962.

RALEIGH, N.C.
NEWS & OBSERVER
D. 126,192
AUG 10 1961

Leading Events

TELEVISION

7 a.m.—From the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., TODAY will present music by the Boston Fine Arts Quartet; a dance selection by the Royal Danish Ballet featuring primi ballerina Inge Sand; and interviews with Arthur Fieldler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, composer Aaron Copland and Mrs. Serge Koussevitsky, wife of the late conductor of the Boston Symphony. (WRAL-TV, WECT, WITN, WSOC-TV, WSJS-TV)

4:30 p.m.—Buster Keaton, appearing on HERE'S HOLLYWOOD, discusses comedy, his career and the toys he builds. Bob Denver tells about starting as a teacher, almost becoming an attorney and winding up an actor. (WRAL-TV, WITN, WSOC-TV, WSJS-TV)

7:30 p.m.—"Eddie Arcaro—Little Giant," a behind-the-scenes documentary of the career of one of the greatest jockeys of all time, will be presented on the SUMMER SPORTS SPECTACULAR. (WFMY-TV)

9 p.m.—"When Girls Encounter Puberty" is the topic of tonight's PEOPLE ARE DIFFERENT series. The female adolescent rituals employed by three different societies are analyzed as continuity is maintained by a descriptive narration against a background of especially composed music accompanied by vivid modern dance interpretations. (WUNC-TV)

9:30 p.m.—"Summer Rental" is the GREAT GHOST TALE. Details above. (WRAL-TV, WECT, WITN, WSOC-TV, WSJS-TV)

10 p.m.—The national chairmen of the Republican and Democratic parties make a JOINT APPEARANCE. Details above. (WFMY-TV, WBTV)

*11:15 p.m.—"Today" host John Chancellor and the musical team of Les Paul and Mary Ford will be the guests of JACK PAAR. (WRAL-TV, WECT, WSJS-TV; WITN, WSOC-TV at 11:30 p.m.)

*Color show.

The Berkshire Eagle, Wednesday, Aug. 9, 1961—17

Music Inn Features Added To TV Show at Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD — Two script writers started preparing copy this morning for the National Broadcasting Company's "Today" television show which will originate here tomorrow morning from 7 to 9. John Lord and Barbara Walters spent the morning interviewing persons identified with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center, as well as Music Barn and the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival.

NBC announced this morning an additional feature to the "Today" program tomorrow will be the appearance on the live TV show of the Kai Winding Sextet and the Grandison Singers, who will be heard in pick-ups from Music Inn.

Winding is a former lead trombonist with Stan Kenton's Orchestra and former partner with J. J. Johnson in the J. J. and Kai Quintet. The Grandison Singers are a group of Negro gospel singers who perform the same music in nightspots and in church.

The Gerry Mulligan Quintet and the Williams College Dixieland Jazz Band, originally scheduled for the program, will not appear.

Copland on Program

Aaron Copland, assistant director of the Music Center, has been added to the list of guests to be interviewed on the Today show. John Chancellor, host of the Today program, who arrived here this afternoon will interview Mr. Copland. Other guests will include Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzy, widow of the late BSO conductor and founder of the Music Center. The program also will include music by the Boston Fine Arts Quartet and a performance by the 10 Young Danes of the Royal Danish Ballet, who opened a two-week engagement last night at the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival.

Public Barred

The public will not be admitted to the Tanglewood grounds during the Today show.

This evening the Columbia Broadcasting System and the National Education Television System will tape a program here which will be made available to the CBS nationwide network Friday, Aug. 18 from 9 to 10 p.m., except for New York City which will run the shown on Aug. 19 from 10 to 11 p.m.

The subject has been changed from "The Future of Symphony Orchestras in America," to "The Direction of Music in America." Participating will be Leonard Bernstein, conductor of the New York Philharmonic, Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the BSO, Aaron Copland, Arthur Fielder, Pianist Gary Graffman and Erich Leinsdorf, musical director of the Metropolitan Opera Company, who will succeed Charles Munch as BSO conductor in September, 1962.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 8 1961

In Brief . . .

It was a nice bipartisan gesture for President Kennedy to present Congressman Conte with one of the pens used in signing the bill to establish the Cape Cod National Seashore. And a fitting gesture, too, in view of the hard work which Conte did to help put the project across in the House . . . While the two-hour television presentation on the "Today" show Thursday morning probably represents the biggest burst of national publicity Tanglewood has ever received, many music lovers will be even more interested in the 50-minute panel discussion on music in America to be televised by CBS at the Music Center the night before. With Aaron Copland leading a lineup that will include Dr. Munch, Richard Burgin, Arthur Fiedler, Leonard Bernstein, and possibly Erich Leinsdorf and Eugene Ormandy as well, it can surely help being a fruitful discussion . . . Many persons attending the Shaker auction at Darrow School last Saturday were shocked to see the crumbling state of the Sisters' Workshop in the North Family group of buildings owned by the Crusade for Christ. An irreplaceable building should not be permitted to stay in such disrepair . . .

It seemed like old times yesterday with two such political grand-daddies as Dan Casey and Art Milne talking about hitting the come-back trail in a quest for seats on the City Council and in the state Senate, respectively . . . Though the reason for it is apparently nothing more mysterious than a high proportion of crowd-pleasing programs, the folks at Jacob's Pillow should find considerable comfort in the fact that their attendance is heading for an all-time record at a time when the cash registers at most other cultural events in the county are jingling rather less merrily than a year ago.

207

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
D: 28,931
AUG 10 1961

BARRELLE'S Page One CERTIFIED

All U.S. Sees Tanglewood In Early Morning TV Show

By JOHN G. W. MAHANNA

Tanglewood drew its largest audience in history this morning—an estimated six million persons who saw the National Broadcasting Co.'s "Today" television show originate at the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"Today" will be in Lenox again tomorrow for its full two hours, shifting its setting to Music Inn, where a jazz sextet and the Grandison Singers will be featured between 7 a.m. and 9 a.m.

With miles of cable strung all over the spacious Tanglewood lawns, mounted mobile cameras moving in every direction, crews hurrying about the grounds, it appeared before the show went on at 7 that chaos would break out any time. However, when Betty Clooney opened the program in a two-way conversation with John Chancellor in the New York NBC studios, describing the area, the show went on smoothly without a hitch in the two-hour production.

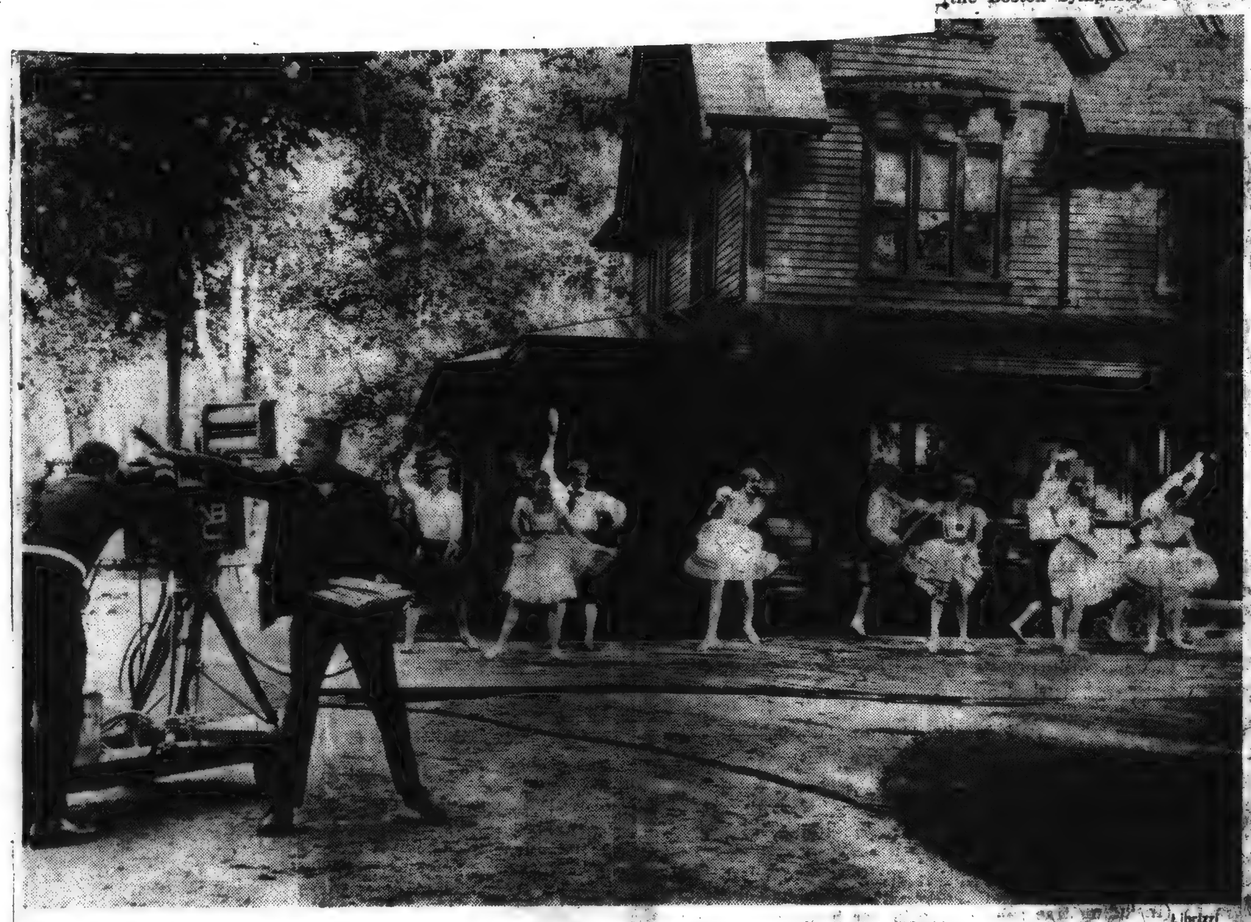
When the NBC staff started arriving at Tanglewood shortly before 4 a.m., a heavy fog hung over the grounds, blocking the view to the south of Stockbridge Bowl, and almost hid the huge Music Shed from view. When the sun broke through, shortly before 6, the cameramen began feeling a little more enthusiastic about the work cut out for them in helping to catch panoramic scenes for the benefit of the television audience.

Large Platform Moved

An hour before the show began, the 20-by-40-foot plywood platform, built by Tanglewood Superintendent James Kiley and his crew, was ordered moved about 60 feet from the south terrace to a spot in front of the administration building. This unexpected move brought into service about 50 men who lifted the one-piece platform to the roadway where the Ten Young Danes of the Royal Danish Ballet, now appearing at Jacob's Pillow, performed with the Tappan house serving as the background.

Mr. Chancellor, who succeeded Dave Garroway as host of the "Today" program, was with newsman Ed Newman, in the New York NBC studios for the entire show, carrying on two-way conversations with the other headliners on the

Tanglewood on TV
Continued on Page 5



Librizzi

TEN YOUNG DANES from the Royal Danish Ballet, who are currently appearing in Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival, this morning gave a performance in this setting in front of the main house at Tanglewood for the NBC live television program, "Today," which was carried on a nationwide network. Here the program's floor manager cues one of the principals in the show to pick up the next part of the show as the dancers complete their performance.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 4,856
AUG 7 1961

'Today' Coming to Tanglewood For Live Broadcast Thursday

LENOX, Mass. — The National Broadcasting Company's "Today" show will come to Tanglewood Thursday, Aug. 10. The program will be televised "live from 7 to 9 a.m. from the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 210-acre estate in Lenox to a nationwide audience estimated at 6,000,000 viewers.

John Chancellor, who succeeded Dave Garroway as host on the program, and his associates including Frank Blair, Anita Colby and Betty Clooney, will interview Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, Aaron Copland, and Arthur Fiedler, among others, and the Boston Fine Arts Quartet (members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra) will perform.

In order to transmit portions of its program from Tanglewood rather than from its normal base of operations in a New York City studio, NBC will move a 35-foot trailer to Tanglewood to serve as a television control and operations center for transmission of the program.

From Tanglewood the "Today" show will be transmitted to Albany, N.Y. via micro-wave relay. From Albany, it will be transmitted to New York on the network's leased telephone lines and sent across the nation from New York City.

Fifty members of the "Today" staff will be at Tanglewood. The first group will arrive in Lenox on Monday to prepare the script. On Tuesday 20 technicians will survey the Tanglewood grounds to determine television locations, and on Wednesday they will be joined by other members of the technical and administrative staffs.

At 12:01 a.m. Thursday morning, Aug. 10, the technical staff will begin final preparations for the 7 a.m. telecast, the administrative staff will begin its final preparations at 4 a.m. and Chancellor, his personal staff and the Tanglewood participants will begin their final preparations at approximately 6 a.m.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
AUG 8 1961

Special Program At Tanglewood

Charles Munch, Richard Burgin, Arthur Fiedler, Leonard Bernstein, Aaron Copland, Erich Leinsdorf, and Eugene Ormandy have been invited to discuss "The Future of the Symphony Orchestra in America" in a special 50-minute program to be recorded at Tanglewood Wednesday by the Columbia Broadcasting System and for National Educational Television. Messrs. Munch, Burgin, Fiedler, Bernstein, and Copland (who will be moderator) have accepted the invitation to participate; Messrs. Leinsdorf and Ormandy have previous engagements for this date but they are attempting to change their schedules to allow them to join their colleagues on this program.

The program will be available to approximately 200 CBS stations in the United States for use beginning Aug. 11 or 12. It will be available to National Educational Television stations in the fall.

Tanglewood on TV

Continued From First Page

program, Frank Blair, Miss Clooney and Anita Colby, at Tanglewood.

Three chairs were set on the lawn for Miss Clooney and Mr. Blair for their interview with Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinetist with the BSO, who explained the operation of the Berkshire Music Center. Close by for another setting, overlooking the Bowl, were Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, widow of the founder of the BMC and for 25 years conductor of the BSO, and Miss Colby, who conducted the interview.

Between these presentations, the Boston Fine Arts Quartet gave a performance of a composition by Haydn, and Mr. Blair interviewed the Boston Pops conductor, Arthur Fieldler, in front of the fountain in the formal Tanglewood gardens.

One of the Best

Robert Northshield, "Today's" producer, and Craig Allen, director, said they were "overwhelmed with joy," with the Tanglewood setting and everyone who had a part in the production. They agreed it was one of the top outdoor shows ever produced on "Today."

Following this morning's performance, the "Today" staff returned to their quarters at Music Inn to start preparations for tomorrow morning's show, which will open with shots near the inn's pool. The staff members and artists appearing on the show are being housed in five mobilehomes parked on the lawn near the Potting Shed.

Tomorrow they will be up again at 3:30 a.m., and will report around 4 to run through the script and adjust themselves to the new setting. John Walters and Barbara Walters, "Today's" script-writers, have been in the area most of the week, gathering Berkshire material for the program, which tomorrow may take note of the triple-bicentennial anniversaries of Berkshire County, the city of Pittsfield and the town of Great Barrington.

208

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

UTICA PRESS
Monday, August 7, 1961

Today Television Show Will Visit Tanglewood

Lenox, Mass. — The National Broadcasting Company's Today Show will come to Tanglewood Thursday. The program will be televised "live" from 7 to 9 a.m. from the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 210-acre estate here.

John Chancellor, who succeeded Dave Garroway as host on the program, and his associates including Frank Blair, Anita Colby and Betty Clooney, will interview Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, Aaron Copland, and Arthur Fiedler, among others, and the Boston Fine Arts Quartet will perform.

From Tanglewood the Today Show will be transmitted to Albany via micro-wave relay. From Albany it will be transmitted to New York on the network's leased telephone lines and sent across the nation from New York City.

Fifty members of the Today staff will be at Tanglewood. The first group will arrive in Lenox today to prepare the script. Tomorrow 20 technicians will survey the Tanglewood grounds to determine television locations, and on Wednesday they will be joined by other members of the technical and administrative staffs.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955
AUG 9 1961

TANGLEWOOD PROGRAMS TO BE TELEVISED

Programs on Tanglewood will be televised at Lenox Thursday and Friday by the National Broadcasting Co.'s "Today" show. Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, Aaron Copland and Arthur Fiedler will be among those to be interviewed Thursday by the program's host, John Chancellor, and his associates, Anita Colby, Frank Blair and Betty Clooney. The Boston Fine Arts Quartet, members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will also perform.

That program and the Friday morning program featuring the Kai Winding sextet and the Grandison singers, both from the Music Inn, will be viewable on the local NBC channel.

A 50-minute special program will be recorded today at Tanglewood by the Columbia Broadcasting System for use by National Educational Television in the fall. "The future of the symphony orchestra in America" will be discussed by Charles Munch, Leonard Bernstein, Eugene Ormandy, Fiedler, Copland and others.

Librizzi

MUSIC INN HOST Don Soviero and Betty Clooney, seated on beach chairs around the pool, opened the TV show at 7 this morning. A heavy fog hung over the area but lifted before the program ended at 9, permitting the NBC cameraman to include in the production scenes of the Music Inn, Music Barn, the Pond[illegible] and other resort features.

ARTIST Norman Rockwell of Stockbridge and Frank Blair carried on a witty conversation during an interview on the "Today" program this morning at this rail fence on the Music Inn grounds. Mr. Blair visited the noted artist's studio yesteday afternoon, resulting in an invitation to have Mr. Rockwell to appear on the early morning program.

Librizzi

BICENTENNIAL of Berkshire County was discussed this morning on the nationwide "Today" program televised at Music Inn. Frank Blair, right, shows Norman Rockwell's cover drawn by Mr. Rockwell to viewers of the early morning show, while discussing the Berkshires with John G. Mahanna, county editor of The Eagle, in front of the inn pool.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 11 1961

Today Show Filled With Jazz Ends in Splash at Music Inn

By JOHN G. W. MAHANNA

The National Broadcasting Company's "Today" program was jumping with jazz orchestras and Negro singers at Music Inn this morning, and ended with a big splash when the producer was tossed into the pool.

Before winding up a two-day stay in the Berkshires, Frank Blair and Betty Clooney, headliners on the "Today" program from this area, tipped over at the edge of the pool a chair, occupied by Robert Northshield, the producer, dumping him into the water in full view of the estimated 6 million viewers across the country.

Mist Greets Cameramen

A typical heavy Berkshire mist greeted the TV cameramen again this morning on the grounds of Music Inn. Before going off the air at 9, however, the sun broke through the overcast, much to the delight of NBC staff members, who became so impressed with the Berkshires that a few decided to remain for the weekend.

Don Soviero, owner of Music Inn and Music Barn, opened today's show with Betty Clooney, describing in an interview the many attractions at the jazz center in Lenox as well as his winter ski development at Bousquet's in Pittsfield.

Turning from the poolside interview, the cameras switch to a nearby field, where the Grandison Singers gave a lively performance. The program, like yesterday's show from Tanglewood, switched back to the NBC studios in New York at times to pick up the host of the "Today" program, John Chancellor, and Ed Newman who handled the news bulletins.

Blairs Tour County

Following yesterday's show, Mr. Blair, his wife and two of their eight children toured part of the Berkshires, visiting the studio of the late sculptor, Daniel Chester French, at Chesterwood in Stockbridge, Berman Melville's home on Holmes Road in Pittsfield, Shadowbrook, the Jesuit novitiate; Norman Rockwell's studio in Stockbridge and many historical landmarks in the county.

As a result of his visit with Mr. Rockwell, Mr. Blair invited the noted illustrator to appear on this morning's program. After he noted Mr. Blair was a devotee of pipe-smoking like himself, the Stockbridge artist accepted the invitation, provided both could smoke their pipes during the interview. They did.

Impressed also with the historical background of the area, its cultural attractions, industries, cities and towns, Mr. Blair also invited John G. W. Mahanna, county editor of The Eagle, to appear with him for an interview. They discussed the 200th anniversary of the county and showed to the nation on TV the cover of the bicentennial book, drawn by Mr. Rockwell.

Woman Conductor

A previously unscheduled interview was led on the program today by Anita Colby, who learned yesterday of the presence at the Berkshire Music Center of the only woman conductor enrolled in the BSO summer school, Beatrice Mueller of Hamburg, Germany. They discussed the years of study required to become a conductor and the challenge for a woman to become successful in that field with men dominating the profession.

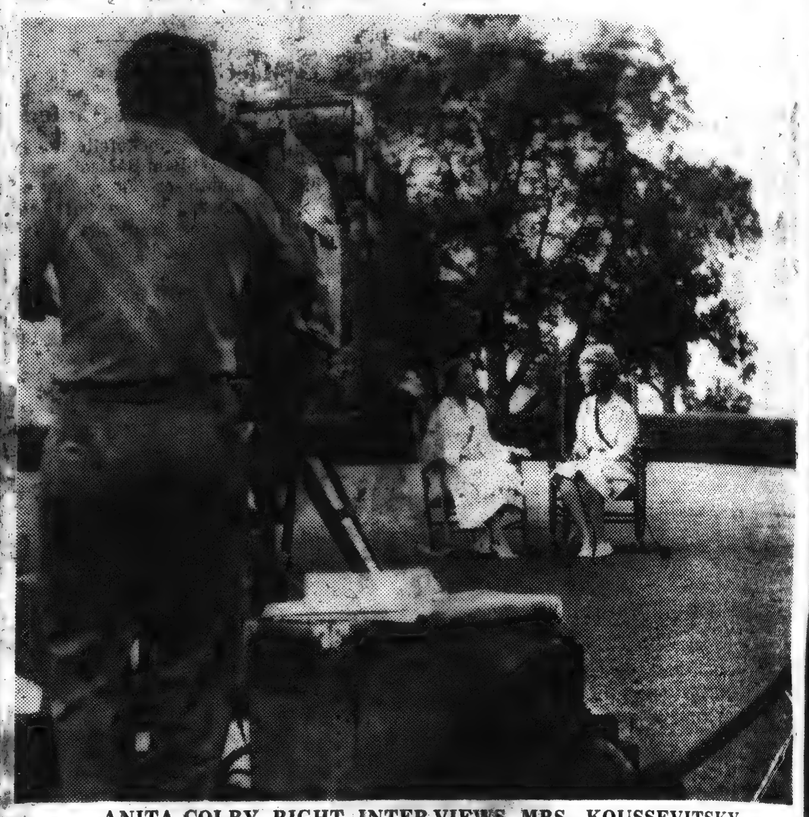
Featured during the two-hour show at various spots during the morning were the Kai Winding Sextet, who gave a jazz concert at the pool and played later in a setting near the Music Barn, site of the jazz concerts throughout the summer. Walt Lehman's group of Williamstown also were screened in two spots filmed near Music Barn.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
D. 66,353
AUG 11 1961

209

Tanglewood Setting Steals Glory on TV Show

'TODAY' CAMERA FOCUSES ON YOUNG DANES' BALLET



ANITA COLBY, RIGHT, INTERVIEWS MRS. KOUSSEVITSKY

By WALTER HAWVER
The Knickerbocker News
Radio-TV Editor

It was 7:10 a.m., seven minutes to airtime, and Bob Northshield paced nervously across the lawn. "Would somebody strike that fog, please?" he asked in feigned jest. But disappointment was evident in his voice.

Northshield is producer of NBC's wake-up television show, Today, and he had brought a crew of 50 and a mountain of equipment from New York to Tanglewood for two days of live broadcasting from the famed Massachusetts music center.

The program carried along its own personalities, Frank Blair, Betty Clooney and Anita Colby. And Tanglewood had cooperated by making available some fine talent and interesting guests. But the star of this show, as everyone on the scene was acutely aware, was the setting—the lovely, verdant lawns and gardens of Tanglewood and the beautiful background of the Berkshires.

A seasonal, early-morning mist had hung stubbornly over the area since the first rays of light peeked through shortly after 5:30 a.m. As technicians blocked out camera angles for commercials and dragged a plywood platform over across the grass, the talk seldom got far away from the weather.

There was levity, of course. This Today crew is accustomed to free-wheeling a show, to taking things as they come.

★ ★ ★

SOMEBODY ASKED Don Silverman, the program manager, about the oversized buttons all the NBC personnel wore with the single word "HERO" emblazoned in bold type. "On the back, it says, 'Kennedy Will Win,'" he joked. Northshield with a "Hero No. 1" on his button butted in. "We were going to have them read 'Keep Cool With Coolidge,' in honor of our coming to New England. But we didn't have time."

Rosario Mazzeo, personnel manager for the Boston Symphony and a bass clarinetist, huddled apprehensively with Thomas Perry, the orchestra's manager and NBC representatives. He had been asked at the last minute to replace Aaron Copland, in an interview early in the show, and the network people were having trouble with his name.

"It's 'Matteo'," one insisted. "No, it isn't. It's 'Mazio', said another.

Mazzeo was amused by it all. "I'm just the small brass," he said smiling to Perry.

ALTHOUGH they'd been preparing for the moment for more than two hours, there was a hush of anticipation as the floor manager cued Betty Clooney and asked for silence from an assembly of 50 or more reporters, cameramen and Tanglewood personnel.

The show's host, John Chancellor, airconditioned-comfortable back in New York, gave Miss Clooney the signal and the cameras went on. So did the Teleprompter as Betty read: "Good morning, John, and everybody. It's a country morning here. . . "

And it was, as the mist clung to the countryside, obscuring the mountains. Producer Northshield had an hour or more before he decided to change the previously-agreed on schedule. Instead of closing the show, the visiting Young Danes of the Royal Danish Ballet, currently at nearby Jacob's Pillow, would open it.

★ ★ ★

EVERYBODY watching had his fingers crossed. The dancers' stage was 16 sheets of 4x8-foot plywood, painted green and nailed together. The dew-stained platform had been sprinkled with resin, but was still treacherously slippery in spots. If this bothered prima ballerina Inge Sand and the other 10 performers, it didn't show in their eight-minute number. They performed beautifully and without incident.

It was a good omen. Suddenly the sun broke through. Slowly the mist began to fade and the natural beauty of the area bloomed before the cameras.

As Blair talked to Mazzeo about the Boston Symphony's accomplishments and Miss Colby chatted with Mrs. Serge Koussevitsky about her late husband's pioneer work at Tanglewood ("the spirit of the father is here"), director Craig Allen panned his cameras up through the trees, out across the lawns and the mountains. Even

(Continued on Page 3-B.)

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Tuesday, August 8, 1961

TV Music Show Set

Live coverage of the Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Mass. will be featured Thursday on the NBC-TV "Today" show from 7 to 9 a. m., carried locally over WRGB, Channel 6.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
AUG 9 1961

Tanglewood Host For Radio and TV

Charles Munch, Richard Burgin, Arthur Fiedler, Leonard Bernstein, Aaron Copland, Erich Leinsdorf, and Eugene Ormandy have been invited to discuss "The Future of the Symphony Orchestra in America" in a special 30-minute program to be recorded at Tanglewood today by the Columbia Broadcasting System and for National Educational Television.

The National Broadcasting Company's Today Show will come to Tanglewood tomorrow. The program will be televised "live" from 7:00 a.m. to 9:00 a.m. (EDT) from the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 210-acre estate in Lenox to a nationwide audience estimated at 6,000,000 viewers.

NBC, CBS Broadcasting Shows at Tanglewood

The National Broadcasting Co.'s "Today" show will originate at Tanglewood Thursday. The program will be televised from 7 to 9 a. m. from the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 210-acre estate in Lenox.

John Chancellor, who succeeded Dave Garroway as host on the program, and his associates, including Frank Blair, Anita Colby and Betty Clooney,

Tanglewood Setting - -

(Continued from Page 1-B)

on the fuzzy monitoring set it was impressive.

★ ★ ★

EVERTHING went so smoothly from then on that something had to happen. It did—just after Blair finished interviewing Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, in the formal gardens.

A crew was wheeling a camera into place for a commercial, when the tripod broke loose from its moorings and the camera fell to the ground. The calm was remarkable. There were only three cameras available. The loss of one would seriously crimp the operation. But no one got excited. The crew righted the camera and got it back in place and a quick check showed nothing had been broken.

Smiles of relief were evident all around. But no one was more amused than a member of the Boston Fine Arts Quartet, who spotted a sign on a table three feet from the accident. The words had been printed for Miss Clooney to read in the next commercial, but they had an oh-so ironic ring:

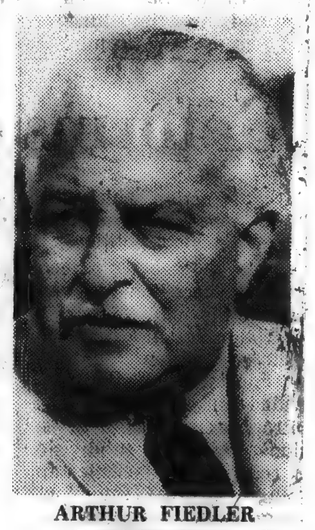
"Even in Tanglewood, things break and have to be mended."

★ ★ ★

THE CLOSING portion was perhaps the most magnificent of the two hours. The Fine Arts Quartet was nested in a hedge-ridged section of the Formal Gardens playing the Minuet from Mozart's Hunt Quartet. It was 8:50 a.m. and the sun had chased all but a few clouds away. While one camera concentrated on the musicians, the others poked inquisitively about, picking up a kaleidoscope of picture postcard scenes.

With one show behind him—there was a second this morning from the Berkshire Music Inn at Lenox, Mass. — Northshield relaxed and talked about the project.

No, he didn't agree with those who insist that the Today show should travel. "If it does, it is because that place is the show of



ARTHUR FIEDLER
'Pops' Conductor

today. To come to Tanglewood for two days is to say that it is the most important thing happening in the world. And that is not possible. The news break today on the plane hijackings proves it."

★ ★ ★

YES, IT WAS a costly operation getting a signal out over the mountains, but not as costly as it might have been. The telephone company had been "cooperative."

No, he didn't think it was a difficult origination despite Tanglewood's remote location and there hadn't been any technical difficulties. "Lots of producers get upset when there's a major flaw. We've outgrown that. There shouldn't be technical flaws any more."

Yes, there was one thing he would have liked. "We wanted the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the entire orchestra. But we couldn't have it because of the tremendous cost. And the reason is our contract with the musicians' union calls for us to pay every musician who appears on the show. Even at scale, that would be more than $12,000. There are 103 orchestra members. Scale is $94.83 each, plus commission, plus tax.

"Some people offered to raise the money, but there wasn't time. Maybe next year.

BLANK PAGE

212 -1

Post - Season

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 21 1961

Munch Returning

210,438 at Festival Set Seasonal Record

By JOHN G. W. MAHANNA

TANGLEWOOD—More people attended the 1961 Berkshire Festival concerts this summer than any season in its history, thanks to the extra week which pushed the attendance up 46,859 over last year.

Next year another week will be added when the season opens on July 6, closing late in August when the BSO conductor, Charles Munch, will retire as the orchestra's musical director.

A total of 210,438 persons attended the Festival this season. The final week attracted 34,679 to the Tanglewood events, including the 12,960 who turned out Saturday night when Pierre Monteux was guest conductor with Gary Graffman, piano soloist.

This season 175,759 persons took in the Festival events for the first six weeks, compared to 173,579 for the same period last year.

Sales Total $533,136

Ticket sales for the 1961 season amounted to $533,136, compared to $452,122.50 last year.

Despite poor weather during the first three weekends of the Bach-Mozart series, the attendance this season for that series, the 12 major concerts by the full BSO and the chamber music concerts, was 25,163 ahead of last year.

The 12 major concerts in the Music Shed drew fewer patrons this season for the comparative six-week season last year—102,704 in 1960 compared to 97,657 in 1961—but the extra weekend brought in 28,721 customers for a total of 126,378.

Attendance at the Bach concerts was up about 2,000 but was down about 3,000 at the Mozart series. The Wednesday evening chamber music events continued to prove their popularity, drawing 200 more to the theater concert hall than last year for the comparative one week period and 1,691 more—for seven weeks—than in 1960.

26,675 at Rescarsals

The Saturday morning open rehearsals drew 26,675 persons to the Shed for the benefit of the BSO musicians' pension fund this year, compared to 19,092 last season. Coupled with the 6,300 persons who turned out for the special performance by Danny Kaye for the benefit of the pension fund, the orchestra benefits attracted a total of 32,975.

Two benefits were staged here this season to aid the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Pops at Tanglewood and the "gala evening," which replaced the former Tanglewood on Parade program. These two events drew 14,429 this season, 1,187 less than last year.

Membership in the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center dropped slightly this year as did contributions. A total of 4,027 joined the organization this season, against 4,067 last year and contributions this season totaled $33,357, compared to $34,195 in 1960.

Dr. Munch left Tanglewood immediately following the concert and went to Albany where he boarded a plane for New York to make a flight connection for Paris, France. He will remain there until the Boston Symphony opens its 1961-62 season Sept. 29 at Symphony Hall in Boston.

Contrary to a belief held by many people, Dr. Munch did not end his duties as musical director of the BSO at the conclusion of the Festival season yesterday afternoon. His official retirement is effective in September, 1962, when the Berkshire Festival season ends. Several weeks ago, the BSO announced his retirement plans in 1962, but since that time many persons have been of the opinion that it was effective at the close of this season. He will be succeeded after next year's Festival by Eric Leinsdorf, musical director of the Metropolitan Opera Association.

Two Leaving BSO

When the season drew to a close yesterday afternoon, Dr. Munch called from their desks two of the BSO musicians who are leaving the orchestra after many years of service. One, Emil Kornsand, a first violin player, is retiring and the other, Theodore Brewster, a bassoon player, has not revealed his plans for the future. Both shared in the ovation given the conductor, the orchestra, chorus and soloists.

Mr. Kornsand joined the BSO in 1939 under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Educated in Berlin, Germany, he was for 13 years first violinist of the State Opera in Berlin and played first violin and viola in the Edwin Fisher Chamber Orchestra.

Mr. Brewster, a student at the Berkshire Music Center from 1947 to 1949 when he joined the orchestra, is a native of Cleveland Heights, Ohio. He was graduated from the New England Conservatory of Music, studying with Ernst Panenka and Raymond Allard of the BSO.

Festival
Continued on Page 15

Whitestone

CONGRATULATING CHORUS from the University of Montreal, following their appearance at Tanglewood with the Festival Chorus yesterday afternoon in a performance of Berlioz' "Romeo et Juliette Dramatic Symphony," is Dr. Charles Munch, center, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Surrounded by the Montreal singers, Dr. Munch shakes hands with Fernand Graton, choral director at University of Montreal and former Berkshire Music Center student, who trained the Montreal group. Dr. Hugh Ross, head of choral department at BMC, right, looks on. Dr. Munch has left for his home in Paris.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
D. 869,958 S. 1,186,625
SEP 10 1961

Tanglewood Festival Attended by 210,438

A grand total of 210,438 persons attended the 15 Boston Symphony orchestra concerts and related events at the 1961 Berkshire Music festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. A total of 126,378 attended the full orchestra concerts. The remainder were present at open rehearsals, 18 Bach, Mozart, and chamber music concerts, a benefit program by Danny Kaye, and a Boston "Pops" evening. Last year's total for six instead of seven weeks was 173,579. Ticket sales this year were $533,136.

The 21st season of the Berkshire Music center—the summer school of music at Tanglewood — attracted 284 students from 36 states and 10 foreign countries. Aaron Copland was chairman of faculty.

The 1962 festival will begin July 6, and will be extended to eight weeks. The school will be in session for the full festival period.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
AUG 23 1961

ATTENDANCE, SALES UP AT TANGLEWOOD

1961 Berkshire Festival Is Extended to Seven Weeks

LENOX—Both attendance and ticket sales increased during the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, compared with 1960 figures.

Total of 210,438

For a six-week period, 1961 attendance totaled 175,759, compared with 173,579 in 1960. The 1961 festival was extended one week and seventh-week attendance totaled 34,679.

Ticket sales for 1961 totaled $533,136, compared with $452,112,50 in 1960.

By extending the festival a week, the quantity of concerts by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra was increased from 12 to 15, the chamber music concerts from six to seven and the open rehearsals from six to seven.

15 by Full Orchestra

The full orchestra presented the 15 concerts on five week ends; a chamber orchestra of Boston symphony Orchestra players presented three concerts of music by Bach and three concerts of music by Mozart on the first two festival week ends. Charles Munch conducted the six Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full orchestra. Among his guest conductors were Pierre Monteaux (three concerts), Aaron Copland, Eugene Ormandy, Richard Burgin and Leonard Bernstein; nine members of the orchestra were among the soloists invited to appear at festival concerts.

Composers represented at the 12 concerts by the full orchestra include Beethoven (seven), Brahms (three), Richard Strauss (three), Bartok (two), Copland (two), Liszt (two), Respighi (two), Schumann (two), Stravinsky (two), Tchaikovsky (two), and one composition each by Berlioz, DeFalla, Debussy, Franck, Hanson, Harris, Haydn, Honegger, Mahler, Mendelssohn, Piston, Poulenc, Prokofiev, Rachmanoff, Ravel, Roussel, Schuman, Shapero, Sibelius and Viotti.

Participants in the seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts included the Curtis Quartet with Joseph dePasquale and Samuel Mayes, the Budapest Quartet and the Kroll Quartet, the Boston Fine Arts Quartet with Joseph dePasquale, the Beaux Arts Trio of New York, the New York Pro Musica, and Claudio Arrau in a Liszt sesquicentennial recital. In addition to the Liszt program and the New York Pro Musica's program of Early Renaissance music, composers represented at these concerts include Beethoven (three), Mozart (three), Schubert (two), Brahms, Diamond, Haydn, Milhaud, Roussel and Schumann.

Summer School of Music

In addition to the concerts of the Berkshire Festival, the orchestra maintains a summer school of music at Tanglewood—the Berkshire Music Center. This summer was the 21st since the founding of the school in 1940. Directed by Munch with Copland his chairman of faculty, the 1961 session attracted 284 students from 36 states and 10 foreign countries.

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra first visited the Berkshires in 1936, it gave three concerts in four days to audiences totaling 15,000.

The 1962 festival, which will begin on July 6, will be extended to eight weeks; the Berkshire Music Center will be in session for the full festival period.

213

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
AUG 27 1961

Berkshire Festival Is at Crossroads

By ROBERT TAYLOR

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra first visited the Berkshires in 1936 it gave three concerts in four days to audiences totalling 15,000. The 1961 Festival was held for seven weeks and more than 200,000 heard its concerts. These are the statistics of the Festival and, like most statistics, they don't tell the complete story.

They are quantitative estimates. From this viewpoint, however, the Berkshire Festival is a towering success. Audience attendance has grown each year.

Actually the attendance for 12 concerts by the full orchestra was slightly below that of last year, on a six-week basis: 97,657 in 1961 against 102,704 in 1960. The seventh weekend this year brought the total to 126,721. But even on a six-week basis, the slight dip does not represent a true lapse.

During its opening concerts the 1961 Berkshire Festival was plagued by cold weather and rain to a degree not encountered last season. The chamber music concerts, where the same conditions played a lesser role, out-grossed 1960 8,285 (or 9,725 over seven weeks) to 8,034—not much of a perceptible increase, yet indicative of growth under the circumstances.

So far as the programs were concerned, Charles Munch conducted the six Bach-Mozart concerts as well as a majority of the concerts with full orchestra. Among his guest conductors were Pierre Monteux. (three concerts), Aaron Copland, Eugene Ormandy, Richard Burgin and Leonard Bernstein. We may assume that prior commitments prevented the appearance of Erich Leinsdorf, the BSO's Conductor-Elect.

Seven works by Beethoven were featured at the Shed concerts; three by Brahms; three by Strauss; two by Bartok; two by Lizst; two by Respighi; two by Schumann; two by Stravinsky; to by Tchaikowsky; and one score each by Berlioz, De Falla, Debussy, Franck, Hanson, Harris, Haydn, Honegger, Mahler, Mendelssohn, Piston Pouleno Prokofiev, Rachmaninoff, Ravel, Roussel, Schuman, Shapero Sibelius and Viotti.

Which brings us back to the story not told by the statistics, the qualitative story.

You may recall at the opening of the season, the distinguished music critic of the New York "Times," Harold Schonberg, took exception to the program which he deemed inbred and stereotyped to an extraordinary degree. And Mr. Schonberg was right—from a professional viewpoint.

We looked askance at this view, for the Festival has developed into such a mass cultural center that it seemed to us the standards of a coterie audience of tastemakers could not be applied. Since then, a prominent musicologist in Berkshire residence has termed the Shed concerts "provincial." Criticism has been voiced in other quarters.

The Festival has sought to offset this through the chamber series and the admirable Fromm Foundation concerts. Still, the fact remains at the close of the 1961 series that the Tanglewood concerts confront the dilemma of mass culture in a democracy.

The dilemma, simply, is whether to be popular or to follow the path of stern artistic integrity. It is more complex than this, of course; but there is evidence in its program-making that Tanglewood would like to be both. More people heard Poulenc and Prokofiev than could possibly crowd into the winter auditoriums.

Were these people as sensitive to the values of the works, though, as the coterie audience? Can it be said their motives were musical—or were they along for something to do on a summer weekend? Certainly the visitor cannot escape the impression that a segment of the Tanglewood audience consists of rollicking vacationers, although the audience, by and large, is attentive and discreet.

But as the Festival extends its season to eight weeks, as the concerts mount in public favor, as the boxoffice shows that classical music pays its way, can the fete afford to maintain high standards? Is the Festival successful if it pleases the public, rather than the professionals of music? An assessment of its proper role is needed.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 40,709
AUG 21 1961

Tanglewood Attendance Hit 210,438

(Special to The American)

LENOX, MASS. — The Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood with its added seventh week of concerts is now a thing of history but not before piling up a total attendance of 210,438, of which 34,679 were added during the final week of splendid concerts.

It was a week end that found Charles Munch conducting on Friday when Claudio Arrau repeated the triumphs of his Wednesday night concert during which he gave an all-Liszt program. Munch also conducted yesterday afternoon's final concert. Saturday night Pierre Monteux conducted Stravinsky, Rachmaninoff, and Tchaikovsky in what was his final concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Now at 86-years of age Monteux instead of going into retirement has just taken a new position as chief conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra. We always said he conducted with a youthfulness that would be the envy of younger conductors. His new appointment in London bears this out. Gary Graffman was the splendid soloist in Rachmaninoff's "Piano Concerto No. 2 in C minor." There were 12,698 on hand for Monteux's final concert.

Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" received a fine performance from the Festival Chorus with the soloists, Kapleff, McCollum, and Gramm before a large and enthusiastic audience Sunday afternoon.

Concerts during the six weeks with the full orchestra totaled 126,378 in 1961 as against 102,704 last year. In addition there were 28,721 in the audiences of the added seventh week this year. Next year the festival will be for eight weeks. Attendance at the three Bach concerts was 13,129 this year as against 11,949 in 1960. For the Mozart concerts the 1961 total of 13,502 was lower than the 1960 total of 16,184. Chamber music concerts drew 9,725 including 1,440 for Arrau as against 8,034 in 1960 when one concert less was given. The pension fund open rehearsals on Saturday mornings brought 26,675 in 1961 as against 19,902 last year. The Danny Kaye benefit performance brought 6,300 and was limited to the capacity of the shed. The 1961 Gala performance brought 3,630 compared with 2,448 in 1960. The grand total for six weeks in 1960 was 173,579. This year it was 175,759. With the added seventh week the grand total was 210,438, a figure to indicate that the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood is one of the established facts of American musical history. S. M.

ALBANY, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 67,629 S. 118,093
AUG 9 1961

Around The Town

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

Last call for Tanglewood and the outstanding musical festival in the world right in Albany's back yard. The 104-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Charles Munch—and some guest conductors—are in the penultimate week, with the final series of three concerts drawing to a regretable close Sunday afternoon, August 20.

The total attendance through last Sunday afternoon, exclusive of the Danny Kaye special and that of the Boston Pops under Arthur Fiedler, adds up to just under 100,000 with another week to go. This record compares very favorably with the 1960 season in a year that, in many respects, in other lines of endeavor—horse racing, motels, restaurants etc. is below par, proving, conclusively that "Music hath charms to soothe the savage breast."

We mentioned the figure "104-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra" which boasts three members of the distaff side—Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flutist; Winifred Winograd, member of the cello section and Olivia Luetcke, harpist. Actually, last Sunday afternoon, there were 105 members of the orchestra, augmented for the occasion by Danny Kaye, who occupied a seat in the box of Gertrude Robinson Smith, the founder of the Berkshire Musical Festival. Mr. Kaye is the only honorary member of the orchestra, having added some $26,500 to the Pension Fund with his hilarious appearance a couple of weeks ago. At the conclusion of "The Pines of Rome," Mr. Munch called Danny Kaye to the podium to acknowledge the ovation accorded both "conducters."

One of the most encouraging aspects of the Tanglewood concerts is the great number of young people who attend, fugitives from the "rock 'n' roll" set. Many of the youngsters are from the nearby Summer camps, chaperoned by their men and women counselors, models of propriety and decorum. One is surprised to see how many physically handicapped people attend the concerts; some in wheel chairs, others using crutches. One young lady was guided by her Seeing Eye Dog. Apparently he was not allergic to the "Three Bs" since he made no vocal protest during the concert.

During the Sunday afternoon concerts the wall to wall carpeting greensward is preempted by as many as 8,000 music lovers who bring their blankets, their basket lunches, and their scores of the music to be performed, listening sight unseen to the works of the masters, which, due to the new acoustical treatment of the shed can be enjoyed from any part of the spacious grounds. There is only one discordant note in this arrangement: the lack of a sign carrying the admonition: "Don't Be A Litterbug."

One of the most interesting intermission safaris is the opportunity to rub elbows with the elite of Boston and the Berkshires who occupy the boxes which bisect the great shed, built in the form of a gigantic piece of pie. Gertrude Robinson Smith's center box, and that of Mrs. Koussevitzky are always filled with celebrities, not only of the business world, but stars of the concert, stage, screen and television, sartorially correct, in direct contrast to the many Bermuda shorts and, on warm days, the kicking off of shoes and sandals by the hoi polloi. Here and there one may see attractive women from the Orient, dressed in their colorful saris and members of the secretariat of the United Nations, a veritable melting pot which speaks volumes for the future peace of the world through the common language of music.

And so we suggest that if you have always planned to attend the Tanglewood concerts, but never got around to it, arrange to be among those present—you will see innumerable Albany friends and acquaintances during the weekends' series, Friday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon, or the concluding concerts, bringing to a close the 1961 festival, Sunday afternoon. Aug. 20

165 Church Street

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 47,136
SEP 5 1961

TANGLEWOOD and the Berkshire Music Festival ran this year for seven weeks and next year will be expanded to an eight-week season, due to the continued high interest shown by attendance figures.

The seventh week this year drew a total of 34,679 persons in addition to the 175,759 who had attended the first six weeks bringing the total to 210,438 for the season. Even on the six-week basis the attendance this year was up 2,180 over that of last year.

The summary of attendance this year also shows the increasing interest in the Saturday morning open rehearsals, which this year for the seven weeks drew 26,675 persons.

It has also been announced that next year the Berkshire Music Center will be in session for the full eight-week festival period.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955
AUG 21 1961

Tanglewood Drew 210,438 In Seven Weeks

The 24th season of the Berkshire Music Festival ended Sunday afternoon.

The large audience upped the total attendance figure to 210,438 for the seven week period. Last year's figure for the six week event was 173,539.

The final program featured the "Romeo and Juliet" symphony by Berlioz, with Charles Munch conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

165 Church Street

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
AUG 27 1961

LENGTHENING

This summer's extension of the Berkshire Music Festival from six to seven weeks meant a considerably larger total attendance for the festival. It was 163,034, as against the 136,871 attendance for that year.

As the season ended, Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony, announced that next year the Berkshire Festival would run to eight weeks.

165 Church Street — New York

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
D. 539,448 SAT. 524,840
AUG 26 1961

Attendance Up

Attendance for the seven-week summer season at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., was 210,438, the festival office reports, compared to 173,579 for last year's six-week season.

214 -1

165 Church Street
MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY-CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
SEP 1961

Lenox, Mass.

Tanglewood Doldrums

Discriminating music lovers became somewhat dismayed at the Berkshire Festival programs this season. The choice of works offered little stimulation outside the standard repertory, the list of soloists suggested repetition, and the policy reflected the status quo, based of course on the sterling quality of the Boston Symphony performances.

The conservative series of concerts found the Festival in the doldrums. Gone was any thread of continuity, for even the idea of "Great Composer" weekends had been dropped. About a half-dozen contemporary works could be found among the 15 programs, once the Bach and Mozart weekends had been given. A musicological curiosity became the chief offering of the Berkshire Music Center's Opera Department. Fortunately the Fromm Music Foundation continued its presentation of contemporary chamber music. Unexpectedly, the Lenox Quartet, brought together three years ago as the string contingent of the Fromm Players, presented a contemporary program gratis. Passing recognition of the Liszt sesquicentennial occurred, but it was hardly more than a courteous gesture.

The pattern of special events included a Pension Fund concert featuring the inimitable Danny Kaye as guest conductor, the Boston Pops with Arthur Fiedler, the Gala Evening for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, and the tribute to Gertrude Robinson Smith, founder of the Berkshire Festival. At the concert of July 21, Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees presented her with a scroll, signed by him and Charles Munch, and a specially made recording of Poulenc's Gloria. The inscription on the scroll reads: "Gertrude Robinson Smith with admiration for her vital interest and energy that have initiated and built the Berkshire Festival and the Music Shed at Tanglewood. The Boston Symphony Orchestra offers this testament of gratitude on the occasion of her 80th birthday." The recording was that of the world premiere given in Boston last January.

This Poulenc work graced the first program with the full orchestra in the Music Shed. Conducted by Mr. Munch and sung by Adele Addison and the Festival Chorus, it confirmed the first impressions of a beautifully fashioned, warmly felt creation. The following night William Schuman's Seventh Symphony absorbed the attention of a large audience and won the composer, present for the occasion, prolonged applause. It remains a challenging work, sufficiently controversial to classify listeners pro and con, yet powerful enough to survive the arguments. It demands further hearings, each of which should prove more rewarding, for undoubtedly this symphony marks a milestone in Schuman's career.

Bartok's Violin Rhapsody, played by Isaac Stern, and Viola Concerto, played by Joseph de Pasquale, might be listed as the only other provocative items. Aaron Copland conducted his Preamble and Appalachian Spring. Mr. Munch played Piston's Three New England Sketches and Honegger's First Symphony and Leonard Bernstein included Stravinsky's Symphony of Psalms as variants among more familiar works.

The advent of Eugene Ormandy's Berkshire Festival debut created considerable stir. As a recent summer Berkshire resident he was able to accept Mr. Munch's invitation. That he came, conducted, and conquered with brilliant success made the occasion exhilarating. The concert highlighted his virtuoso propensities and revealed him an effective showman. His sure-fire program consisted of Strauss's Don Juan, Harris' Third Symphony, Roussel's Bacchus et Ariane and the Brahms Second Symphony, most of it played somewhat too loud but nevertheless overwhelmingly.

This season three memorial concerts paid tribute to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky, who died ten years ago. Because of their close association with him, Richard Burgin and Leonard Bernstein were asked to join Mr. Munch to conduct these programs. It happened that the concert of Aug. 13 marked the 26th anniversary of the first Boston Symphony concert in the Berkshires and thus the beginning of the realization of Koussevitzky's dream of a music center there.

Mr. Burgin programmed Haydn's Symphony No. 88, a Koussevitzky favorite, and Mahler's Second, the Resurrection Symphony. Mr. Bernstein presented Shapero's Adagietto, commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, and Stravinsky's Symphony of Psalms, commissioned for the orchestra's 50th anniversary. Mr. Munch played Hanson's Elegy for My Friend Serge Koussevitzky, commissioned for the 75th anniversary, and Honegger's First Symphony, commissioned for its 50th.

In noting the Liszt celebration, Byron Janis played the two piano concertos and Claudio Arrau gave a recital of his piano works. During the Festival Pierre Monteux conducted three concerts. Extended for an extra week, the Festival closed with a performance of Berlioz's Romeo and Juliet on Aug. 20. It had begun with larger audiences for the Bach and Mozart weekends, but attendance on the whole thereafter averaged about the same as last season. The Boston Pops concert drew 10,800.

As a novelty, the American premiere of Paisiello's King Theodore in Venice introduced a charmingly mellifluous, conventional 18th-century opera. Though Casti's libretto was highly praised, it provided little more than a series of pegs on which to hang overlong arias. Indeed, the work somewhat justified Gluck's desire to reform opera because of its lack of dramatic cogency.

An English version by Arthur Schoep and Boris Goldovsky made understanding the text possible where almost everybody appeared to be somebody else. The translaters could not, however, resist being cute. Their production was highly commendable, however, enhanced by the settings of Aristides Gazetas and costumes by Leo Van Witsen. Unfortunately the student orchestra was not ready, so that the performance was given with Maurits Sillem playing the piano.

The opera has two extended finales which give it special interest in the light of those associated with Mozart's famous works. The septet closing the first act is ingeniously contrived but errs in length, while the concluding finale with its extended fugato defines Paisiello's exceptional craftsmanship. One perplexing aspect of the presentation was the ornamentation of the vocal line, provided by Mr. Sillem as stylistically more authentic than the original manuscript. If the performance was a bit stilted, the student performers could not be wholly to blame.

The Fromm Foundation contribution was three-fold: the chamber music concert honoring four composers in residence at Tanglewood—Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner, Lukas Foss, and Roberto Gerhard; the seven weekly lecture-concerts comprising the annual Seminar in Contemporary Music; and the grants to 11 musicians for the study and performance of contemporary music at the Berkshire Music Center. The program for the special concert included Fortner's Third String Quartet and Gerhard's Concerto for Harpsichord, Strings and Percussion, both American premieres; Foss' Time Cycle; and Copland's Nonet for Solo Strings.

When the Lenox Quartet gave its concert, the program consisted of Kirchner's Quartert No. 1, Schoenberg's String Trio Opus 45, and Carter's Quartet No. 2. The regular Wednesday night chamber music concerts brought the Curtis Quartet, the Budapest Quartet, the Beaux Arts Trio, the New York Pro Musica, the Boston Fine Arts Quartet, and the Kroll Quartet, in addition to Mr. Arrau.

—Miles Kastendieck

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Courier
GT. BARRINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,564
AUG 24 1961

Summer and Our Economy

There probably is no way to measure accurately just what the summer seasons means to the economy of Southern Berkshire. Strictly speaking, the "summer season" runs roughly ten weeks, from about the last Saturday in June until Labor Day week end. Sime visitors come earlier in June and there are others who are our guests until about Columbus Day. But the vast majority are here during that ten-week period.

What started speculation along this line were the attendance and income figures for the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, which are published in today's Berkshire Courier. More than 210,000 persons paid more than $533,000 to attend the various events at Tanglewood during a seven-week period.

But those figures do not tell the complete story. True, many of the Tanglewood patrons are residents of the Berkshires. However, many of them are not. Some come into the area for only one concert but many others are here for full week ends. This means that they use hotels, motels, tourist homes and other shelter facilities. They patronize our eating places; many of them buy articles in our shops and many buy gasoline and other necessities while here.

So far this deals only with Tanglewood. The camps in the area attract thousands of children each year and their parents are in the area on so-called "parents' week ends". Thousands of others have summer homes here or cottages at the lakes and all of these have an impact on our economy. The summer theaters and music camps add their share.

Several resorts are filled with guests for a good part of the year. These guests visit our shops and stores and the resorts provide employment for many residents.

The horse show, the dog show, the annual Barrington Fair all attract visitors and the money they spend here works its way into our economy.

So while there is no way to measure this income accurately, it must mount up to a sizable figure.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Conn. Jewish Ledger
HARTFORD, Conn.
Weekly Jewish
Circ. 23,310
AUG 10 1961

THE CONNECTICUT JEWISH

Gelbloom to Join Boston Symphony

WEST HARTFORD — Gerald Gelbloom of 1520 Asylum Ave., has won a nationwide competition to become a violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Concertmaster of the Hartford Symphony Orchestra since 1954, Mr. Gelbloom auditioned last week at Tanglewood, Summer home of the Boston Symphony.

He will now travel with the orchestra throughout the year, playing the Winter season at Symphomy Hall in Boston and the Summer season at the Berkshire Music Festival in Lenox, Mass.

While in Hartford, Mr. Gelbloom was on the staff of the Hartford School of Music, the Hartt School of Music of the University of Hartford, and Wesleyan University. For the past three Summers he has been a member of the Casals Festival Orchestra in Puerto Rico, which honors cellist Pablo Casals.

He has been guest soloist many times at functions throughout the state and has also done private teaching in the belief that performing and instructing can and should be combined.

GERALD GELBLOOM

Mr. Gelbloom began his study of the violin at four years of age, and by 19 had become concertmaster of the New York City ballet theater. He performed under Stokowski in the New York City Symphony as well as playing in Cleveland and Baltimore orchestras.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
New Englander
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,558
AUG 1961

Hospital Benefits

The Massachusetts General Hospital, Boston, is the chief beneficiary of the estate of Reginald Gray, Boston attorney, estimated at $2,785,000.

The hospital will receive nine-tenths of the residue of the estate, the remaining tenth to go to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There are individual bequests totalling more than $500,000.

165 Church Street
MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY-CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
SEP 1961

214 -

Lenox, Mass.

Tanglewood Doldrums

Discriminating music lovers became somewhat dismayed at the Berkshire Festival programs this season. The choice of works offered little stimulation outside the standard repertory, the list of soloists suggested repetition, and the policy reflected the status quo, based of course on the sterling quality of the Boston Symphony performances.

The conservative series of concerts found the Festival in the doldrums. Gone was any thread of continuity, for even the idea of "Great Composer" weekends had been dropped. Above a half-dozen contemporary works could be found among the 15 programs, once the Bach and Mozart weekends had been given. A musicological curiosity became the chief offering of the Berkshire Music Center's Opera Department. Fortunately the Fromm Music Foundation continued its presentation of contemporary chamber music. Unexpectedly, the Lenox Quartet, brought together three years ago as the string contingent of the Fromm Players, presented a contemporary program gratis. Passing recognition of the Liszt sesquicentennial occurred, but it was hardly more than a courteous gesture.

The pattern of special events included a Pension Fund concert featuring the inimitable Danny Kaye as guest conductor, the Boston Pops with Arthur Fiedler, the Gala Evening for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, and the tribute to Gertrude Robinson Smith, founder of the Berkshire Festival. At the concert of July 21, Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees presented her with a scroll, signed by him and Charles Munch, and a specially made recording of Poulenc's Gloria. The inscription on the scroll reads: "Gertrude Robinson Smith with admiration for her vital interest and energy that have initiated and built the Berkshire Festival and the Music Shed at Tanglewood. The Boston Symphony Orchestra offers this testament of gratitude on the occasion of her 80th birthday." The recording was that of the world premiere given in Boston last January.

This Poulenc work graced the first program with the full orchestra in the Music Shed. Conducted by Mr. Munch and sung by Adele Addison and the Festival Chorus, it confirmed the first impressions of a beautifully fashioned, warmly felt creation. The following night William Schuman's Seventh Symphony absorbed the attention of a large audience and won the composer, present for the occasion, prolonged applause. It remains a challenging work, sufficiently controversial to classify listeners pro and con, yet powerful enough to survive the arguments. It demands further hearings, each of which should prove more rewarding, for undoubtedly this symphony marks a milestone in Schuman's career.

Bartok's Violin Rhapsody, played by Isaac Stern, and Viola Concerto, played by Joseph de Pasquale, might be listed as the only other provocative items. Aaron Copland conducted his Preamble and Appalachian Spring. Mr. Munch played Piston's Three New England Sketches and Honegger's First Symphony and Leonard Bernstein included Stravinsky's Symphony of Psalms as variants among more familiar works.

The advent of Eugene Ormandy's Berkshire Festival debut created considerable stir. As a recent summer Berkshire resident he was able to accept Mr. Munch's invitation. That he came, conducted, and conquered with brilliant success made the occasion exhilarating. The concert highlighted his virtuoso propensities and revealed him an effective showman. His sure-fire program consisted of Strauss's Don Juan, Harris's Third Symphony, Roussel's Bacchus et Ariane and the Brahms Second Symphony, most of it played somewhat too loud but nevertheless overwhelmingly.

This season three memorial concerts paid tribute to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky, who died ten years ago. Because of their close association with him, Richard Burgin and Leonard Bernstein were asked to join Mr. Munch to conduct these programs. It happened that the concert of Aug. 13 marked the 26th anniversary of the first Boston Symphony concert in the Berkshires and thus the beginning of the realization of Koussevitzky's dream of a music center there.

Mr. Burgin programmed Haydn's Symphony No. 88, a Koussevitzky favorite, and Mahler's Second, the Resurrection Symphony. Mr. Bernstein presented Shapero's Adagietto, commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, and Stravinsky's Symphony of Psalms, commissioned for the orchestra's 50th anniversary. Mr. Munch played Hanson's Elegy for My Friend Serge Koussevitzky, commissioned for the 75th anniversary, and Honegger's First Symphony, commissioned for its 50th.

In noting the Liszt celebration, Byron Janis played the two piano concertos and Claudio Arrau gave a recital of his piano works. During the Festival Pierre Monteux conducted three concerts. Extended for an extra week, the Festival closed with a performance of Berlioz's Romeo and Juliet on Aug. 20. It had begun with larger audiences for the Bach and Mozart weekends, but attendance on the whole thereafter averaged about the same as last season. The Boston Pops concert drew 10,800.

As a novelty, the American premiere of Paisiello's King Theodore in Venice introduced a charmingly mellifluous, conventional 18th-century opera. Though Casti's libretto was highly praised, it provided little more than a series of pegs on which to hang overlong arias. Indeed, the work somewhat justified Gluck's desire to reform opera because of its lack of dramatic cogency.

An English version by Arthur Schoep and Boris Goldovsky made understanding the text possible where almost everybody appeared to be somebody else. The translaters could not, however, resist being cute. Their production was highly commendable, however, enhanced by the settings of Aristides Gazetas and costumes by Leo Van Witsen. Unfortunately the student orchestra was not ready, so that the performance was given with Maurits Sillem playing the piano.

The opera has two extended finales which give it special interest in the light of those associated with Mozart's famous works. The septet closing the first act is ingeniously contrived but errs in length, while the concluding finale with its extended fugato defines Paisiello's exceptional craftsmanship. One perplexing aspect of the presentation was the ornamentation of the vocal line, provided by Mr. Sillem as stylistically more authentic than the original manuscript. If the performance was a bit stilted, the student performers could not be wholly to blame.

The Fromm Foundation contribution was three-fold: the chamber music concert honoring four composers in residence at Tanglewood—Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner, Lukas Foss, and Roberto Gerhard; the seven weekly lecture-concerts comprising the annual Seminar in Contemporary Music; and the grants to 11 musicians for the study and performance of contemporary music at the Berkshire Music Center. The program for the special concert included Fortner's Third String Quartet and Gerhard's Concerto for Harpsichord, Strings and Percussion, both American premieres; Foss' Time Cycle; and Copland's Nonet for Solo Strings.

When the Lenox Quartet gave its concert, the program consisted of Kirchner's Quartet No. 1, Schoenberg's String Trio Opus 45, and Carter's Quartet No. 2. The regular Wednesday night chamber music concerts brought the Curtis Quartet, the Budapest Quartet, the Beaux Arts Trio, the New York Pro Musica, the Boston Fine Arts Quartet, and the Kroll Quartet, in addition to Mr. Arrau.

—Miles Kastendieck

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Courier
GT. BARRINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,564
AUG 24 1961

Summer and Our Economy

There probably is no way to measure accurately just what the summer seasons means to the economy of Southern Berkshire. Strictly speaking, the "summer season" runs roughly ten weeks, from about the last Saturday in June until Labor Day week end. Sime visitors come earlier in June and there are others who are our guests until about Columbus Day. But the vast majority are here during that ten-week period.

What started speculation along this line were the attendance and income figures for the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, which are published in today's Berkshire Courier. More than 210,000 persons paid more than $533,000 to attend the various events at Tanglewood during a seven-week period.

But those figures do not tell the complete story. True, many of the Tanglewood patrons are residents of the Berkshires. However, many of them are not. Some come into the area for only one concert but many others are here for full week ends. This means that they use hotels, motels, tourist homes and other shelter facilities. They patronize our eating places; many of them buy articles in our shops and many buy gasoline and other necessities while here.

So far this deals only with Tanglewood. The camps in the area attract thousands of children each year and their parents are in the area on so-called "parents' week ends". Thousands of others have summer homes here or cottages at the lakes and all of these have an impact on our economy. The summer theaters and music camps add their share.

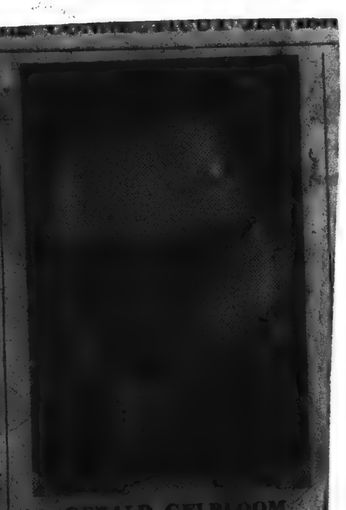
Several resorts are filled with guests for a good part of the year. These guests visit our shops and stores and the resorts provide employment for many residents.

The horse show, the dog show, the annual Barrington Fair all attract visitors and the money they spend here works its way into our economy.

So while there is no way to measure this income accurately, it must mount up to a sizable figure.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Conn. Jewish Ledger
HARTFORD, Conn.
Weekly Jewish
Circ. 23,310
AUG 10 1961

Gelbloom to Join Boston Symphony



GERALD GELBLOOM

WEST HARTFORD — Gerald Gelbloom of 1520 Asylum Ave., has won a nationwide competition to become a violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Concertmaster of the Hartford Symphony Orchestra since 1954, Mr. Gelbloom auditioned last week at Tanglewood, Summer home of the Boston Symphony.

He will now travel with the orchestra throughout the year, playing the Winter season at Symphony Hall in Boston and the Summer season at the Berkshire Music Festival in Lenox, Mass.

While in Hartford, Mr. Gelbloom was on the staff of the Hartford School of Music, the Hartt School of Music of the University of Hartford, and Wesleyan University. For the past three Summers he has been a member of the Casals Festival Orchestra in Puerto Rico, which honors cellist Pablo Casals.

He has been guest soloist many times at functions throughout the state and has also done private teaching in the belief that performing and instructing can and should be combined.

Mr. Gelbloom began his study of the violin at four years of age, and by 19 had become concertmaster of the New York City ballet theater. He performed under Stokowski in the New York City Symphony as well as playing in Cleveland and Baltimore orchestras.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
New Englander
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,558
AUG 1961

Hospital Benefits

The Massachusetts General Hospital, Boston, is the chief beneficiary of the estate of Reginald Gray, Boston attorney, estimated at $2,785,000.

The hospital will receive nine-tenths of the residue of the estate, the remaining tenth to go to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There are individual bequests totalling more than $500,000.

215

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 47,136

AUG 23 1961

1961 Berkshire Festival Drew 210,438 in 7 Weeks

The 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, which concluded last Sunday, drew a total audience of 210,438 during its seven-week season with total ticket sales amounting to $533,136.

* * *

LAST SUMMER, when the festival ran for six weeks, the total attendance was 173,579 and tickets sales amounted to $452,112.50.

The 1961 season marked the 26th year since the Boston Symphony Orchestra first participated in the festival and the 21st anniversary of the founding of the Berkshire Music Center.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra presented 15 concerts on five weekends this year; and a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony players presented a total of six concerts of music by Bach and Mozart on the first two Festival weekends. Charles Munch conducted the six Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full orchestra. Among his guest conducters were Pierre Monteux (three concerts), Aaron Copland, Eugene Ormandy, Richard Burgin and Leonard Bernstein. Nine members of the orchestra were among the soloists invited to appear at the festival concerts.

Seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts were presented this summer.

* * *

IN ADDITION to the concerts of the Berkshire Festival the orchestra maintains a summer school of music at Tanglewood—the Berkshire Music Center. The school, directed by Charles Munch and Aaron Copland as chairman of the faculty, attracted 284 students from 36 states and 10 foreign countries this summer.

The 1962 festival, which will begin next July 6, will be extended to eight weeks and the Berkshire Music Center will be in session for the full festival period.

ASBURY PARK, N.J.
PRESS
D, 35,771 S. 34,732

AUG 27 1961

Music Festival Attracts 210,438

LENOX, Mass. — The 1961 Berkshire Music Festival just concluded attracted 210,438 persons to its concerts, which produced a ticket revenue of $533,136.

This compares with 173,579 persons and $452,112.50 last year. A part of the increase was due to extending the concert season from six to seven weeks.

In addition to the concerts the Berkshire Music Center, a summer music school conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, attracted 284 music students from 36 states and 10 foreign countries. It was directed by Charles Munch, with Aaron Copeland as chairman of the faculty.

The 1962 festival will begin on July 6 and will run for the full eight weeks of the summer, as will the music school. When the festival first started in 1936, the orchestra gave three concerts in four days to audiences totaling 15,000.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879

AUG 21 1961

Festival Winds Up With 40,000 More Than Previous Year

The Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood ended yesterday afternoon with an audience of 8,860 on hand to hear Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the final concert of the season.

The Saturday evening concert drew 12,698 persons to hear Pierre Monteux conduct the orchestra in his final appearance as guest director of the 1961 season. Mr. Monteux has assumed principal direction of the London Symphony Orchestra.

The weekend crowd brought the season's total attendence to a record 210,438, which is 40,000 more than last year, although the total during the extra seventh week which was added this year was 33,239.

Ticket sales for the season were $533,000, almost $80,000 more than in 1960.

GREENVILLE, N.Y.
LOCAL
W. 535

SEP 6 1961

A Summary of the Berkshire Festival

A summary of the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox shows that this was the 26th year since the Boston Symphony Orchestra first participated; the 11th, and penultimate, season of Charles Munch's Festival direction; and the 21st anniversary of the founding of the Berkshire Music Center.

The full Orchestra presented 15 concerts on 5 weekends; a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony Orchestra players presented 3 concerts of music by Bach and 3 concerts of music by Mozart on the first two Festival weekends.

In addition to the concerts of the Berkshire Festival the Orchestra maintains a summer school of music at Tanglewood — the Berkshire Music Center. This summer was the 21st since the founding of the schoof in 1940. Directed by Charles Munch with Aaron Copland his chairman of faculty, the 1961 session attracted 284 students from 36 states and ten foreign countries.

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra first visited the Berkshires in 1936 it gave three concerts in four days to audiences totalling 15,000. The 1961 Festival was held for seven weeks and more than 200,000 heard its concerts. The 1962 Festival, which will begin on July 6, 1962, will be extended to eight weeks; the Berkshire Music Center will be in session for the full Festival period.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545

SEP 9 1961

Sunshine Over Tanglewood

By Louis Chapin
Lenox, Mass.

This Tanglewood season, the 26th since the Boston Symphony first participated, began under a summer cloud of controversy concerning the freshness of its programs, and ended with a slight increase over last year's total attendance—even without counting this year's additional week. The cloud, for the moment, seems to have drifted away.

The season had its impressive occasions and its routine ones. It also had one of unique light-heartedness, during Danny Kaye's romp as guest conductor, having "the best time of (his) life" on behalf of the orchestra's Pension Fund. Richard Burgin's failure, at one point, to predict the virtually unpredictable produced a solo squeak from the concertmaster's violin. Mr. Kaye's temperamental rampage was finally capped by a magnificent Kaye-Burgin bear-hug, and the performance went on.

As to the programs, the summer began with Bach and ended with Berlioz (Romeo and Juliet), which must have surprised no one acquainted with Charles Munch and the Tanglewood tradition. Bach's Magnificat, however, was joyously fresh, due in considerable part to two of its soloists — Adele Addison and Charles Bressler. That performance, for me, was a big break in the cloud.

Another notable weekend was the next to last, which was dedicated to the memory of the Berkshire Music Center's founder, Serge Koussevitzky. It brought to its audiences three conductors, each with his own kind of tribute: Mr. Burgin, as a colleague of Koussévitzky, showed above all his warmth of heart; Leonard Bernstein, as his pupil, showed brilliance; Dr. Munch, as his successor, showed his own particular wisdom.

Koussevitzky Weekend

(It should be mentioned that other conductors, on other weekends, also made distinctive contributions, including Pierre Monteux, Aaron Copland, and Eugene Ormandy.)

The major work of the Koussevitzky memorial was Mahler's "Resurrection" Symphony (No. 2 in C minor). Its full consequences came into view as Mr. Burgin spread it before us, with the vocal parts of the last two movements. Here Eunice Alberts, Nancy Carr, and the Tanglewood Chorus (trained by Alfred Nash Patterson) sang with transcendent sensitivity and devotion reflecting surely on their conductor's interpretive convictions.

The conclusion was one of sublime unanimity, with every element responding to Mr. Burgin's exhilarated direction and to the poet Klopstock's vision:

You will rise again, yes, rise again, my heart, in a moment.
Though stricken, borne aloft —to God!

Mr. Bernstein, present conductor of the New York Philharmonic and former Tanglewood student and faculty member, drew an audience of more than 13,000. His program was divided between a lyrical and deftly orchestrated Adagietto by Harold Shapero, Stravinsky's "Symphonie de Psaumes," done so as to show its Mussorgskyesque energies, and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

The latter work, a particular Bernstein tour de force, was undoubtedly what attracted much of the huge crowd, and the conductor did not send them away hungry. His performance—fulminating, lamenting, grunting, exulting—might almost have been a satire on a Danny Kaye satire on Bernstein. Yet it was undeniably brilliant, and whipped the last movement into a dizzy whirr of almost unbearable brightness.

Hanson's Elegy

Dr. Munch then offered the most specific musical tribute in Howard Hanson's Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky, written for the orchestra's 75th anniversary. Its tonal depths and melodic contours had every reason to be at home here, and Dr. Munch recognized them with his own wisdom and dignity.

Following Honegger's First Symphony—Gallic, vital, and elegiac in its closing—the last word was given to Beethoven. For all of countless previous hearings of the "Eroica" Symphony, a notable feature of the composer's picture of heroism was freshly underlined. The slow hymn-variation of the last movement was allowed, in Dr. Munch's uncrowded performance, to be the definitive statement on the subject. Beethoven and Napoleon had never seemed so far apart.

And the Boston Symphony, we couldn't help feeling, has been blessed during recent times with two quite different but quite splendid conductors.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955

AUG 19 1961

1962 TANGLEWOOD MUSIC FESTIVAL TO RUN 8 WEEKS THIS SEASON ENDS SUNDAY

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's seven-week Berkshire Festival closes Sunday at Tanglewood, Nenox.

For the final concert of the 196 Festival Charles Munch will con duct a performance of "Rome and Juliet" by Hector Berlioz. Hi guests in this performance will b Florence Kopleff, contralto, Joh McCollum, tenor, and Donal Gramm, bass, plus the Festiva Chorus which will be augmente by the University of Montrea Chorus.

The 1962 Berkshire Festival a Tanglewood will be extended from seven to eight weeks. It will open July 6 for 24 weekend concerts by the Boston Sympony Orchestra plus a chamber music series Wednesday evenings and events by students of the Berkshire Music Center, the Orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood.

AMSTERDAM, N.Y.
RECORDER AND DEMOCRAT
D: 13,783

AUG 18 1961

1962 Tanglewood Season Extended

Coinciding with the three final concerts of the Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass. during the coming weekend, trustees of the Boston Symphony have announced that the 1962 Tanglewood season will begin on July 6 and will extend through eight weeks instead of seven.

Tonight's concert will be conducted by Munch and the guest soloist will be Claudio Arrau, pianist. Pierre Monteaux will conduct Saturday night and the final concert will be at 2:30 Sunday when Berlioz' "Romeo et Juliette" will be given with three soloists and the festival chorus.

As in former years, the Tanglewood concerts have been attended by many music lovers of the lower Mohawk Valley, most of whom use the Berkshire section of the Thruway and the Massachusetts Turnpike in traveling to the festival.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
D. 66 353
AUG 10 1961

216 -1

Tanglewood Aide Welcomes Proposal for Concerts at Spa

Boston Symphony in Harmony With N.Y. Philharmonic Move

THOMAS D. PERRY JR.

By TED STRONGIN
Knickerbocker News Staff Writer

COMPETITION? It doesn't worry Thomas D. Perry Jr. at all. The manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which summers at Tanglewood, would welcome the New York Philharmonic as a summer neighbor at Saratoga Springs.

"If there's a thriving, flourishing and good summer home for the New York Philharmonic at Saratoga Springs, we will gain, too," Mr. Perry said.

Saratoga Springs has formed a group to see what the chances are of enticing both the Philharmonic and the New York City Ballet into a new summer home at the Spa.

The state is already renovating and enlarging the recreation facilities at the Spa. Harold G. Wilm, state conservation commissioner, has expressed interest in the Philharmonic idea.

★ ★ ★

MR. PERRY, who has been through the mill, offered nothing but friendly words of advice when informed of the Saratoga plans. The Bostonians took over Tanglewood, their beautiful estate in Lenox, Mass., in 1934. Twenty seven years later, Tanglewood is a spectacular success, one of the tourist wonders of the world.

"If you want summer concerts," Mr. Perry said, "it is essential to have an artistic direction."

"Somebody or it could be a town—must want to present something artistically good. Then the by-products fall into line."

On a typical summer weekend, upwards of 20,000 avid music lovers stream into the Tanglewood concert shed and decorate the surrounding lawn, too. Many more come for a peek during the day, without waiting for the music.

These are the by-products, a tremendous financial boost to Berkshire County, where Tanglewood is located.

★ ★ ★

"YOU MUST forget the profit impulse as a prime motive," Mr. Perry warned. "You've got to have enough courage to invite and then leave alone."

"If the Chamber of Commerce (or whoever gets the thing going) feels that it has an everlasting interest in directing it, it's likely to go wrong. It's better to leave the whole thing to the Philharmonic," he said.

What about help from local or state government?

"That gets into the whole question of subsidy," the Boston manager said, not willing to get into it just then.

★ ★ ★

WHAT ABOUT the state providing a building or other physical facilities?

"Fine," he said.

The City of Boston gives Mr. Perry's Symphony a place to play an annual series on the Charles River. The city polices and maintains the property. "We furnish the orchestra," Mr. Perry said.

It took a few years to iron out whose responsibility was what, he said, with some resulting fuss.

"They allow us to collect contributions," the manager said. The ticklish question in subsidy is usually whether admission can be charged to a publicly supported event. Tanglewood is privately supported.

"It's just plain too expensive if the Philharmonic didn't sell tickets," said Mr. Perry.

★ ★ ★

"IT PROBABLY would be difficult to start halfway with the Philharmonic," he added. "The day of the barn circuit is over. One shouldn't think halfway."

To interest them, there has to be a good building, adequate facilities, good acoustics, comfortable. Unless there's a shelter, you may or may not get an audience. After all, it does rain."

The Tanglewood shed seats 6,000 under cover.

Mr. Perry was much less sure about the ballet idea.

"You'd better get an extra $2 million," he commented. An orchestra can do with just a big room. Ballet needs a stage, dressing rooms, lighting equipment, storage space for sceneray, etc., he pointed out.

★ ★ ★

HOWEVER, Mr. Perry went for the idea of summer opera, which also needs stage paraphernalia. People like opera, he said, but in the summer can't find it adequately staged and housed.

There is another ingredient needed, the most important of all, Mr. Perry said.

"Mostly you need a man of grim determination and wild integrity, rock solid on all counts," the Boston manager said. This man must be dominated by his vision of the new summer home and the artistic treasures that could spread from it.

The Boston Symphony had such a man, Mr. Perry said, the late great Serge Koussevitzky, who made Tanglewood happen.

There's enough potential audience for the Philharmonic, if it located at the Spa, according to those trying to get it there.

And Saratoga Springs has the setting, too, the state reservation.

Certainly the Philharmonic has the artistic integrity and institutional know-how Mr. Perry considers essential.

Wanted: The man of vision and grim determination.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News-Times (e)
DANBURY, Conn.
Circ. 20,636
AUG 25 1961

Boston Symphony Announces 1962 8-Week Season

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1962 Berkshire Festival will be extended to eight weeks, it was announced following the closing concert of its 1961 seven-week festival last Sunday at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

Next season's festival will open on July 6 and will consist of 24 weekend concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra plus a chamber music series on Wednesday evenings and events by students of the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school of music, also at Tanglewood.

HACKENSACK, N.J.
RECORD
D. 98,806
AUG 26 1961

Festival Lists $533,136 Sales

The Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., did $533,136 in ticket sales this season, according to a summary released by the sponsors. Last year's 6-week season, a week shorter, did $452,112 in business.

Attendance for 6 weeks was 175,759, which was 2,000 more than 1960. The 7-week attendance was 210,438.

The Boston Symphony played 13 concerts to a total of 126,378.

In 1962, the Berkshire Festival will be extended to 8 weeks, and the Berkshire Music Center will be in session for the full Festival period. This year the Music Center school drew 284 students from 36 states and 10 foreign countries.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
AUG 19 1961

Long Tanglewood Season May Top Attendance Record

The extended 1961 Tanglewood season may top attendance records, although crowds at individual concerts have been slightly smaller than last year.

Last night 7,163 heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Charles Munch in a program of Debussy and Beethoven featuring piano soloist Claudio Arrau.

Despite the throng at the first concert in the extra week, the local room placement bureau reports one of the poorest nights of the season with relatively few requests for accommodations in private homes.

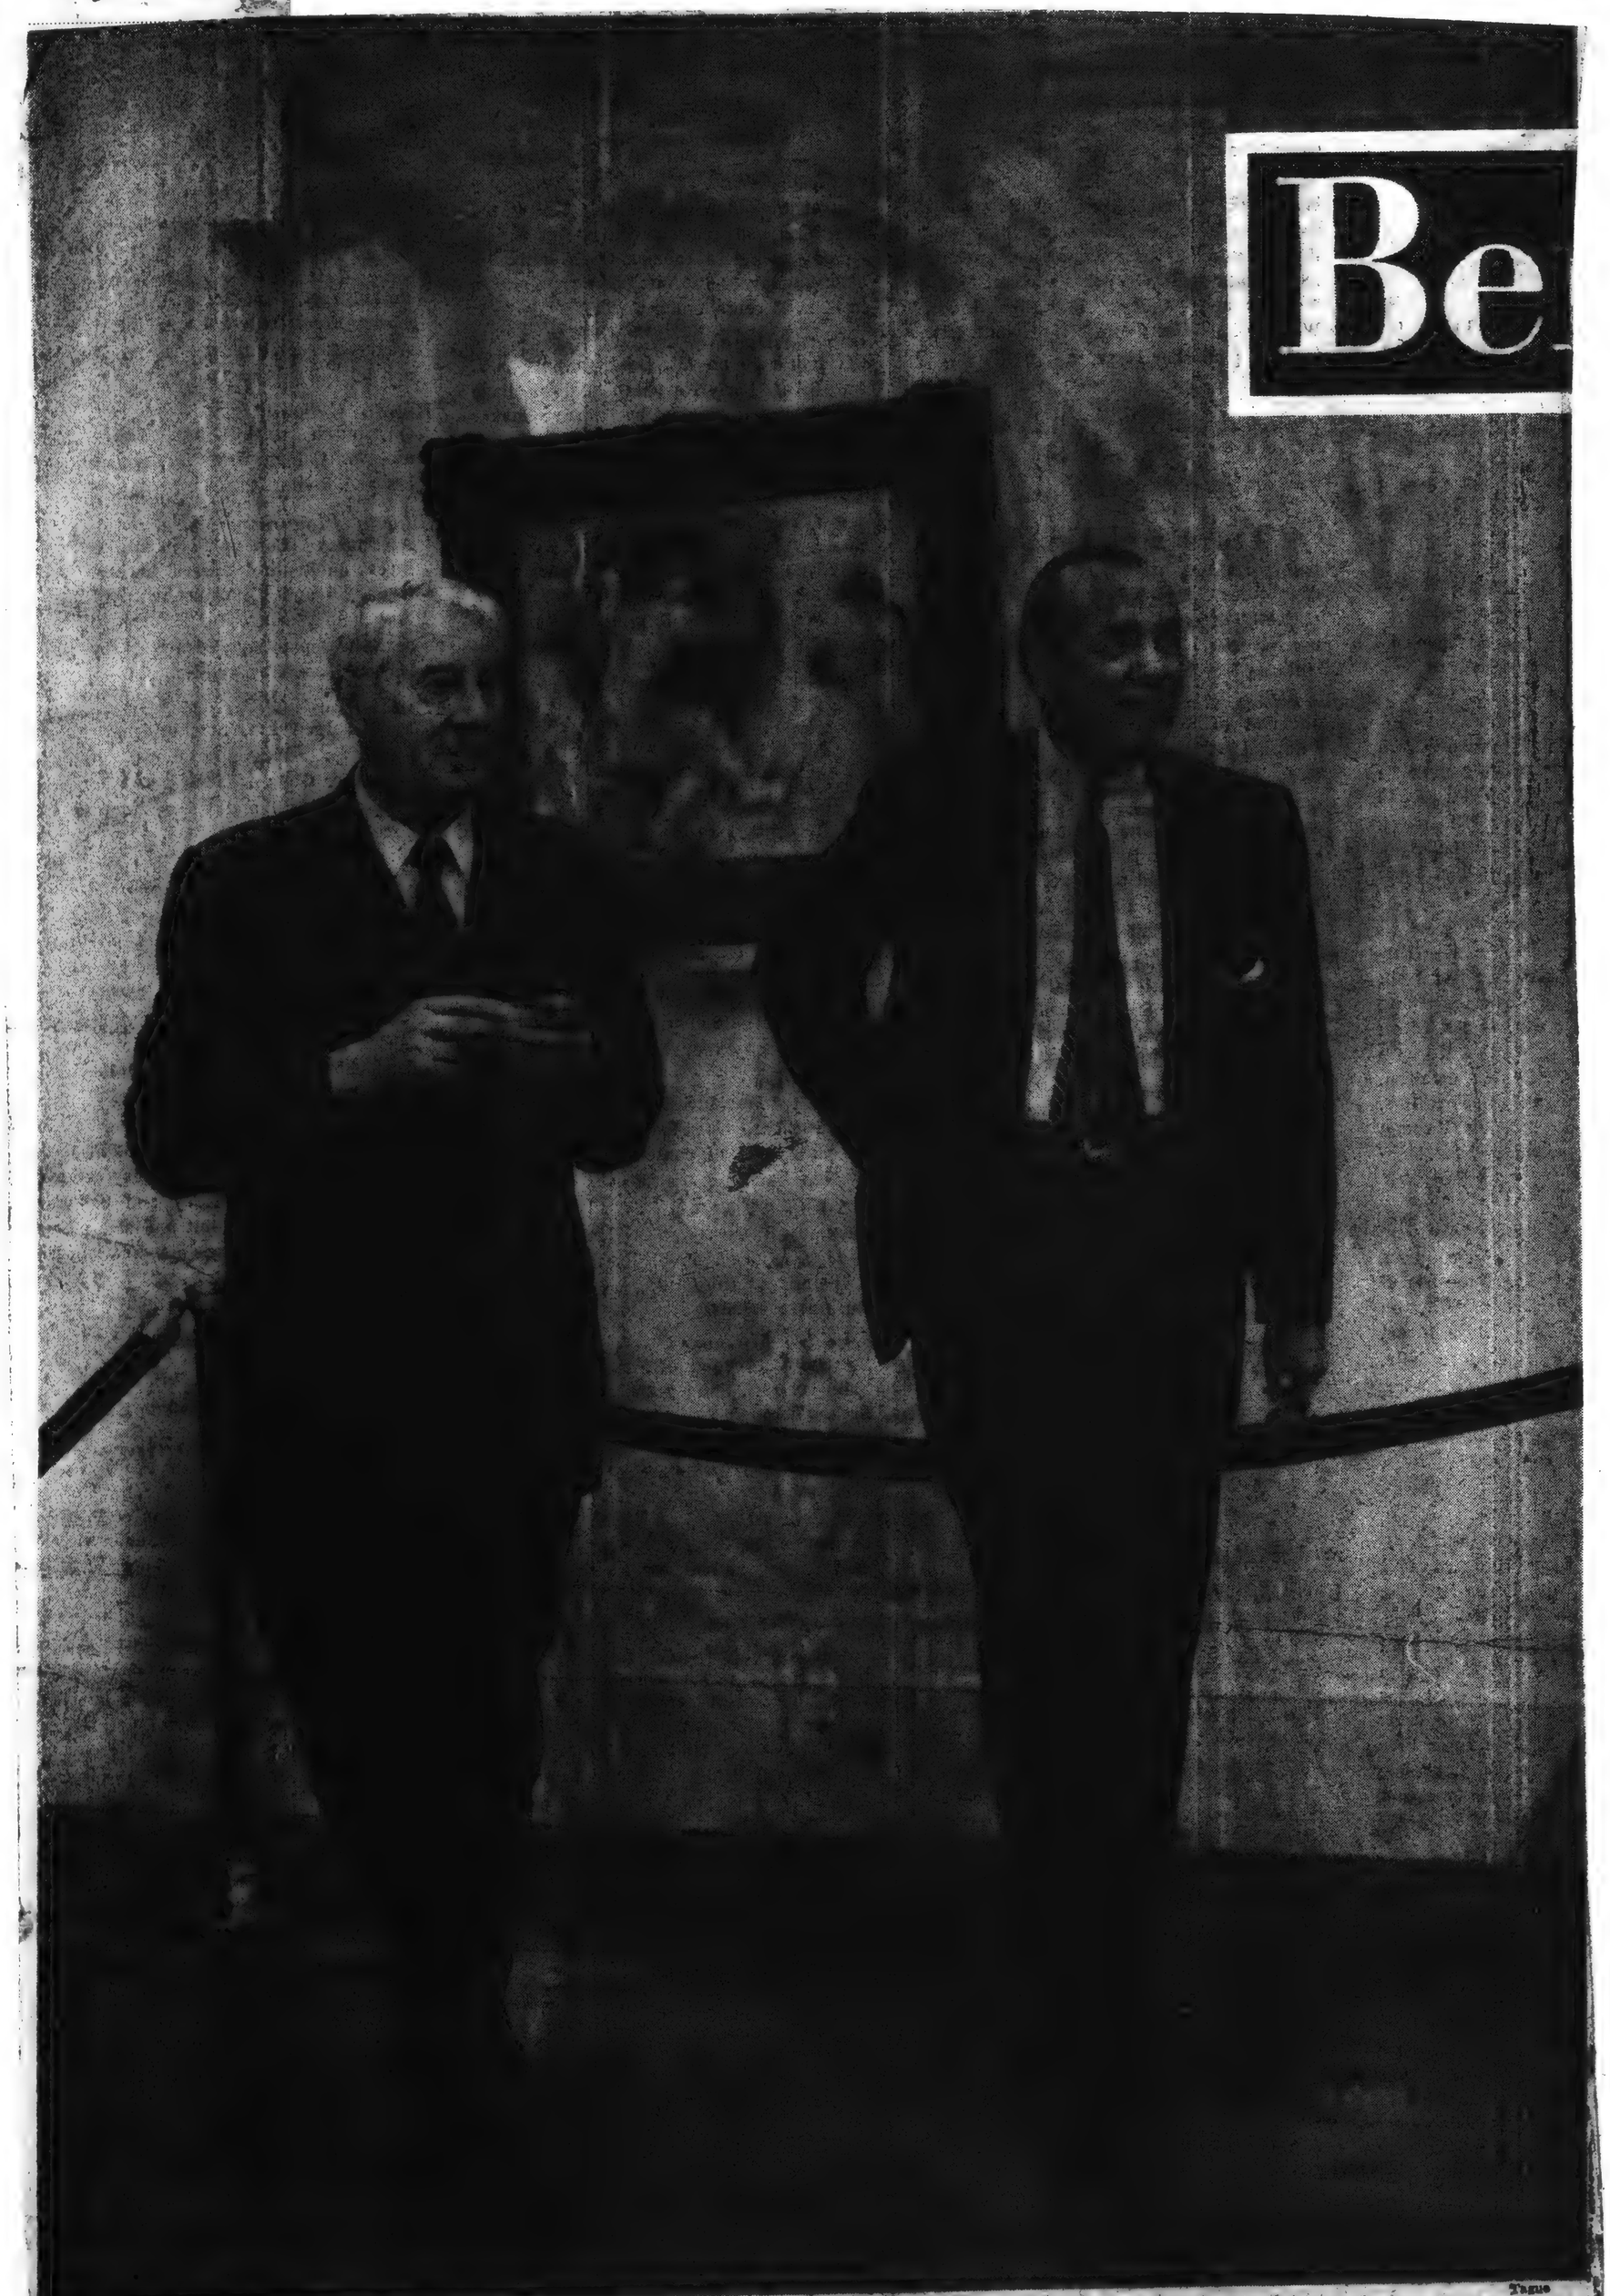
BLANK PAGE

217

New England Newspaper Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 29 1961

218 -1

Clark Institute Party



CONDUCTING CONDUCTOR Charles Munch through Clark Art Institute, museum director Peter Guille serves as host at party for the Boston Symphony Orchestra. (See Page 20)

Tague

STUDYING painting by William Bougereau titled "Nude," Dr. Munch is joined by Miss Sally Hemple, secretary to orchestra manager Thomas D. Berry Jr. The party was attended by more than 150.

ENJOYING himself in the air-conditioned museum is Einar Hansen, veteran member of the Boston Symphony violin section.

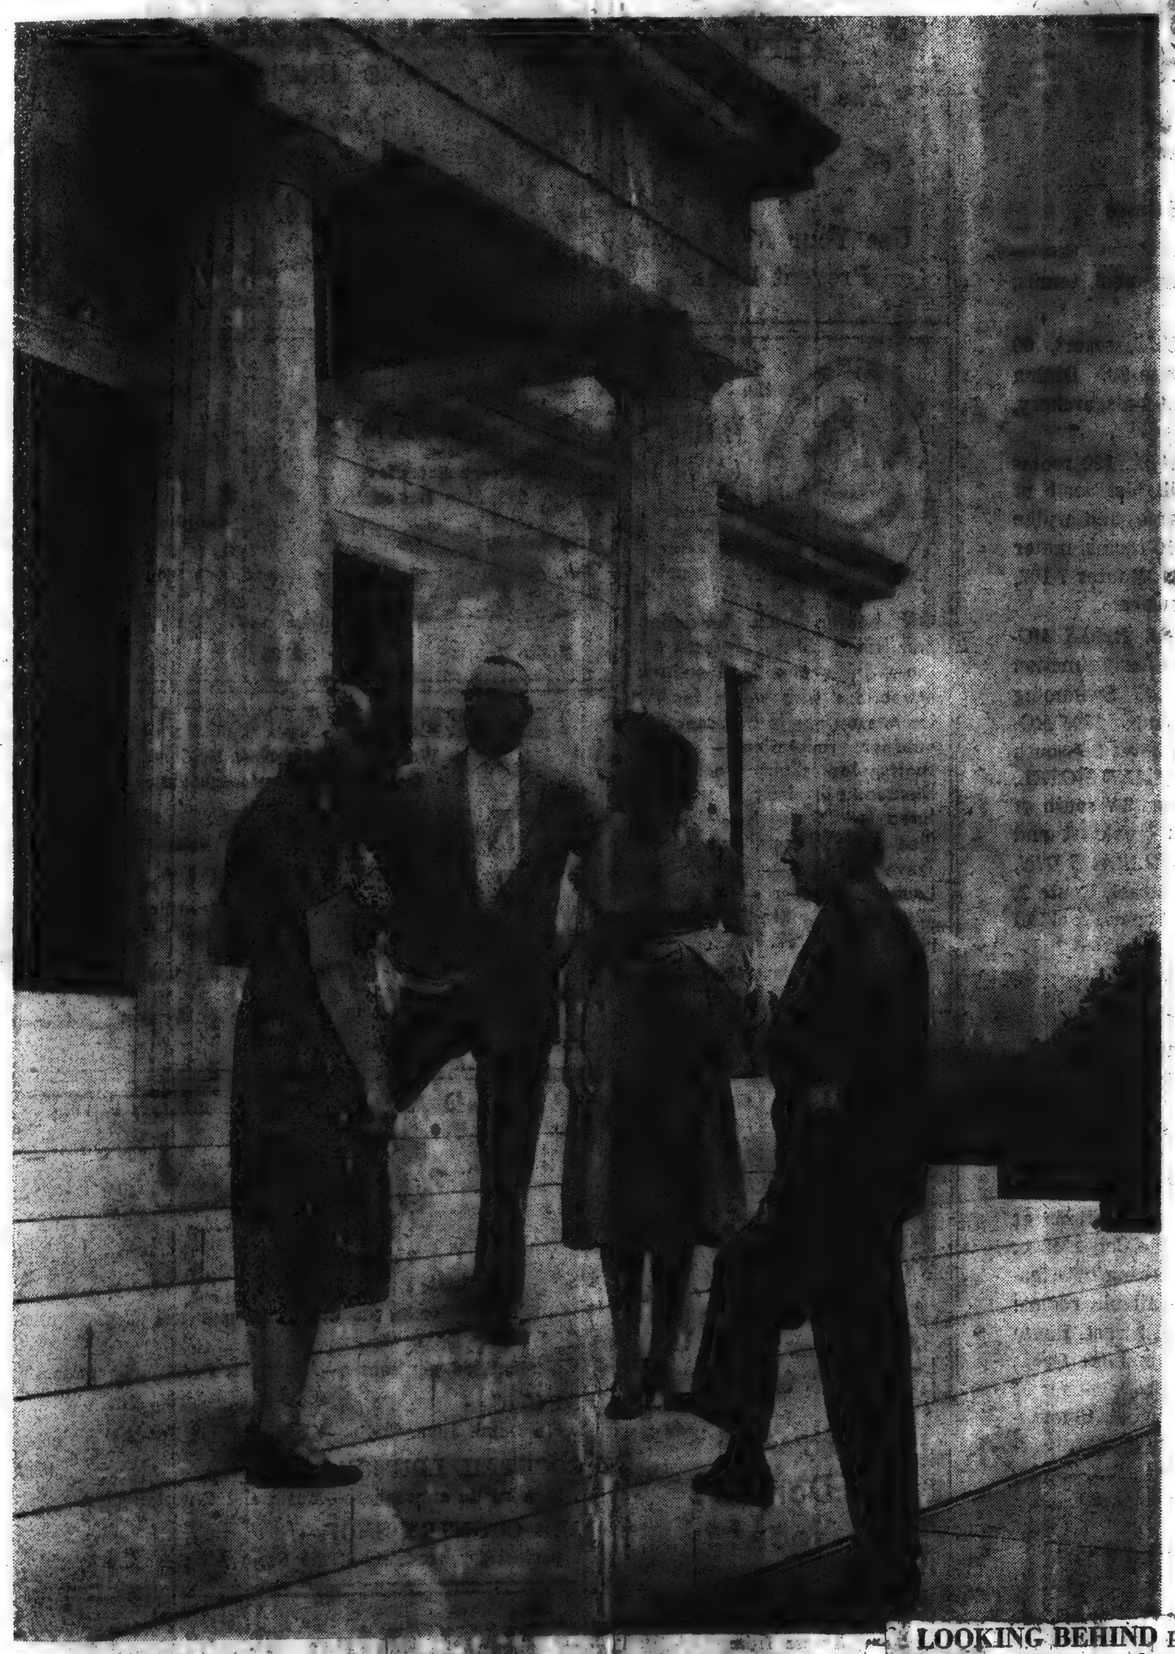
COMPOSER SCORES with humorous conversation. Wolfgang Fortner, Tanglewood composer-in-residence, is talking to Peter Guille and Thomas D. Perry Jr., with great gusto.

APPRECIATING a painting titled "Slave Market," by Jean-Leon Gerome, a BSO member relaxes to concentrate better.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

JUL 2 9 1961

220 -1



GREETING guests as they arrived for party given by the Clark Art Institute for the Boston Symphony Orchestra was George Ketteridge, assistant director of the marble museum in Williamstown. From the left are Mrs. William H. Roberts Jr. of Moorestown, N.J.; Mr. Ketteridge; Mrs. Thomas D. Perry, Jr., wife of the BSO manager; and Conductor Charles Munch. Mrs. Roberts is the mother of Mrs. Perry.

SOLID SILVER punchbowl valued at "under five figures," was used at the party, its contents being a highly refreshing mixture of champagne and cognac.

LOOKING BEHIND painting, Conductor Munch checks for identifying inscription or other data of interest to art collectors like himself.

221

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 25 1961

RECEPTION for members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Robert Sterling and Francine Clark Art Institute in Williamstown yesterday brought out more than 150 musicians and their wives. William Waterhouse, a violinist, holding daughter, Caitlin, visits with Thomas D. Perry Jr., BSO manager, left, as Mr. Waterhouse's son and wife look on.

Photos by Tague

COMPOSER in residence at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood this summer, Wolfgang Fortner, left, learns of some of the art treasures at the Clark Institute from Mrs. Peter Guille, wife of the director and hostess for the party.

VIOLINIST Einar Hansen, second from left, enjoys a break in the tour of the art galleries with his wife, left, Florence Dunn of Williamstown, assistant to G. Wallace Woodworth in the department of listening and analysis at the Berkshire Music Center, and Norman S. Shirk, assistant manager of the Boston Symphony. Dr. Charles Munch was also present.

2221

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News
WILLIAMSTOWN,
Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,700

JUL 27 1961 047

DR. CHARLES MUNCH, right, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra led a delegation of orchestra members, wives, husbands and members of the Berkshire Music Center faculty on a visit to the Sterling and Francine Clark Art Institute on Monday. Honored at a reception hosted by institute director Peter Guille and Mrs. Guille, the guests toured the museum. In the photo above taken in the Silver Room, Guille, on the left, is explaining the changes in silver styling through the years to his noted guest.

"Rigoletto"

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127

JUL 22 1961

Boston Symphony To Be Honored At Clark Institute

The full Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by conductor Charles Munch and accompanied by wives, husbands and members of the Berkshire Music Center faculty, will be honored at a reception at the Sterling and Francine Clark Art Institute on Monday afternoon.

Institute director Peter Guille and Mrs. Guille will be hosts at the party, which will be a private affair.

All the galleries in the museum will be open for the reception and the guests will be able to see the Winslow Homer exhibition plus the special show of Italian art which opened in March.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

JUL 24 1961

Clark Art Institute Is Host For Munch, BSO at Reception

WILLIAMSTOWN — The full Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Conductor Charles Munch and accompanied by wives, husbands and members of the Berkshire Music Center faculty, was honored by the Sterling and Francine Clark Art Institute here at a reception today.

Altogether, the Institute sent 235 invitations for the event, the second of its kind for musicians who perform and teach each summer in the Berkshires at Tanglewood in Lenox. As at the first reception, four years ago, the affair was a private party with refreshments and food specially chosen to maintain the art institute's tradition of hospitality.

Institute Director Peter Guille and Mrs. Guille were hosts at the afternoon reception.

All galleries in the museum were kept open for the reception. Now on view are a Winslow Homer exhibition, including 10 oil paintings and 11 water colors, along with drawings, etchings, lithographs and wood engravings, and a special show of Italian art opened in March.

The Italian show, commemorating the centennial celebration of the birth of modern Italy and exhibiting 25 paintings and drawings, is highlighted by a full-size simulation of a late 15th century Sienese altar with panels painted by Luca Signorelli. One of the original panels is in the Clark Institute collection. The five others, in widely separated museums, are represented by actual-size photomurals.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News
WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,700
JUL 27 1961

DR. CHARLES MUNCH, right, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra led a delegation of orchestra members, wives, husbands and members of the Berkshire Music Center faculty on a visit to the Sterling and Francine Clark Art Institute on Monday. Received at a reception hosted by institute director Peter Guille and Mrs. Guille, the guests toured the museum. In the photo above taken in the Silver Room, Guille, on the left, is explaining the changes in silver styling through the years to his noted guest.

"Rigoletto"

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUL 22 1961

Boston Symphony To Be Honored At Clark Institute

The full Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by conductor Charles Munch and accompanied by wives, husbands and members of the Berkshire Music Center faculty, will be honored at a reception at the Sterling and Francine Clark Art Institute on Monday afternoon.

Institute director Peter Guille and Mrs. Guille will be hosts at the party, which will be a private affair.

All the galleries in the museum will be open for the reception and the guests will be able to see the Winslow Homer exhibition plus the special show of Italian art which opened in March.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 24 1961

Clark Art Institute Is Host For Munch, BSO at Reception

WILLIAMSTOWN — The full Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Conductor Charles Munch and accompanied by wives, husbands and members of the Berkshire Music Center faculty, was honored by the Sterling and Francine Clark Art Institute here at a reception today.

Altogether, the Institute sent 235 invitations for the event, the second of its kind for musicians who perform and teach each summer in the Berkshires at Tanglewood in Lenox. As at the first reception, four years ago, the affair was a private party with refreshments and food specially chosen to maintain the art institute's tradition of hospitality.

Institute Director Peter Guille and Mrs. Guille were hosts at the afternoon reception.

All galleries in the museum were kept open for the reception. Now on view are a Winslow Homer exhibition, including 10 oil paintings and 11 water colors, along with drawings, etchings, lithographs and wood engravings, and a special show of Italian art opened in March.

The Italian show, commemorating the centennial celebration of the birth of modern Italy and exhibiting 25 paintings and drawings, is highlighted by a full-size simulation of a late 15th century Sienese altar with panels painted by Luca Signorelli. One of the original panels is in the Clark Institute collection. The five others, in widely separated museums, are represented by actual-size photo murals.

BLANK PAGE

224

Negro Dispute

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

AUG 5 1961

South Berkshire Weekly

Man Is More Than Skin Deep

By Frank V. McCarthy

LENOX.

A SMALL BUT manifest sample of the sort of tension which can develop around a demonstration of the race issue was in evidence here Tuesday as 21 students from Tanglewood filed through the center of town and picketed Tom's Barber Shop on Church Street for 19 minutes.

There were no catcalls, no jostling — no trouble at all. Nevertheless, there was a tension that could have led quickly to trouble under different circumstances. It became easy to understand how similar affairs in other parts of the nation have gotten quickly out of hand to become national calamities.

Like a small flame in dry grass, one troublemaker can easily start a lot of damage when a number of people gather unpoliced to participate or watch one of these affairs.

Fortunately, there was no evidence that anyone at the demonstration in Lenox Tuesday was bent on causing trouble. Secondly it was apparent that the police on hand were prepared to dispose of any trouble that might start — and dispose of it swiftly, before it got out of control.

* * *

WHAT OCCURRED took place quietly, including the expressions of opinions of those on hand. Some of these opinions were that the barber shop in question was wrong in turning away a Negro customer. Others felt a small businessman should be free to conduct his business as he sees fit.

Some expressed the opinion that if Tom didn't want the Negro customer's business, he should simply have given him a poor haircut instead of taking a definite, and one must admit, more courageous stand by refusing.

This last suggestion, that the issue be dodged but still subscribed to, seems more in line with the quiet, unwritten policies of "social apartheid" The Eagle's editorial writers have been referring to. Unfortunately, these policies are not uncommon in South Berkshire.

* * *

IT IS NOW AGAINST the law to show racial discrimination in business in this state. The reason this is against the law is perhaps that most people in this state recognize that it is evil to hurt a man simply because he is what he was born.

To discriminate against a whole race usually leads somewhere along the line to hurting, or trying not to hurt, but doing it anyway, one individual man. Then the evil becomes more apparent.

If anyone thinks it doesn't hurt to be discriminated against, he is lucky he has never had the experience. The chances are that somewhere along the line, his grandparents did.

Let him think what it must be like to wonder every time he walks into a restaurant, hotel or barbershop — to wonder whether someone is going to come over to him, or call from across the room, telling him he's not wanted in this public place simply because he is what he is.

You might say that if this sort of thing hurts him, he should stay in his "place." But where would all the rest of us be if we or our antecedents stayed where others thought was our "place"?

Be that as it may, many people are unsure who among their friends, neighbors or customers agrees that discrimination is evil and therefore there is a tendency to avoid giving public evidence that one is for or against it. That's safer and, heaven knows, everyone is playing it safe these days.

* * *

THERE WAS AN Associated Press story published in The Eagle Monday which quoted a psychologist from the University of Virginia to the effect that racial differences in mental ability are innate and genetic and not the results of different environments. The story indicated he would like the opportunity to prove, or perhaps disprove, that Negroes are inferior to whites.

The psychologist should certainly be given the opportunity to try to prove the point if he wishes to without the danger of being called a racist, which he claimed the social scientists were doing. After all, no one will ever be able to say for sure that the moon isn't made of green cheese until someone gets there and bites it.

The point is that if this psychologist at the University of Virginia is trying to prove scientifically that Negroes are inferior to whites, or vice versa, it must be that no one else has ever succeeded in doing so, the beliefs of segregationists to the contrary.

* * *

IN THIS COUNTRY, just about every race, creed and color has been considered inferior at one time or another as various nationalities poured in from Europe and elsewhere with nothing but the baggage they carried on their backs or in their hands.

Perhaps the only immigrants who weren't considered inferior when they landed were those who got here first. And even among the earliest were a few jailbirds released from European prisons to populate the New World and, no doubt, be discriminated against.

With this discrimination against these various peoples has gone the feeling that they must have been somehow inferior. The discrimination was not based on any fact that they actually were inferior, because obviously they weren't. Among their descendants are many of the top people in the nation today.

So the reason that those who are discriminated against are considered inferior must be that this makes it easier to justify the discrimination.

The only difference between the Negro and these other peoples who used to be considered inferior but aren't anymore is that the Negro is a different color. Certainly, the Negro's color alone doesn't make him inferior.

* * *

PEOPLE IN GENERAL, no matter what color they are, seem to come in all shapes and sizes, friendly and unfriendly, trustworthy and untrustworthy, smart and stupid, couth and uncouth.

It is hard to tell which of these characteristics, and the many others, make up the man until you've known him a while. A man who attempts to judge another on the basis of the color of his skin is not judging him but simply comparing the shade of the other man's skin with his own. The chances are that his conclusions, favorable or unfavorable, are equally as shallow.

There are some who claim they can size a man up quickly by how he looks and what he says. Their criteria are a good deal more complicated than simply the shade of the man's skin, but even people who can make these quick judgments with success admit they are sometimes fooled.

* * *

EVERYBODY discriminates between individuals. They discriminate between those they like and those they're indifferent to, those they respect and those they don't, those they would trust and those they would fear. To discriminate between individuals is not only right but frequently necessary, assuming it doesn't reach the point of snobbishness.

But to discriminate against a man because of his race is simple foolishness. A man is too much more complicated than the color of his skin.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263

AUG 2 1961

...S., WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 2, 1961

Students Picket Lenox Shop in Reported Bias

LENOX (AP) — More than 20 students from the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood Tuesday picketed a barbershop in protest against alleged refusal of the proprietor to cut the hair of Negro students.

The shop was closed during the picketing. Police stood by in case of trouble.

Some demonstrators carried placards referring to the Little Rock school outbreaks, "The spirit of 1776" and identifying the group as Tanglewood students.

The Lenox shop was one of two accused of refusing to give haircuts to Negro students. The other is in Great Barrington.

James Tranks, 25, of Philadelphia filed a complaint against both shops accusing proprietors of refusing to cut his hair.

Neither barber could be reached for comment.

The Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination is investigating the accusations.

Tranks said the Great Barrington barber finally agreed to cut his hair but when he entered the shop there was a sign saying: "Difficult haircuts, $3."

Tranks said the barber told him he would have to pay the $3. He walked out and sought a policeman. He said the policeman said he couldn't do anything about it.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Courier
GT. BARRINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,564

AUG 10 1961

THREE CHARGED WITH DISCRIMINATION

Two Lenox and One Local Shop Are Listed

A local barber shop, one of three in the county, has been charged with alleged discrimination against Negroes, according to the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination.

The local shop is operated by Kenneth TenBroeck and is located on Railroad Street. Mr. TenBroeck said yesterday that he understood he is to be called to Boston Monday to discuss the complaints with the CAD.

Along with the local barber the others involved are Thomas J. Mullen of Tom's Barber Shop in Lenox, and Anthony Bartini, proprietor of Tony's Barber Shop, also in Lenox.

The action stems from charges of discrimination brought against the three shops by James Tranks, 25, a student at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox. He alleges that the three shops refused to give him a haircut at standard prices.

Upon investigation yesterday among local barbers it was found that Tranks had visited other shops in town, and he reported no discrimination, although he did not stop to get a haircut.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955

AUG 2 1961

...Holyoke (Mass.) Transcript-Telegram, Wednesday, Aug. 2, 1961

State Anti-Bias Group Probes Berkshire Barbershop Incident

LENOX, Mass. (UPI) — The Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination today investigated complaints that barber shops in Lenox and Great Barrington had refused to cut the hair of Negro students.

A commission spokesman expressed hope that the case could be settled without a formal hearing. He said only about 1 per cent of complaints handled by the commission required such a hearing.

More than 20 students from the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, some of them Negroes, picketed the Lenox barbershop involved in the case Tuesday.

The complainant, James Tranks, 25, of Philadelphia, charged that he was refused a haircut at Tom' Barber Shop here and at Ken's Barber Shop in Great Barrington. Tranks said he finally was given an appointment for a haircut at Tom's Barber Shop but that when he arrived he was told he would have to pay $3 instead of $1.50 because his hair was "different."

Neither barber would comment.

225

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

AUG 5 1961

move along faster than the average Joe?"

Berkshire Week in Review

Bigotry in B Minor

THE HALF-HIDDEN racial discrimination practiced in the Berkshires was dragged out into full view this week when two young students at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood made a public issue of the difficulties experienced by a Negro in trying to get his hair cut at a local barbershop.

The gentlemen's disagreement was started by James Tranks, 25, of Philadelphia, a Negro, and F. James Levinson, 19, of Pittsburgh. They claim that Tom's Barber Shop in Lenox and Ken's Barber Shop in Great Barrington refused to cut Mr. Tranks' hair.

Mr. Tranks thereupon filed complaints with the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination (CAD) against Thomas Mullen, operator of the Lenox shop, and Kenneth TenBroeck, operator of the Great Barrington shop. Mr. Levinson is witness to both charges.

After the CAD sent an investigator to speak to Mr. Mullen, Mr. Tranks returned to the Lenox barbershop, only to find that he would be charged $3 for a so-called "difficult" haircut. He left the shop in protest.

With the situation temporarily at a standstill, 21 students at Tanglewood threw up a picket line in front of Tom's Barber Shop. After 19 minutes of peaceful picketing with signboards, the students marched off and disbanded. The services of 11 state and local police posted at the scene were not needed to maintain order.

It is expected that the CAD will make a decision on the two cases within the next week. The organization usually tries to settle disputes by persuasion but may go to court to seek legal enforcement of its rulings.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 4,856

AUG 1 1961

Negro Charges Lenox Barbers Refused Service

LENOX, Mass. (AP)—A Philadelphia Negro studying at the Tanglewood Music Center says barbers in Lenox and Great Barrington refused to cut his hair.

He has filed complaints against two barbers with the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination.

Oswald Jordan, acting executive secretary of the commission, disclosed the compaints yesterday. He identified the complainant as James Tranks, 25, but did not name the barbers. Jordan said F. James Levinson, 19, of Pittsburgh, a Harvard sophomore taking courses at Tanglewood, is a witness to both charges.

Levinson said one of the barbers finally agreed to cut Tranks' hair but when he went back to the shop there was a sign "Difficult haircuts, $3." Tranks walked out and sought a policeman, Levinson said, but quoted the policeman as saying he couldn't do anything about it.

The commission assigned an aide to investigate the complaint.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

AUG 10 1961

Lenox Kiwanis Bars Bias in Listed Rooms

LENOX—The board of directors of the Lenox Kiwanis Club has issued a policy statement on discrimination for the Tourist Information Center that the club operates at the Community Center.

"The Kiwanis Club," the statement reads, "shall go on record that knowingly, through out information center, no persons shall be discriminated against according to race, color or creed in placing them in rooms for overnight accommodations."

Action Last Night

A second motion made and passed at last night's meeting of the directors reads as follows: "People listing rooms shall be contacted to be sure they are in agreement with our policy of no discrimination for renting rooms, and if they are not in agreement we will refund upon request the registration fee at the rate of 50 cents per room per weekend by check for the remainder of the Tanglewood season."

The action by the Kiwanis board of directors follows reports that in isolated cases guest houses had been rejecting Negro transients referred to the guest houses by the information center.

After Barbershop Case

It comes on the heels also of complaints by a Berkshire Music Center student, a Negro, that he had been discriminated against in seeking a haircut in two Lenox barbershops and one Great Barrington barbershop. The complaints are scheduled for a Boston hearing Monday before the state Commission Against Discrimination.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 61,175

AUG 2 1961

Tanglewood Students Picket Barbers Over Color Bar

Lenox, Mass. — (AP) — More than 20 students from the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood yesterday picketed a barber shop in protest against alleged refusal of the proprietor to cut the hair of Negro students.

The shop was closed during the picketing. Police stood by in case of trouble.

Some demonstrators carried placards referring to the Little Rock school outbreaks, "The Spirit of 1776" and identifying the group as Tanglewood students.

The Lenox shop was one of two accused of refusing to give haircuts to Negro students. The other is in Great Barrington.

James Tranks, 25, of Philadelphia filed a complaint against both shops accusing proprietors of refusing to cut his hair.

Neither barber could be reached for comment.

The Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination is investigating the accusations.

Mr. Tranks said the Great Barrington barber finally agreed to cut his hair but when he entered the shop there was a sign saying: "Difficult Haircuts, $3."

Mr. Tranks said the barber told him he would have to pay the $3. He walked out and sought a policeman. He said the policeman said he couldn't do anything about it.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sentinel (e)
KEENE, N. H.
Circ. 7,168

AUG 2 1961

Negro Claims Mass. Barbers Discriminate

LENOX, Mass. (AP)—A Philadelphia Negro studying at the Tanglewood Music Center says barbers in Lenox and Great Barrington refused to cut his hair.

He has filed complaints against two barbers with the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination.

Oswald Jordan, acting executive secretary of the commission, disclosed the complaints this week. He identified the complainant as James Tranks, 25, but did not name the barbers. Jordan said F. James Levinson, 19, of Pittsburgh, a Harvard sophomore taking courses at Tanglewood, is a witness to both charges.

Levinson said one of the barbers finally agreed to cut Tranks' hair but when he went back to the shop there was a sign "Difficult haircuts, $3." Tranks walked out and sought a policeman, Levinson said, but quoted the policeman as saying he couldn't do anything about it.

The commission assigned an aide to investigate the complaint.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY UNION STAR
Thursday, August 3, 1961

TWO NEGRO STUDENTS AT THE Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood have complained to Massachusetts discrimination authorities that they were first refused haircuts in a Lenox barbershop, and later when one was told he would be given service, he faced a sign reading "Difficult Haircuts $3." One is a regular term student at Juilliard and the other at Harvard.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955

AUG 1 1961

Race Bias Charged To Lenox, Great Barrington Barbers

LENOX, Mass. (AP)—A Philadelphia Negro studying at the Tanglewood Music Center says barbers in Lenox and Great Barrington refused to cut his hair.

He has filed complaints against two barbers with the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination.

Oswald Jordan, acting executive secretary of the commission, disclosed the compaints yesterday. He identified the complainant as James Tranks, 25, but did not name the barbers. Jordan said F. James Levinson, 19, of Pittsburgh, a Harvard sophomore taking courses at Tanglewood, is a witness to both charges.

Levinson said one of the barbers finally agreed to cut Tranks' hair but when he went back to the shop there was a sign "Difficult haircuts, $3." Tranks walked out and sought a policeman, Levinson said, but quoted the policeman as saying he couldn't do anything about it.

The commission assigned an aide to investigate the complaint.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879

AUG 1 1961

Haircut Trouble At Tanglewood?

LENOX, Mass. (AP)—A Philadelphia Negro studying at the Tanglewood Music Center says barbers in Lenox and Great Barrington refused to cut his hair.

He has filed complaints against two barbers with the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination.

Oswald Jordan, acting executive secretary of the commission, disclosed the complaints yesterday.

He identified the complaiant as James Tranks, 25, but did not name the barbers. Jordan said F. James Levinson, 19, of Pittsburgh, a Harvard sophomore taking courses at Tanglewood, is a witness to both charges.

Levinson said one of the barbers finally agreed to cut Tranks' hair but when he went back to the shop there was a sign "Difficult haircuts, $3." Tranks walked out and sought a policeman, Levinson said, but quoted the policeman as saying he couldn't do anything about it.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

AUG 12 1961

Other Headlines

THE CULTURAL ASSETS of Berkshire County were placed on display for some six million TV viewers this week when the popular "Today" program paid a two-day visit to Lenox, broadcasting from Tanglewood Thursday morning and the Music Inn yesterday. In terms of the size of the audience, it was probably the biggest publicity boost the area has ever received.

* * *

The three Berkshire barbers (two in Lenox and one in Great Barrington) who have been charged with discriminating against Negroes are scheduled to meet in Boston Monday with the state Commission Against Discrimination, which has a policy of trying to settle such cases by persuasion rather than resorting directly to court action. Meanwhile an ex-president of the Pittsfield area local of the Barbers' Union, Otto P. Face, took public issue with Charles R. Mole, the local's incumbent business agent, who recently defended higher prices for Negro customers on the grounds that their hair is harder to cut. Mr. Face disputed this claim and added that "if I have to lose some of my trade because I serve colored people, then that's too bad."

* * *

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
WESTERLY, R. I.
Circ. 8,236

AUG 1 1961

Negro Student Says He Was Refused Service

LENOX, Mass. (AP)—A Philadelphia Negro studying at the Tanglewood Music Center says barbers in Lenox and Great Barrington refused to cut his hair.

He has filed complaints against two barbers with the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination.

Oswald Jordan, acting executive secretary of the commission, disclosed the compaints yesterday. He identified the complainant as James Tranks, 25, but did not name the barbers. Jordan said F. James Levinson, 19, of Pittsburgh, a Harvard sophomore taking courses at Tanglewood, is a witness to both charges.

Levinson said one of the barbers finally agreed to cut Tranks' hair but when he went back to the shop there was a sign "Difficult haircuts, $3." Tranks walked out and sought a policeman, Levinson said, but quoted the policeman as saying he couldn't do anything about it.

The commission assigned an aid to investigate the complaint.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783

AUG 15 1961

State Raps $10 Haircuts For Negroes

The State Commission against Discrimination accused three Berkshire County barbershops today of charging Negroes up to $10 for haircuts.

The commission ordered the barbers "to cease and desist from further violating the Commonwealth's public accommodation law."

PATRONAGE DISCOURAGED

The commission found that the barbershops tried to discourage Negro patronage by charging anywhere from $3 to $10 for a haircut that costs whites only $1.75.

The case was brought to the Commission's attention by students at the Berkshire Music Center.

The barbershops were ordered to remove signs reading "Difficult Hair—$3," and to put up Commission signs advising customers that service is available to all without discrimination.

Commr. Walter C. Carrington warned the shops that further violations would result in a request to the board of registration of barbers for a review of their fitness to hold a license.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Circ. 25,742

AUG 1 1961

Negro Accuses 2 Mass. Barbers Of Discrimination

LENOX, Mass. (AP)—A Philadelphia Negro studying at the Tanglewood Music Center says barbers in Lenox and Great Barrington refused to cut his hair.

He has filed complaints against two barbers with the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination.

Oswald Jordan, acting executive secretary of the commission, disclosed the compaints yesterday. He identified the complainant as James Tranks, 25, but did not name the barbers. Jordan said F. James Levinson, 19, of Pittsburgh, a Harvard sophomore taking courses at Tanglewood, is a witness to both charges.

Levinson said one of the barbers finally agreed to cut Tranks' hair but when he went back to the shop there was a sign "Difficult haircuts, $3." Tranks walked out and sought a policeman, Levinson said, but quoted the policeman as saying he couldn't do anything about it.

The commission assigned an aide to investigate the complaint.

BLANK PAGE

Miscellaneous

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,456
AUG 13 1961

MUSIC

Munch Will Leave Rich Legacy

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

When Charles Munch retires as conductor of the Boston Symphony, after the 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, he will have conducted the orchestra for 13 seasons.

It will be the longest tenure of any conductor in the orchestra's 80-year-old history except for Serge Koussevitzky who retired in 1949 at the end of his 25th season.

There is already much discussion about the many honors Munch has brought to the Boston Symphony. Five New York Music Critics Circle Awards have been given to compositions which were introduced by him to New York: Martinu's Symphony No. 6; Piston's Viola Concerto; Leo Smit's Symphony No. 1; Poulenc's Gloria and the Haieff Piano Concerto.

Munch received the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences Award for his recording with the Boston Symphony of Debussy's "Images." During his tenure the orchestra has received nine Grand Prix du Disques and the medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde.

3 Foreign Tours

During his first ten years, Munch presented works by 31 American composers, 77 first Boston performances, 48 U.S. premieres and 32 world premieres.

In addition to extensive concert series in this country, Munch has taken the orchestra on three foreign tours: to Europe in 1952 and 1956 (on the second tour, the Boston Symphony was the first Western orchestra to be heard in the Soviet Union); and an eight-week tour of the Far East, Australia and New Zealand in 1960.

Munch will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf who conducted the Cleveland Orchestra on Worcester Civic Music in 1946, and the Rochester Philharmonic on the same series in 1950. He also conducted the Rochester Orchestra in a Southbridge concert in 1948.

In September 1962, Munch will be 71-years-old; Leinsdorf will be 50 when he joins the Boston Symphony.

More About Conductors

Josef Krips apparently had spectacular successes with the Beethoven and Brahms Festivals which he recently conducted at New York's Lewisohn Stadium.

He appeared here most recently in January of this year, conducting the Buffalo Philharmonic on Civic Music at the Auditorium. Krips received high praise at Tanglewood the other night from a leading New York critic following Eugene Ormandy's performance of Brahms' Second Symphony.

Said he: "If I hadn't heard Krips so recently, I'd have so many more good things to say about Ormandy."

Who said, "comparisons are odious?"

Pierre Monteux, at 86, says nothing about retiring. He's scheduled to guest-conduct the National Symphony, Jan. 9-10, and it's extremely likely that he will assist Munch at Tanglewood next summer. Also appearing with the National Symphony next season will be Aram Khachaturian, famed Armenian composer, and Russian pianist Emil Gilels.

We overhead the other night from a reliable New York critic that the New York Philharmonic is "getting fed up" with Leonard Bernstein over his absences from the orchestra. It appears that he was away from the New York Philharmonic for eight weeks, on "other assignments."

From Here and There

Ted Shawn, boss at Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival (at Lee) is going into the travel guide business. He announces a special tour of Europe, featuring 24 days in Spain, Greece, Turkey and Egypt. It will begin Oct. 15 in New York. You don't have to be a dancer to go, but you do need $1,375.

Best wishes go to Danny Kaye who is being considered to receive a rare Gold Medal, the highest civilian award offered by the government. It would be the fourth to go to a member of show business. Two were awarded to George M. Cohan and Irving Berlin. Bob Hope is awaiting Senate approval of a bill to award him the Congressional Medal (for Merit).

Some of the big musical news of next season will be made by "Rumanian Rhapsody" on its first North American tour. It's a 50-member group featuring the Bucharest Dance Ensemble and Barbu Lautaru Folk Orchestra. The 20 musicians appear as soloists and in concert, playing Romanian folk instruments such as the cymbalum, peasant pipe and pipes of Pan, in additional to traditional Western instruments.

CUE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 173,090
JUL 22 1961

the enterprising new haven railroad, its current fiscal troubles notwithstanding, goes ahead with its schedule of summer package tours—and more power to it! Music lovers wanting to go up to the Berkshires' Tanglewood concerts, for instance, may take advantage of the New Haven's "Music Sunday" excursions every Sunday through August 20. $8.75 buys a round trip ticket to Lenox, Massachusetts, and a general admission ticket to the outdoor concert at Tanglewood, plus bus transportation from the station to the park. Excursionists leave Grand Central in the morning and return shortly after 10 p.m. The total tab for youngsters between 5 and 12 is $6.45. Pierre Monteux is guest conductor of the Boston Symphony this Sunday, the 23rd, with Charles Munch returning for the next four Sundays. Tickets go on sale each Monday for the next weekend—at Grand Central, 125th Street and Stamford, Connecticut ticket offices, and passengers must buy them before getting on the train. Saturday and Sunday excursion tours to Mystic Seaport and the Shakespeare Festival at Stratford in Connecticut, Old Sturbridge Village in Massachusetts, and Block Island, Rhode Island can also be arranged. For details on all, call the railroad's Travel Bureau, MU 6-0773.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783
AUG 18 1961

Monteuk To Be London Conductor

PIERRE MONTEUX

Pierre Monteux, who has been conducting the Boston Symphony off and on for more than 40 years, will become the principal conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra. He is 86. Monteux conducted the Boston Symphony from 1919 to 1924 and is one of the world's leading conductors. He is a voting citizen of Hancock, Me.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 27 1961

Leaves Next Yea

Munch's Retirement Is Noted In Congress by U.S. Rep. Conte

Congressman Silvio O. Conte of the 1st District has had entered in the Congressional Record his remarks in the House of Representatives noting the retirement in another year of Dr. Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Dr. Munch will retire as musical director of the BSO at the conclusion of the 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

Conte's Remarks

The congressman's remarks in the House, as entered in the Congressional Record, follow:

Mr. Speaker, it is with true sorrow and wonderful memories that I bring to the attention of the House the coming retirement of one of the greatest artists of the musical world. Dr. Charles Munch has been the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—one of the finest orchestras in existence—for 12 years. With the end of the 1962 season, at the age of 70, he will leave Boston. It will be the end of an era, for conductors of the quality of Dr. Munch are individuals who bring their interpretations to music, just as literature produces genius of approach to a theme. The Boston Symphony is known for conductors of this quality; they are essential to its greatness.

To rehearse the history of his career at this point would be total understatement, but it is appropriate to mention the honors he has received in Boston. Since he joined the Boston Symphony in 1950, it has won five New York Critics Circle Awards for new music introduced, nine Grand Prix du Disques, and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde. He instituted the orchestra's open rehearsals and took it twice to Europe and once to Russia. It has toured in the Far East and Australia as well

Miscellaneous

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 104,456
AUG 13 1961

MUSIC

Munch Will Leave Rich Legacy

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

When Charles Munch retires as conductor of the Boston Symphony after the 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, he will have conducted the orchestra for 13 seasons.

It will be the longest tenure of any conductor in the orchestra's 80-year-old history, except for Serge Koussevitzky who retired in 1949 at the end of his 25th season.

There is already much discussion about the many honors Munch has brought to the Boston Symphony. Five New York Music Critics Circle Awards have been given to compositions which were introduced by him to New York: Martinu's Symphony No. 6; Piston's Viola Concerto; Leo Smit's Symphony No. 1; Poulenc's Gloria and the Haieff Piano Concerto.

Munch received the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences Award for his recording with the Boston Symphony of Debussy's "Images." During his tenure the orchestra has received nine Grand Prix du Disques and the medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde.

3 Foreign Tours

During his first ten years, Munch presented works by 31 American composers, 77 first Boston performances, 48 U.S. premieres and 32 world premieres.

In addition to extensive concert series in this country, Munch has taken the orchestra on three foreign tours: to Europe in 1952 and 1956 (on the second tour, the Boston Symphony was the first Western orchestra to be heard in the Soviet Union), and an eight-week tour of the Far East, Australia and New Zealand in 1960.

Munch will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf who conducted the Cleveland Orchestra on Worcester Civic Music in 1946, and the Rochester Philharmonic on the same series in 1950. He also conducted the Rochester Orchestra in a Southbridge concert in 1948.

In September 1962, Munch will be 71-years-old; Leinsdorf will be 50 when he joins the Boston Symphony.

More About Conductors

Josef Krips apparently had spectacular successes with the Beethoven and Brahms Festivals which he recently conducted at New York's Lewisohn Stadium.

He appeared here most recently in January of this year, conducting the Buffalo Philharmonic on Civic Music at the Auditorium. Krips received high praise at Tanglewood the other night from a leading New York critic following Eugene Ormandy's performance of Brahms' Second Symphony.

Said he: "If I hadn't heard Krips so recently, I'd have so many more good things to say about Ormandy."

Who said, "comparisons are odious?"

Pierre Monteux, at 86, says nothing about retiring. He's scheduled to guest-conduct the National Symphony, Jan. 9-10, and it's extremely likely that he will assist Munch at Tanglewood next summer. Also appearing with the National Symphony next season will be Aram Khachaturian, famed Armenian composer, and Russian pianist Emil Gilels.

We overhead the other night from a reliable New York critic that the New York Philharmonic is "getting fed up" with Leonard Bernstein over his absences from the orchestra. It appears that he was away from the New York Philharmonic for eight weeks, on "other assignments."

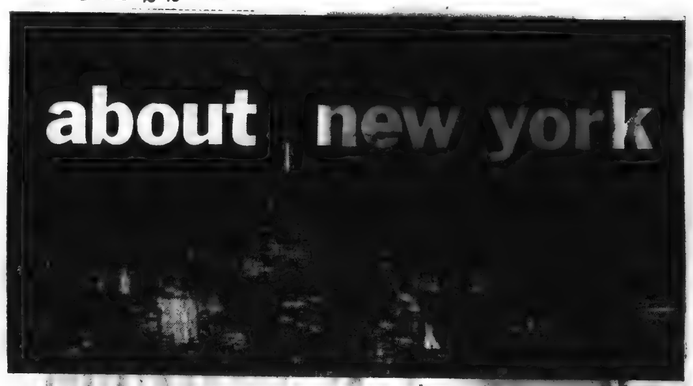
From Here and There

Ted Shawn, boss at Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival (at Lee) is going into the travel guide business. He announces a special tour of Europe, featuring 24 days in Spain, Greece, Turkey and Egypt. It will begin Oct. 15 in New York. You don't have to be a dancer to go, but you do need $1,375.

Best wishes go to Danny Kaye who is being considered to receive a rare Gold Medal, the highest civilian award offered by the government. It would be the fourth to go to a member of show business. Two were awarded to George M. Cohan and Irving Berlin. Bob Hope is awaiting Senate approval of a bill to award him the Congressional Medal (for Merit).

Some of the big musical news of next season will be made by "Rumanian" Rhapsody" on its first North American tour. It's a 50-member group featuring the Bucharest Dance Ensemble and Barbu Lautaru Folk Orchestra. The 20 musicians appear as soloists and in concert, playing Romanian folk instruments such as the cymbalum, peasant pipe and pipes of Pan, in additional to traditional Western instruments.

CUE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 173,090
JUL 22 1961



the enterprising new haven railroad, its current fiscal troubles notwithstanding, goes ahead with its schedule of summer package tours—and more power to it! Music lovers wanting to go up to the Berkshires' Tanglewood concerts, for instance, may take advantage of the New Haven's "Music Sunday" excursions every Sunday through August 20. $8.75 buys a round trip ticket to Lenox, Massachusetts, and a general admission ticket to the Sunday concert at Tanglewood, plus bus transportation from the station to the park. Excursionists leave Grand Central in the morning and return shortly after 10 p.m. The total tab for youngsters between 5 and 12 is $6.45. Pierre Monteux is guest conductor of the Boston Symphony this Sunday, the 23rd, with Charles Munch returning for the next four Sundays. Tickets go on sale each Monday for the next weekend—at Grand Central, 125th Street and Stamford, Connecticut ticket offices, and passengers must buy them before getting on the train. Saturday and Sunday excursion tours to Mystic Seaport and the Shakespeare Festival at Stratford in Connecticut, Old Sturbridge Village in Massachusetts, and Block Island, Rhode Island can also be arranged. For details on all, call the railroad's Travel Bureau, MU 6-0773.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783
AUG 16 1961

Monteuk To Be London Conductor

PIERRE MONTEUX

Pierre Monteux, who has been conducting the Boston Symphony off and on for more than 40 years, will become the principal conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra. He is 86. Monteux conducted the Boston Symphony from 1919 to 1924 and is one of the world's leading conductors. He is a voting citizen of Hancock, Me.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 27 1961

Leaves Next Yea

Munch's Retirement Is Noted In Congress by U.S. Rep. Conte

Congressman Silvio O. Conte of the 1st District has had entered in the Congressional Record his remarks in the House of Representatives noting the retirement in another year of Dr. Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Dr. Munch will retire as musical director of the BSO at the conclusion of the 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

Conte's Remarks

The congressman's remarks in the House, as entered in the Congressional Record, follow:

Mr. Speaker, it is with true sorrow and wonderful memories that I bring to the attention of the House the coming retirement of one of the greatest artists of the musical world. Dr. Charles Munch has been the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—one of the finest orchestras in existence—for 12 years. With the end of the 1962 season, at the age of 70, he will leave Boston. It will be the end of an era, for conductors of the quality of Dr. Munch are individuals who bring their interpretations to music, just as literature produces genius of approach to a theme. The Boston Symphony is known for conductors of this quality; they are essential to its greatness.

To rehearse the history of his career at this point would be total understatement, but it is appropriate to mention the honors he has received in Boston. Since he joined the Boston Symphony in 1950, it has won five New York Critics Circle Awards for new music introduced, nine Grand Prix du Disques, and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde. He instituted the orchestra's open rehearsals and took it twice to Europe and once to Russia. It has toured in the Far East and Australia as well

229

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,456
SEP 3 1961

Mrs. Koussevitzky Asks for $200,000

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — A nation -wide campaign is being considered to raise some $200,000 for a special project of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

The campaign, as yet unannounced, will be proposed at a meeting of the Foundation's directors — Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, president; Aaron Copland, vice presiednt; Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Howard Hanson, Gregor Piatigorsky, and William Schuman.

Details were disclosed by Mrs. Koussevitzky at Seranak, the estate at Lenox named after Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky.

To date, 118 works have been commissioned by the Serge Koussevitzky Music Foundation in the Library of Congress, founde in 1950, and the Koussevitzky in 1942.

The two foundations perpetuate the efforts of the late conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to encourage contemporary composers and to provide them with opportunities to create new works.

Mrs. Olga Koussevitzky, the conductor's second wife and niece of Natalie, is seeking funds to guarantee her late husband's wish that students at the Berkshire Music Center always will have the instruction, inspiration and influnce of world famed composers during their summer study at Tanglewood.

Dr. Koussevitzky founded the Berkshire Music Center. During his regime the compsition department had such names as Darius Milhaud, Olivier Messiaen, Jacques Ibert and Luigi Dallapiccola.

"Dr. Koussevitzky used to insist that the Boston Symphony pay the transportation cost of these composers," says Mrs. Koussevitzky, "when they said he couldn't afford it."

For the past two summers, this expense has been absorbed by the Ford Foundation, but the total summer cost for a foreign, visiting composer is about $3,-00; Mrs. Koussevitzky hopes permanent financing of this project will be guaranteed by the special fund of the Foundation.

MRS. OLGA KOUSSEVITZKY
Opens Campaign

She also wishes money to erect "one or two studios" on the 182 acre grounds at Seranak and a fireproof building to house Dr. Koussevitzky's valuable memen toes gathered during his career including 25 years as conductor of the Boston Symphony.

The urgency of this fund is emphasized by a recent report from the MacDowell Colony in Peterboro, N.H.

"Aaron Copland tells me," says Mrs. Koussevitzky, "that they need $350,000 to keep going." Copland is a director of the MacDowell Colony.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,783
AUG 7 1961

MUSIC CRITIC INTERVIEWS CONDUCTOR'S WIDOW
Raymond Morin and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky in front of painting of her husband

Mecca for all the Arts

Koussevitzky Dream Still Sought

By Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — If Mr. Serge Koussevitzky had her way, her late husband's dream would be fulfilled and Tanglewood would become an internationally famous mecca for all the arts.

In an exclusive interview shortly before his death, Dr. Koussevitzky told us of his hopes and plans to greatly expand Tanglewood, even to the construction of a huge amphitheater where Greek drama could be presented in its original form.

The interview caused a lot of discussion among interested individuals and in the press. The big question was, Where was the money coming from to do all this?

Perhaps some of Dr. Koussevitzky's hopes will be recalled next weekend when the three Berkshire Festiva lconcerts are dedicated to his memory.

Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony will be conducted by three of his closest associates: Friday night, Richard Burgin, Koussevitzky's concertmaster and associate conductor for 25 years. Saturday night, Leonard Bernstein, his protege. Sunday afternoon, Charles Munch, his successor, who will retire after the 1962 Berkshire Festival.

Olga Naoumoff Koussevitzky was his secretary for many years and a niece of his first wife, Natalie, who died in 1942. Mrs. Koussevitzky spends her summers at Seranak in Lenox. The magnificent estate of 180 acres and large, stately house were named after Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky—Seranak.

Her consuming interest is the Serge Koussevitzky Music Foundation, established in 1942, 10 years before the conductor's death. To date it has commissioned 118 works.

Mrs. Koussevitzky speaks calmly and eloquently of her late husband's career — his abandoning a future as bass viol virtuoso to establish his own orchestra and publishing house in Russia — the early days when he followed the Boston Symphony's regular season with festivals "of one composer's music, then American composers."

As Mrs. Koussevitzky expresses it, all of this "flowered at Tanglewood."

The generating force was Koussevitzky's tremendous interest in the young musician, particularly the composer. It is this same incentive that impels Mrs. Koussevitzky to leave Seranak frequently and attend programs at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's summer music school.

She feels that one of the most important advantages the Center offers its students is the opportunity to participate in new works, choral or orchestral.

Her interest in all contemporary music is based on sound judgement:

"Unless you are really interested in contemporary music and keep your ear attuned to it, you cannot keep abreast of musical life," she says.

She includes the "serialists" and experimenters in "electronic sound." She became interested in Edgar Varese because of his personality.

"He believes in his idiom," she explains, "and the core of truth is faith."

Departments

The Berkshire Music Center of Mrs. Koussevitzky's creation would have departments of drama and dance — "not to compete with anything that already exists in the Berkshires, but to coordinate all of the arts in one locale."

She has already begun to transform Seranak into a haven for composers. This summer her guest is Roberto Gerhard, composer from Cambridge, England. He and his wife have their own quarters with a private porch.

The Gerhards go for long walks. "I believe he is creating music," says Mrs. Koussevitzky, "but I wouldn't presume to ask."

As we walked along the terrace, she pointed to a spot below.

To Build A Studio

"There is where I hope to build a studio," she stated. "And there will be many more. This will not be a colony but a refuge for composers to work in solitude."

Included will be a fireproofed building in which to house Dr. Koussevitzky's mementoes. At present they are in the large living room. Mrs. Koussevitzky is in constant dread of fire.

Among them, under a glass dome, is a beautiful white sculptured reproduction of Koussevitzky's left hand. It is a conductor's hand in action, and it also embodies the great man's ideals, of which the present Tanglewood is an incomplete symbol.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)

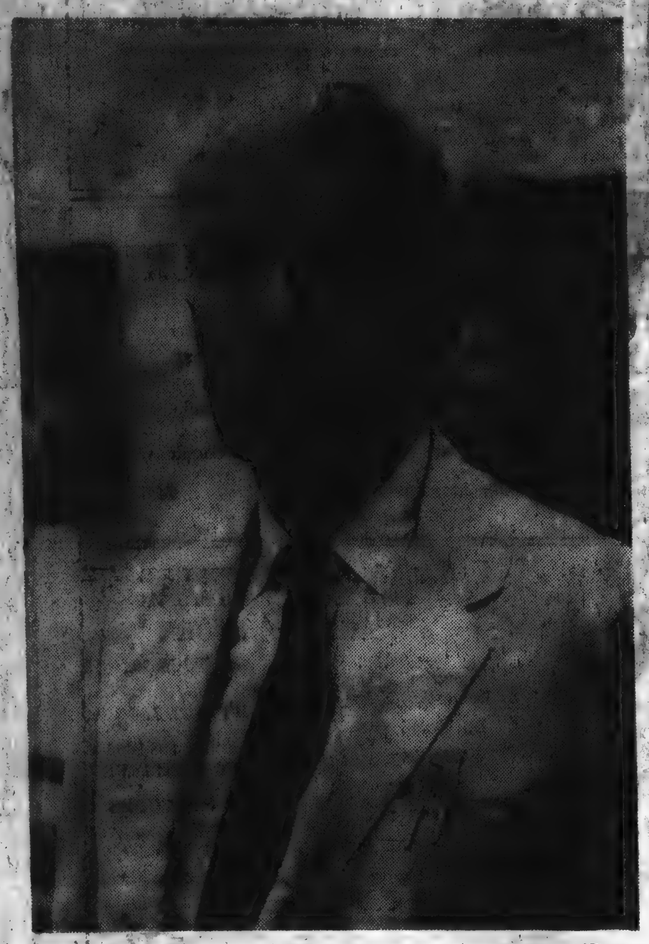
New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 5 1961

The Man Behind the Notes In Tanglewood's Programs

To an average music lover such as ourself, the notes that appear in the programs at Tanglewood describing the selections to be played, and telling about the composer, are taken for granted, like some natural phenomena — perhaps an outgrowth or overtone produced by the music itself.

Of course, they are nothing of the sort. They are, and have been for 37 years, the work of John N. Burk, whose title is program annotator of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He is a quiet, scholarly man whose mood varied during our talk with him, from careful concentration to easy good humor. When we arrived at his office in the Main House at Tanglewood it was late afternoon, and he had just completed a program dummy to be mailed to the Boston printers.



John N. Burk, program annotator of the BSO Tague

He carried it with him as we repaired to the cooler, open refreshment tents, where we sat on benches and talked. Besides writing the notes, he also lays out each program, or "book" as he calls it, much as an editor makes up a page of a magazine or newspaper. So much space for the ads, so much for the listing of the numbers to be played, and so much for his notes on the music and composers.

* * *

"I guess it's a lot like your business," he observed with a slow, knowing smile. "The ads are quite important." We nodded without hesitation.

The program dummy, which he held carefully during the talk, must be in the printer's hands the middle of the week before the program they cover. That means Wednesday for the weekend concerts opening a week from the next day. Nor is it any small printing order. Each book covers three concerts, and 25,000 copies are printed.

Under conductor Charles Munch, meeting the deadline is no great problem. He makes up his program well ahead, and makes no changes at the last minute, barring unavoidable accidents or circumstances. When this happens, a loose sheet is printed covering the change, and inserted in the book.

* * *

"We don't like to do this," said Mr. Burk, reasonably. "The sheets are a nuisance to the customers, fall out of the book, and aren't at all satisfactory. Fortunately, we haven't had to do this in more than two years."

It wasn't always thus. Under the mercurial Serge Koussevitzky, last-minute changes were more frequent. "Quite often he couldn't make up his mind at picking one or another number for his concerts," said Mr. Burk in faint disapproval. "Sometimes we had to put on a little pressure," he added with a trace of a smile.

Mr. Burk has been interested in music as long as he can remember, and studied the subject at Harvard. After graduation, he was second-string music critic for the Boston Transcript, and in 1919 joined the BSO publicity department. In 1934 he succeeded Philip Hale, annotator, who died.

During his regime, Mr. Burk has acquired a large library of books on music and musicians, much of which is brought to Tanglewood in summer for use of the Music Center students. He has had published a number of books on composers, the most recent two years ago on Mozart. For current use, he has a file on composers, to which he adds continuously as new facts come to light.

* * *

He attends all concerts of the BSO, both at Tanglewood and Boston, and his love of music never has flagged. Though not "a performing" musician, he plays the piano, which helps him in writing program notes for new music not previously performed. In this way, he can hear it before writing a descriptive piece about it. For others, he relies on recordings to refresh his memory.

During his long service, he finds that audiences for good music have increased, and so, too, has their intelligent interest in the subject. Nor is it unusual for him to receive fan letters from readers of his notes, which includes pleasant communication from living composers whom he has mentioned. When possible, he solicits direct quotations from these composers for his annotations, feeling, rightly, that their words have both current and historical value.

* * *

Presenting new music, he says, is a serious problem for an orchestra director. "New composers can't write in the manner of those 150 years ago," he pointed out. "But audiences don't like music that isn't what they expected to hear. Some of the greatest works of the past which were new to the listeners were hissed."

Unlike most authors, it pains Mr. Burk to see people reading his pieces under certain circumstances, such as when the piece he describes is being played.

"You must give music your undivided attention," he explained. "It moves much faster than printed words, and while you are reading about it, the music has left you behind."

But aside from this, Mr. Burk is little different from other writers. He loves to have people read his work.

—Richard Happel

Sketch made at Tanglewood by Richard Librizzi of Pittsfield

230

231

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Circ. 71,838

AUG 13 1961

Connecticut 'Tanglewood' Planned; to Cost 8 Million

Connecticut will have its own great big culture festival in the style of Tanglewood, which is the pride of Massachusetts.

It will be built around the Oakdale Theater in Wallingford at an estimated cost of $8,000,000. Improving on the Lenox, Mass. Summer event, this is to be open all year.

Ben Segal, who is father of the project, told The Herald yesterday "the idea has been my compulsive dream for the past four years." It has just begun to roll.

With his partner Robert Hall (former director of athletics at Yale) Segal has just accepted the layout as designed by the architect, John MacL. Johansen of Stamford.

* * *

THIS CALLS for purchase of more land than involved in the original plans. But according to Segal and Hall, Johansen's picture on paper is too attractive to resist by one acre.

So the plan is to acquire more land from the Bradstreets, of Land o' Lakes butter. The original owner was Frank Wallace of Wallace Silver, who imported many of the trees still adorning the spot, from Europe and Asia.

All who have been to Tanglewood will recall that much of its grandeur is the lanes of tall pine trees. The point is mentioned because local plans call for natural beauty to compete with Tanglewood's. The land is sloping and it includes a pond and a waterfall.

* * *

THE PRESENT 2,300-seat theater in the round is to be extended to 3,000. Plans also call for a 2,500 seat proscenium theater and a 750-seat theater for movies and special events, and the climax, a 4,000-seat theater for symphony, opera and ballet by American and European talent.

The Herald's Ethel Beckwith has been invited to help with the new project.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

AUG 7 1961

Weekend Tourist Report

Hotels, Motels Doing Better Than Private Guest Houses

Commercial tourist establishments in Berkshire County did a near-capacity business over the weekend, but the demand for rooms in private guest houses continued below previous years, according to spot checks made today by The Eagle.

Robert Michael, manager of the Hotel Wendell-Sherwood in Pittsfield, said the hotel's 300 rooms were completely sold out Saturday and were almost filled Friday. As usual, the traffic tapered off yesterday and the hotel was only about 50 per cent filled last night.

"We don't have quite the jam on Saturdays this year that we have had in recent years," Mr. Michael said.

Motels Expanded

Several area tourist operators expressed the opinion today that the drop in demand for rooms in private guest houses stems in part from the fact that several motels have expanded their capacity. The demand for rooms in private houses has reached a peak in past years only after the commercial establishments have been filled.

Employes at the Berkshire Hills Conference room placement bureau in Pittsfield said the demand for rooms in private houses over the weekend was considerably less than previous years.

As usual, facilities in the Lenox area near Tanglewood were filled Friday and Saturday. However, a spokesmn at the tourist information booth in Lee said there were many private rooms still available.

One reason for the decrease in demand in Lee may be that the state has erected a sign on Route 20 in East Lee directing Tanglewood traffic down Route 102 to Stockbridge and Interlaken. The sign apparently was put up to reduce traffic congestion in the Lee area. This new route bypasses the Lee information booth.

Motel, inn and resort owners in the Great Barrington area said the weekend business was the best of the season. All motels in this area were displaying "No Vacancy" signs Friday and Saturday.

Box Office Report

The box office business for Berkshire theaters and other summer cultural attractions is generally off slightly from 1960. The major exception is at Jacob's Pillow.

The Pillow drew 4,000 paying customers last week, an increase of 400 over the same week last year. Total attendance during the first five weeks of the nine-week summer dance season has been 17,000, up approximately 3,300 over the 1960 season.

"We should have the best season in our 29-year history. Our two biggest weeks are coming up," a Pillow spokesman said.

At Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra drew 27,339 paying customers over the weekend—7,246 Friday, 3,359 for Saturday morning rehearsal, 8,446 Saturday evening and 8,488 last night.

The Tanglewood weekend attendance was 735 less than the same weekend a year ago. Attendance during the first five weeks of the seven-week Tanglewood season is approximately 1,500 behind last year.

Copland

DALLAS, TEXAS
TIMES-HERALD
D. 185,107 S. 195,963
JUL 2 1961

On Records: Copland And His Compatriots

By EUGENE LEWIS

It is by the sheerest coincidence that we turn our attention this Fourth of July weekend to the American composer.

Aaron Copland, "dean of American composers," was 60 last November, and throughout the land there were observances. Among other things, he conducted the Dallas Symphony Orchestra in a program of his works last year.

The record companies, of course, were quick to seize the promotional opportunities of the anniversary. Besides, Copland also enjoys a popularity that is rare among serious contemporary American composers.

Copland, Brooklyn-born, studied in Paris with Nadia Boulanger. His earliest works to attract attention explored the possibilities of jazz as a serious medium for musical expression.

Though that exploration is still going on, Copland himself soon abandoned this tack and embarked upon a new period of exploration of advanced "modern" harmonies, counterpoint, and rhythm, which appealed largely to modern music coteries but found no large public response.

COPLAND then turned to a musical idiom which was deliberately reduced to "the simplest possible terms," that is, a simplicity of technique and a directness of speech. Some of it was "functional" music, some for the movies, some for the theater. (Among his soundtracks: "Of Mice and Men," "Our Town," "The Heiress," "The Red Pony."

For the ballet, he wrote "Billy the Kid," "Rodeo," and "Appalachian Spring," drawing from American folk music. Though the Third Symphony did not draw consciously or directly from folk material, he had absorbed the flavor of that music into a distinctly direct and personal expression. A real American composer had arrived who could be placed beside his contemporaries anywhere.

AARON COPLAND
... Conducts on New Discs

ON NEW RECORDS, Copland himself conducts his works.

For RCA Victor, he leads the Boston Symphony in a performance of "Appalachian Spring" and "The Tender Land." Copland's only major opera was not a success. The present recording of a suite drawn from it is a disc debut. Though in Copeland's "folksy" idiom, it is not so straightforward, lively, and colorfully textured as the ballet suite on the other side. "Appalachian Spring" is vital and stylish in this performance.

The Third Symphony is regarded by many as the best American essay in the form. We mention, somewhat belatedly, the Everest recording of the work, for which Copland conducts the London Symphony. That the composer is conducting bespeaks the value of the reading, the London Symphony is playing better and better these days, and the Everest stereo leaves nothing to be desired in sound.

Leonard Bernstein, who also composes, has been conducting the music of Copland for a long time and is considered something of an expert himself. "Rodeo" and "Billy the Kid" are performed by Bernstein's New York Philharmonic under his direction for a new Columbia recording. Mr. B's approach is lucid and dynamic, hitting all the excitements but missing somewhat the other qualities.

AARON COPLAND'S efforts on behalf of other American composers, as performer, administrator and propagandist, are numerous. The honors justly accorded him are, in a sense, a tribute to his compatriots.

The American composer who has not fared as well as he should in the concert hall, has at least had a hearing on records.

American composers on recent records:

Howard Hanson, in two Mercury albums called "The Composer and His Music," conducts the Eastman-Rochester Orchestra in his "Merry Mount Suite" (Vol. 1) and his "Mosaics" (Vol. 2). Both discs, brightly recorded, include narration by the composer.

On an earlier Mercury disc, belatedly noted, Hanson conducts the same orchestra and the Eastman School of Music Chorus in his Symphony No. 2, "Romantic."

Also on Mercury, Mr. Hanson conducts the same orchestra in the music of two of his American contemporaries, Walter Piston's "The Incredible Flutist" and Douglas Moore's "The Pageant of P. T. Barnum."

Mr. Hanson and the E-R also perform Samuel Barber's "Medea" and his "Capricorn Concerto" for Flute, Oboe, Trumpet, and Strings, on Mercury. And, on another disc for the same company, they give William Grant Still's "Sahdji," along with Camargo Guarnieri's Three Dances for Orchestra and Ginastera's Overture to the Creole "Faust." Mr. Still is an American Negro, Guarnieri, a descendant of the violin-makers, is Brazilian, and Ginastera is Argentine.

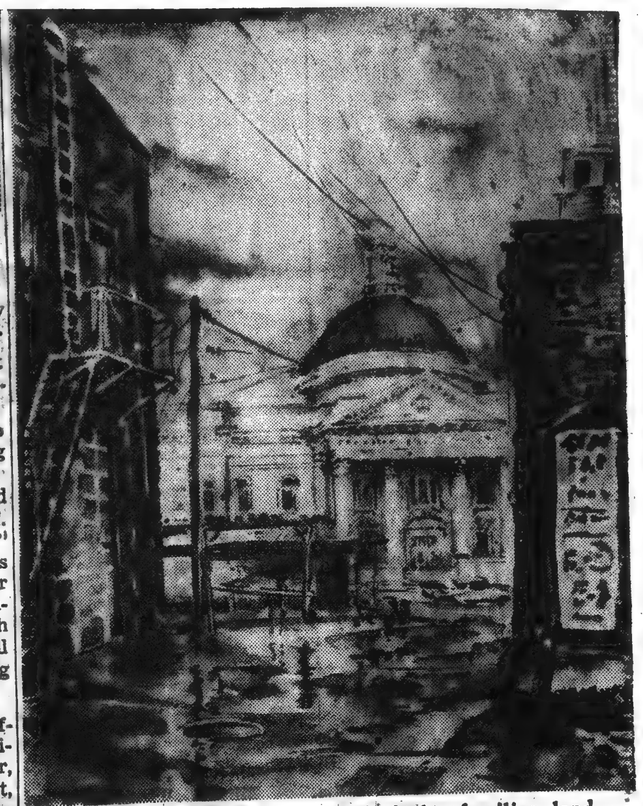
George Antheil, the American who used to be the "Bad Boy" of international music, gets a record debut for his Symphony No. 4 (1942). Sir Eugene Goossens conducts the London Symphony on the Everest disc. Ginastera's "Estancia" Ballet Suite is on the other side.

AMERICAN CHAMBER music, the Second Quartet of Elliott Carter and the Quartet No. 3 of William S. Schuman, is played by the Juilliard String Quartet on a new RCA Victor disc.

Easley Blackwood's Symphony No. 1 and Alexei Haieff's Symphony No. 2 were the first two contemporary compositions recommended by the jury for commercial recording under the Recording Guarantee Project of the American International Music Fund, founded by the late Serge Koussevitzky to aid living composers. Mr. Blackwood is Indianapolis-born. Mr. Haieff, born in Siberia, has lived in this country for 25 years. Appropriately, Koussevitzky's orchestra, the Boston Symphony, is conducted by Charles Munch for the recording.

MORTON GOULD'S "West Point" Symphony; Julian Work's "Autumn Walk," Clifton Williams' Fanfare and Allegro, and Robert Russell Bennett's Symphonic Songs for Band, all for wind ensemble, are played by Frederick Fennell and the Eastman Wind Ensemble on Mercury.

Three Americans are represented on a new Epic disc, "Music for a Golden Flute." They are Charles Griffes (1884-1920), Arthur Foote (1853-1837), and Mr. Hanson. The compositions are Griffes' Poem for Flute and Orchestra, Foote's A Night Piece, and Hanson's Serenade for Fluite, Harp and Strings. Arthur Honegger's Concerto da Camera for Flute, English Horn and Strings is included. The flutist is Maurice Sharp, and Louis Lane conducts the Cleveland Sinfonietta.



DALLAS SCENE—This view of the familiar landmark, the dome of the First Presbyterian Church, is part of a collection of watercolors of Dallas scenes by Julia Thompson Kirkpatrick, currently on view at the Nye Galleries, 3309 Hood. The galleries will be open the Fourth of July, but will close thereafter for the summer.—Staff Photo.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 618,802 S. 812,836
JUL 30 1961

Symphony Isn't Dead

BY MILES KASTENDIECK

"THE TIMES WE LIVE in are terribly exciting musically," says William Schuman. "I don't think that composing is any different today from what it ever was. Bach was just as scientific as anyone composing today.

"Science in the field of composition means craft . . . it seems to me that the use of the word science means experimentation, which has always gone on. There is no difference in the experimental techniques of today than in the romantic meanderings of Robert Schumann in his day."

The scene was the Seminar in Contemporary Music at Tanglewood on Friday, July 21. The interlocutor was Aaron Copland. Schuman was present because a program of his works had been offered in the series, and his Seventh Symphony was being played by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony the following evening.

●

SCHUMAN BELIEVES that those who say that the symphony is dead are talking "hogwash." He is a symphonic composer because the orchestra fascinates him more than anything else.

He compares symphonic writing with architecture; that is, building in large blocks. He is attracted by large structures just as the architect is.

Since he believes that "the job of the composer is to state in sound that which he feels, that music makes sense if it engages the heart and the mind of the listener," his Seventh Symphony should remain provocative for some time.

●

IN THE SENSE that this work represents an American type of music, he pointed out "I have never been self-conscious as an American composer. If they live here, it is perfectly natural for composers to be 'American' in greater or lesser degree.

"My concern today is that too many composers are afraid to look at home—they go exploring in other parts of the world. I am not suggesting provincialism by this, however, merely that a certain snobbishness has arisen.

"For instance, certain areas of the country will not even consider having an American as conductor, like the Midwest. This is chauvinism in reverse."

●

THAT THE Seventh Symphony challenges the listener and starts controversy there is no doubt. It is as difficult a work to grasp as it is to play.

On the threshold of the 'Sixties it should stimulate all Americans at least to ponder what this fellow American has to say naturally.

There is no want of self-assertion in the Seventh: it is powerful music.

233

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
D. 66,353
JUL 15 1961

U. S. Composers Change Their Tune

By TED STRONGIN
Knickerbocker News Staff Writer

AMERICAN - flavored music is a dead issue today to young composers, according to Aaron Copland who is probably the best known American - flavored composer at home and abroad.

Mr. Copland should know what he's talking about. He has been teaching the young at Tanglewood since 1940, when the Berkshire Music Center first began.

At Tanglewood early this week, Mr. Copland reflected for a spell on the past and present musical scene.

Fight Won in 30's

"American music was a fight of ours in the 20's," said the composer of "Billy the Kid," "Rodeo" and "Appalachian Spring."

The fight was won in the 30's "and then nobody was interested any more," said Mr. Copeland. He did not seem in the least disturbed by the state of affairs.

Nowadays, he said, the up-and-coming composer wants to know about all the new things from Europe: 12-tone music, electronic music, other new approaches.

To Mr. Copland, summers at Tanglewood are a golden opportunity to keep in touch with the changing interests of the young. "Some of the best come here," he said.

Changing Interests

Over the years, the field of interest has changed, Mr. Copland has observed. The nature hasn't.

"The young composer always wants to know the latest systematic way of composing so he's not lost in a sea of notes," Mr. Copland said. He and his colleagues at the school oblige with help.

This year's staff for example, includes Wolfgang Fortner and Roberto Gerhard, both Europeans, both schooled in the 12 - tone system originated by Arnold Schoenberg. Another year, Milton Babbitt came up from Princeton to be on the Tanglewood faculty. Mr. Babbitt is an electronic music expert.

Man on the Move

Most of the time, of course Mr. Copland is not at Tanglewood, which only operates summers. Neither is he at his home near Peekskill - very much.

He gets around. "I've done a lot of conducting in the last five years," Mr. Copland said. He's been to the Soviet Union, Japan, Austria, all under State Department auspices.

Right now, his major project is a movie score. His last one 12 years ago, was "The Heiress," He won an Academy Award for it.

The current project stars Carroll Baker and is called "Something Wild."

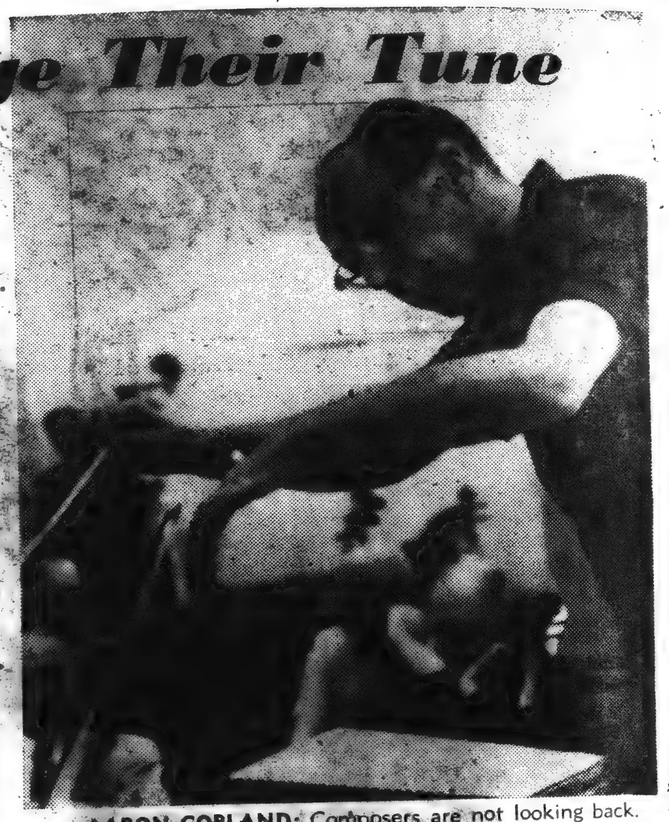
Mr. Copland describes it as "wide open...very little dialogue, always a cheerful thing for a composer."

In writing film music, Mr. Copland is aware of his tremendous audience, much greater than the audience that hears his concert works such as the Nonet for Solo Strings, played last Monday at Tanglewood.

His film music, he says, has a tendency to be simpler. But in dramatic moments, he can be as intense and complex as he wishes. Usually, his impressions of a scene or a character are his guides, for instance, "I wouldn't surround a simple girl with abstruse music," he said.

"Something Wild" is complete except for Mr. Copland's score. In an unprecedented move in the industry, the moviemakers agreed to wait four months for Mr. Copland's score. It was the only way he could accept the project.

"When you free lance," he said, "it's hard to get the right picture, the right fee and the right time, all at the same instant."



AARON COPLAND: Composers are not looking back.

Sometimes Conductor

At Tanglewood, Mr. Copland's offical title is chairman of the faculty and head of the composition department of the Berkshire Music Center.

He also conducts from time to time. He will be heard leading the Boston Symphony in "Appalachian Spring., and "Preamble" on July 28, at Tanglewood.

Mr. Copland's sector of operation is removed from the recent public controversy about whether Tanglewood programs are too standardized.

"We in the composing department are deeply concerned with contemporary activity," Mr. Copland said. Which means not too standardized.

234.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
JUL 29 1961

Trigger-Happy Composers

By Louis Chapin
Lenox, Mass.

When two composer-educators as experienced and as conversationally trigger-happy as Aaron Copland and William Schuman arrive on the same lecture platform, almost anything can happen—and it's not likely to be a lecture.

The particular platform for this encounter was that of the Chamber Music Hall at Tanglewood, and the occasion was the third of seven weekly lecture-concerts, each of which spotlights a composer and some of his chamber music. The composer speaks, students perform his music, and the whole affair is given to the public by the Fromm Music Foundation.

Mr. Schuman's coming as the composer of the day concurred with the playing of his Seventh Symphony at the following evening's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; some of his remarks threw light toward that impressive event as well as toward the chamber music we had just heard—his Fourth Quartet and several short choral pieces.

Mr. Copland, as dean of the Berkshire Music Center, welcomed Mr. Schuman (who is the president of Juilliard), and announced that the order of the day would switch the usual opening lecture with the later interview. When his probing and wary questions, after the music, were met with his guest's ebullient urbanity, the mental footwork was in keeping with each composer's nimblest style.

Here is an approximation of the give and take (the impression of brusqueness in some of Mr. Schuman's words was largely offset by his good-natured appearance):

Copland: I know that as a composer you are reluctant to make pronouncements, but I'm going to invite one anyway. What would you say is wrong with the composer's world?

Schuman [quickly]: Nothing. I feel comfortable, happy, and well. What's your next question?

Simply This. . . .

Copland: My next question is —why?

Schuman: Well, actually, you're right; I don't believe in pronouncements. And the last thing the 20th century needs is one more analysis. But I do believe in expressing conviction. It's the job of the composer to state in sound that which he feels. That is his world—he must reach the mind and engage the heart.

Copland: One of our earlier lecturers, Roberto Gerhard, made the statement that "science seems to have entered the field of composition." Do you agree?

Schuman: As far as I can see there's been no change in that regard over the long stretch. Look at Brahms—we're hearing his First Symphony tonight; we all know he wrote the introduction after he had finished the rest of the first movement, to anticipate the main themes more scientifically. And Bach's "48"—what incredible music he wrote! — with their scientific framework; he was able to be conscious of techniques and formulas, and yet to surpass them. I'm excited about the whole foment: science, to me, means craft, and craft means awareness. [Pause] You don't like it —well, you answer it.

Copland: It seems to me something has changed; 20th-century science is looming larger and larger, and it's brought about a new way of thinking.

Schuman: But experiment has always gone on. . . .

More or Less

Copland: Has it consistently within the last 50 years?

Schuman: No; I'll agree that there's more now than 50 years ago. This time is heading toward change. But my interest has to be in quality; techniques in themselves—twelve-tone or any other—couldn't help me less.

Copland [half to himself]: I think I'll take your hint. What would you like me to ask?

Schuman [looking pleased]: Oh, it doesn't matter. [to audience] You know, I like an interview. If it's successful, it's because I've answered well. If not, it's because the questions are so poor.

Copland [still smiling]: There seems to be one criterion that has waned in the judging of new compositions, and that is the question of Americanism. Do you think that's good or bad?

Schuman: I have never been so conscious of myself as an American composer, though I've never written directly in such styles as the blues. But what I regret is that because of the impressive stream of American writing—including Roy Harris's and your own—during the past few decades, young composers today seem afraid to explore for oil in their own back yard. The problem is a kind of chauvinism in reverse, which produces a terrible insecurity.

Copland: Do you regret the fact that you haven't done much studying abroad?

Schuman: Only in that I love languages and I can't speak them. You know, it's possible to travel and be a dullard; and it's possible to stay on Walden Pond and be quite fantastic.

Any Changes?

Copland: If you were to have your education over again, what would you change?

Schuman: Not one thing. I would have no desire to change its bourgeois values. But for someone else—my son, for instance—it should very likely be set up differently. He's getting much more exacting training than I ever got.

Copland: Why have you written so many symphonies? Why hasn't it been seven operas instead?

Schuman: I'm a symphonic composer. The orchestra fascinates me, and I think a composer should be governed by the medium that draws him. I like the structural process of the symphony, too—if I were a writer I'd be a novelist. I hope I live to write seven more. Some people say the symphony is dead; that's hogwash.

Other Forms?

Copland: How about your other forms?

Schuman: I like them for various reasons. The quartet, for instance, is tonally much more limited, but for those four strings I can write pure music. I enjoy writing choral works, simply because I love to hear all the kids sing them. Actually I've got good tunes in the symphonies, too, but the audiences don't give me that particular satisfaction.

Copland: Do you think you might be tempted to write a choral symphony?

Schuman [sincerely]: That's a brilliant question. But this gets into a different kind of writing. If I want to do it, I'll write cantatas.

Copland [looking at his watch]: Do you have some closing statement?

Schuman [still cool on this warm afternoon]: Good-by, and thank you very much.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 17 1961

Aaron Copland Will Receive MacDowell Award

Composer Aaron Copland of the Berkshire Music Center will be honored ~~Saturday afternoon~~ when he is presented the 1961 MacDowell Award at the MacDowell Colony in Peterborough, N.H.

Groups throughout the world are honoring Mr. Copland this year in celebration of his 60th birthday. The MacDowell Award is especially significant in that it marks the centennial year of Edward MacDowell's birth. He formed the colony to give young artists quarters and maintenance while they worked on their projects. Last year's award went to Thornton Wilder.

Among those expected to be present at the ceremony is Fay Barnaby Kent of Berkeley Heights, N.J., a frequent summer visitor to the Berkshires. Mrs. Kent has been a supporter of the Mac Dowell Colony since 1910, when as national vice president of the Alpha Chi Omega sorority, she persuaded the group to raise runds for the project, and is national chairman of the MacDowell Committee. In addition to this, she has done much on her own to encourage the work of of young artists.

235

CHARLOTTE, N.C.
OBSERVER
D. 161,914 S. 179,913

JUL 30 1961

SIGHTS AND SOUNDS

Night Poetic For Copland

By DICK BANKS
Observer Arts Editor

"I tend to write music after dinner. Music is a romantic art. And night time seems to me the romantic time. Music and the evening seem to go together."

It was exciting interviewing American composer-author Aaron Copland.

His ballet, "Appalachian Spring," serene, warm, gentle, is known around the world.

In the difficult task of relating music to ideas associated with the spoken word he has written such works as "Music and Imagination" (1952).

Copeland won a Hollywood Oscar for his score of the film, "The Heiress," a decade ago.

★ ★ ★

"RIGHT NOW," he continued, "I'm busy with the score of another movie, 'Something Wild,' starring Carroll Baker. That's what I ought to be working on instead of giving this interview."

Copeland's office at Tanglewood, Massachusetts, is remarkably bare. He may like it that way for accoustical reasons.

It contained a piano, a small round table, one upholstered throne-like affair, a bench with the same tapestry-material, and assorted recital-hall-type chairs.

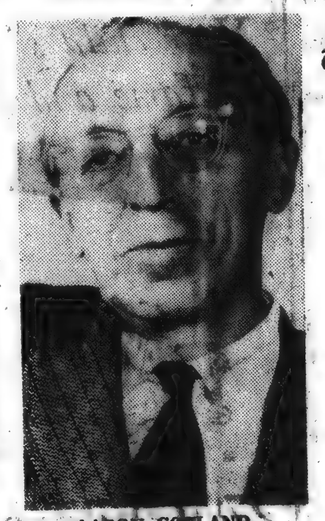
Copland talks fast, with an insistent let's-get-this-over-with forcefulness. You feel you're taking it once around with the Indianapolis Speedway champ.

★ ★ ★

COPLAND had a musical phase when he moved from a jazz idiom into way-out contemporary stuff. Then he decided he loved his fellow man (of this day) enough to write for him. His present style resulted.

There's a good rendition of the ballet, "Appalachian Spring" by Columbia Records, with the Philadelphia Orchestra conducted by Eugene Ormandy.

It deals with a pioneer marriage in the Pennsylvania hills, with a bride's dream of coming motherhood, hints of a square dance and country fiddlers and a Shaker tune introduced by a clarinet.



AARON COPLAND

Copland got the Pulitzer prize for "Appalachian Spring" in 1945. His ballet suite, "Billy the Kid," takes the quick-shooting badman right up to his death with an added waltz. In both Copland makes vivid use of the wood winds. There's a strong contemporary feeling in his percussion and his use of the bass.

★ ★ ★

Copland was born in Brooklyn, Nov. 14, 1900. He studied in Fontainbleau and in Paris. In 1925-26 he held a Guggenheim Fellowship.

He's a tall man. At least he appears to be, with a prominent, curving nose, and a very high forehead (this means he has lost the front and middle half of his greying hair). His lower lip protrudes slightly. He has a delightfully human, almost childlike grin.

"A normal day in the life of a composer?

"I take care of affairs during the morning hours. The life of a composer who has been at it a good many years involves lots besides putting notes on paper.

"You have to keep up with the latest developments. You have to keep up with music you find stimulating.

"Always there is correspondence, for instance with young conductors who want to know how to play a certain portion of one of my works. And there are so many young composers!

"You have to make time to compose or you're likely to be swamped with other things.

"Relaxation? I have a place up the Hudson River valley. I putter around the garden. I like the theater and movies. I read magazines and newspapers for relaxation."

★ ★ ★

COPLAND SAID his latest book, published in November is "a collection of articles I have written over the years — 'Copeland On Music.'"

Copland is head of the composition department at Tanglewood, where Charles Munch holds forth in the summer with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"How do you go about assessing the ability of a young composer?

"You guess at it. I think it takes an instinct to detect the potential composer in what his hesitant gropings show.

"Hundreds ask for help. When you find one developing well it is a great satisfaction.

"This seems to me not the day of one musical genius. I have thought of myself as one of a whole school of American composers. A country the size of ours brings forth a number of people who together write the significant music of America.

"As for the young composers here at this summer school, all we can do is stimulate them, give them some understanding of their abilities and their difficulties. Yes, help them to help themselves."

The Charlotte Observer
MUSIC AND ART
Sunday, July 30, 1961

Haieff Award

HOLYOKE TRANSCRIPT

Alexei Haieff Wins Boston Symphony Prize

July 8

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Horblit Award of $1,000 has been made to the American composer. Alexei Haieff.

Established by Bostonian Mark M. Horblit in 1947, the purpose of the award is "to foster and promote the writing of symphonic compositions by composers resident in the United States by providing for awards to be conferred in recognition of meritorious work in that field, and thus to enlarge and enrich the fund of good music suitable for rendition by symphony orchestra." The Boston Symphony Orchestra has performed three compositions by Mr. Haieff: the Divertimento (ballet, 1944), his Piano Concerto which won the New York Music Critics Circle Award in 1952, and his Symphony No. 2 which won the first American International Music Fund award. Charles Munch and the orchestra have recorded the Symphony No. 2 for RCA Victor.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,088
JUL 22 1961

Boston Symphony Composer's Award To Alexei Haieff

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Horblitt Award of $1,000 has been made to the American composer Alexei Haieff.

The award was established by Bostonian Mark M. Horblitt in 1947, to promote symphonic writing by composers resident in the United States and thus to enrich the fund of good music for symphony orchestras.

The Boston has performed three compositions by Mr. Haieff: the Divertimento (ballet, 1944), his Piano Concerto which won the New York Music Critics Circle Award in 1952, and his Symphony No. 2 which won the first American International Music Fund Award.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
JUL 9 1961

Horblit Award

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's ~~1961 Horblit~~ Award of $1,000 has been made to the American composer, Alexei Haieff.

Established by Bostonian Mark M. Horblit in 1947, the purpose of the award is "to foster and promote the writing of symphonic compositions by composers resident in the United States by providing for awards to be conferred in recognition of meritorious work in that field, and thus to enlarge and enrich the fund of good music suitable for rendition by symphony orchestras." The Boston Symphony Orchestra has performed three compositions by Mr. Haieff.

The award committee, consisting of the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the president of the Orchestra's trustees, and the head of the department of music at Harvard, has previously granted the Horblit Award to Aaron Copland, Walter Piston, Leonard Bernstein, Lukas Foss, Lec Smit, Andrew Imbrie, Rose Lee Finney and Easley Blackwood.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955
JUL 10 1961

Composer Haieff Wins Boston Symphony Award

LENOX, Mass. (UPI)— American composer Alexei Haieff has won the 1961 Horblit Award of $1,000 given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Three of Haieff's compositions have been played by the orchestra. One of them, Symphony No. 2, had been recorded by Charles Munch and the orchestra. The others are his Piano Concerto, which won the New York Music Critics Circle Award in 1952, and the Idvertimento, a 1944 ballet.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 100,394
JUL 30 1961

HORBLIT AWARD TO COMPOSER HAIEFF

In passing there is a recent announcement from Tanglewood of particular interest to patrons of the New Haven Symphony's concerts. The Boston Symphony's 1961 Horblit Award of $1,000 has been made to composer Alexei Haieff. Haieff's Symphony No. 3, commissioned by the New Haven Symphony under a grant from the William Inglis Morse Trust for Music, was successfully premiered in the orchestra's final Woolsey Hall concert last season.

The Boston Symphony has performed three of Haieff's works, one of which was his Symphony No. 2 which the orchestra has recorded for RCA Victor. This work incidentally won the first American International Music Fund Award. The other two works are the Divertimento (ballet, 1944) and the Piano Concerto which received the New York Music Critics Circle Award in 1952.

BLANK PAGE

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,185

JUN 29 1961

Piano Marvel

Lowell Youngster To Share Spotlight With Boston Pops

By Alfred Burke

Deborah Moriarty

LOWELL—Haydn's piano "Concerto in D major" is no ordinary undertaking for a girl 11 years old.

However, we are certain that on the morning of July 12, at the Hatch memorial shell on the Esplanade, members of the Boston Pops orchestra will be certain that City Councilor and Mrs. William Moriarty's daughter Deborah, has proven equal to the task.

This will be a big affair to the lovely little miss who attends the Oaklands school and causes her playmates on Wentworth avenue to open their eyes real wide whenever she sits down at the piano. But Deborah doesn't just sit there.

With the careful guidance and coaching of her teacher, Miss Anna Scannell, she has absorbed and learned the secret of making the three B's and several immortal composers come to life. She has a tremendous repertoire. And the writings of the already named composers plus Bach, Mozart as well as the giants of the Italian and French schools are her constant companions.

This little lady however has one weakness. She startles everyone when she gets so completely wrapped up in the keyboard that she refuses to take time out for refreshments such as ice cream sodas and other goodies that turn the head of those from eight to 80.

FOR HER benefit the pauses come often, but she is soon "aboard" her piano bench and whirling her way through a world of sonatas and pieces familiar to the period of early composition. The Beethoven pieces are her favorites, and she refuses to accept the master as a grouchy and gruff person as described in history books.

Bach intrigues her, and it is truly amazing as to how she has captured the styling of his work. She moves her way along in a steady and smoothly styled rhythm, and she makes his work just what it should be—wonderful but not overdone.

Two years ago we sat through an informal program which Debbie played. How delightful to hear Beethoven created in true character, Mozart done in light and clearly executed passages, and Debussy moving in an effective picture.

Those who know piano marvel at her ability to approach a Bach "invention." This is no ordinary feat, especially when she does it with understanding and a musicanship that belies her tender years. This little item drew warm praise from Miss Rose Raymond the noted New York teacher who served as judge at the recently conducted National Piano Guild sectional auditions which were held at Lowell State college.

PLAYING a full program of required pieces Deborah auditioned in a special class, a group created for the student of outstanding talent. She also has achieved standing in a class that covers the entire International scene.

She was selected to appear with the Pops in the weekly children's concert series following an audition with Harry Ellis Dickson a member of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and associate conductor of the Boston Pops. Debbie delighted the veteran musician, and his enthusiasm was such that he took time out to invite Maestro Arthur Fiedler to "sit in" on the remainder of the program.

In the program on July 12, Deborah will share the solo spotlight with a boy who shows promise, and will be heard in the opening movement of the Haydn. Deborah will play the final two movements and if her musical life follows the usual pattern she will be completing only the early part of a career as soloist with orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

JUL 2 1961

Fiedler Begins Concerts On Esplanade Tonight

Arthur Fiedler will begin tonight at 8:30, in the Hatch Memorial Shell on the Charles River Esplanade, the 33d season of free, open-air Esplanade Concerts.

They will be performed by an orchestra of Boston Symphony men the next two weeks, with the exception of next Saturday night and Thursday, July 13. A second series will be given Aug. 21 through the 26th. Children's programs will be presented at 10:15 to 11:15 the Wednesday mornings of July 5 and 12, and Aug. 23.

The Hatch Memorial Shell is located near the foot of Mt. Vernon st. Programs for this week:

Tonight at 8:30. Little Fugue in G minor, Bach; Symphony No. 2, in D major, Beethoven; The Star Spangled Banner; Piano Concerto No. 3, in C minor, Op. 37, Beethoven, Soloist: Ralph Votapek.

Monday, at 8:30 p.m. Eine kleine Nachtmusik, K. 525, Mozart; Symphony No. 41, in C major, "Jupiter," K. 551, Mozart; The Star Spangled Banner; Irish Suite, Anderson; American Salute, Gould; American Patrol, Meacham.

Tuesday, at 8:30. March "1776" (Chester), Longenden; Symphony in B minor ("Unfinished"), Schubert; Suite from "Gayne," Khachaturian; America; Star Spangled Banner; Rhapsody in Blue, Gershwin, Soloist: Leo Litwin; Battle Hymn of the Republic, Steffe-Gould; Salute to the Armed Forces, Bodge; Stars and Stripes Forever, Sousa.

Wednesday at 10:15 a.m., first Children's Concert. March of the Toys, from "Babes in Toyland", Herbert; "Overture to "William Tell", Rossini; Solo Violoncello: Martin Honerman; Schwanda Polka, Weinberger; First Movement, Piano Concerto in D major, Haydn, soloist: Stephen Steinberg; "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," Dukes; Pops Round-Up; The Star-Spangled Banner.

Wednesday at 8:30 p.m., Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Op. 68, Brahms; The Star-Spangled Banner; The Animals' Carnival, Grand Zoological Fantasia, Saint-Saens; Soloists: Leo Litwin and Samuel Lipman; French Military March, from "Algerian Suite", Saint-Saens.

Thursday at 8:30 p.m.: Overture, Fingal's Cave, Mendelssohn; Symphony No. 4, in A major, Op. 90 ("Italian"), Mendelssohn; The Star-Spangled Banner; Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini, for Piano and Orchestra, Rachmaninoff, soloist Joella Jones; Polovetsian Dances, from "Prince Igo," Borodin.

Friday at 8:30 p.m.: Prelude to Act III, from "Lohengrin," Wagner; A Seigfried Idyll, Wagner; Piano Concerto No. 2 in A major, Litszt, soloist Samuel Lipman; The Star-Spangled Banner; Prelude and Love-Death, from "Tristan and Isolde," Wagner; Overture to "Tannhauser," Wagner.

No concert Saturday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Boston Business
BOSTON, Mass.
Monthly Ch. of Com.
Circ. 5,000

JUN 1961

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 165,763

JUN 26 1961

Music on The Esplanade

The 33d season of the Esplanade Concerts will be opened by Arthur Fiedler, their founder and conducter, on Sunday evening, July 2 at 8:30 in the Edward Hatch Memorial Shell on Storrow drive, at the foot of Mt. Vernon st., Beacon Hill.

The Hatch Shell on Boston's Charles River Esplanade. The Boston Pops Orchestra provides free performances at the Shell in the summer.

239

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545

JUL 1 1961

On the E

New Season Opening Sunday

The 33rd season of the Esplanade Concerts will open Sunday night at the Hatch Memorial Shell under the direction of their founder Arthur Fiedler. He has announced five soloists for the week, all pianists.

Ralph Votapek will be heard in Beethoven Concerto No. 3 on opening night. On Tuesday Leo Litwin will again be featured in Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue.

The first Children's Concert will be held Wednesday morning at 10:45. Harry Ellis Dickson will be the commentator, and Stephen Steinberg will play the first movement from Haydn's D Major Concerto.

The programs:

Sunday Evening, July 2

Little Fugue in G minor ..... Bach
Symphony No. 2, in D major ..... Beethoven
The Star-Spangled Banner
Piano Concerto No. 3, in C minor, Op. 37 ..... Beethoven
Soloist: Ralph Votapek
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Monday Evening, July 3

Eine kleine Nachtmusik, K. 525 ..... Mozart
Symphony No. 41 in C major "Jupiter," K. 551 ..... Mozart
The Star-Spangled Banner
Irish Suite ..... Anderson
American Salute ..... Gould
American Patrol ..... Meacham
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Tuesday Evening, July 4

March, "1776" (Chester) ..... Langendoen
Symphony in B minor ("Unfinished") ..... Schubert
Suite from "Gayne" ..... Khachaturian
The Star-Spangled Banner
America
Rhapsody in Blue ..... Gershwin
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Battle Hymn of the Republic ..... Steffe-Gould
Salute to the Armed Forces ..... Bodge
Stars and Stripes Forever ..... Sousa
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

First Children's Concert
Wednesday Morning, July 5
Time: 10:45

March of the Toys, from "Babes in Toyland" ..... Herbert
Overture to "William Tell" ..... Rossini
Solo Cello: Martin Hoherman
Schwanda Polka ..... Weinberger
First Movement, Piano Concerto in D Major ..... Haydn
Soloist: Stephen Steinberg
The Sorcerer's Apprentice ..... Dukas
Pops Round-Up ..... Arr. Hayman
The Star-Spangled Banner
Commentator: Harry Ellis Dickson
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Wednesday Evening, July 5

Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Op. 68 ..... Brahms
The Star-Spangled Banner
The Animals' Carnival ..... Saint-Saëns
Soloists:
Leo Litwin and Samuel Lipman
French Military March, from "Algerian Suite" ..... Saint-Saëns
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Thursday Evening, July 6

Overture, Fingal's Cave ..... Mendelssohn
Symphony No. 4 ("Italian") ..... Mendelssohn
The Star-Spangled Banner
Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini, for Piano and Orch. ..... Rachmaninoff
Soloist: Joella Jones
Polovetsian Dances, from "Prince Igor" ..... Borodin
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Friday Evening, July 7

Prelude to Act III, from "Lohengrin" ..... Wagner
A Siegfried Idyll ..... Wagner
Piano Concerto No. 2, in A major ..... Liszt
Soloist: Samuel Lipman
The Star-Spangled Banner
Prelude and Love-Death, from "Tristan and Isolde" ..... Wagner
Overture to "Tannhäuser" ..... Wagner
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

JUL 2 1961

Esplanade

Arthur Fiedler opens the 33rd season of Esplanade Concerts at the refurbished Hatch Shell by the Charles River tonight at 8:30. There will be a special concert July 4 with old and newer patriotic music included in the program. The first children's concert will be held Wednesday morning at 10:15 p.m. Mr. Fiedler will conduct all performances this week through Friday. There is no concert Saturday. All evening performances start at 8:30. There is no admission charge but chairs may be rented and programs are available.

The programs follow:

TODAY
Little Fugue in G minor ..... Bach
Symphony No. 2, in D major ..... Beethoven
The Star-Spangled Banner
Piano Concerto No. 3 ..... Beethoven
Soloist: Ralph Votapek

MONDAY
Eine kleine Nachtmusik, K. 525 ..... Mozart
Symphony No. 41 "Jupiter," K. 551 ..... Mozart
The Star-Spangled Banner
Irish Suite ..... Anderson
American Salute ..... Gould
American Patrol ..... Meacham

TUESDAY
March, "1776" (Chester) ..... Langendoen
Symphony in B minor ("unfinished") ..... Schubert
Suite from "Gayne" ..... Khachaturian
America
The Star-Spangled Banner
Rhapsody in Blue ..... Gershwin
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Battle Hymn of the Republic ..... Steffe-Gould
Salute to the Armed Forces ..... Bodge
Stars and Stripes Forever ..... Sousa

WEDNESDAY MORNING
March of the Toys, from "Babes in Toyland" ..... Herbert
Overture to "William Tell" ..... Rossini
Solo Violoncello: Martin Hoherman
Schwanda Polka ..... Weinberger
First Movement, Piano Concerto in D major ..... Haydn
Soloist: Stephen Steinberg
The Sorcerer's Apprentice, Poem ..... Dukas
Pops Round-Up ..... arr. Hayman
The Star-Spangled Banner

WEDNESDAY EVENING
Symphony No. 1 ..... Brahms
The Star-Spangled Banner
The Animals' Carnival, Grand Zoological Fantasia ..... Saint-Saens
Soloists: Leo Litwin and Samuel Lipman
French Military March, from "Algerian Suite" ..... Saint-Saens

THURSDAY
Overture, Fingal's Cave ..... Mendelssohn
Symphony No. 4 ("Italian") ..... Mendelssohn
The Star-Spangled Banner
Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini for Piano and Orchestra ..... Rashmaninoff
Soloist: Joella Jones
Polovetsian Dances, from "Prince Igor" ..... Borodin

FRIDAY
Prelude to Act III, from "Lohengrin" ..... Wagner
A Siegfried Idyll ..... Wagner
Piona Concerto No. 2, in A major ..... Liszt
Soloist: Samuel Lipman
The Star-Spangled Banner
Prelude and Love-Death, from "Tristan and Isolde" ..... Wagner
Overture to "Tannhauser" ..... Wagner

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Dorchester Citizen
BOSTON, Mass.
Comb. Circ. 25,300

JUL 20 1961

APPRECIATION—The Esplanade Orchestra of Boston Symphony musicians under the direction of Harry Ellis Dickson, presented the first of the year's Children's concerts July 17 at the Hatch Memorial Shell. The program was sponsored by Stop & Shop, Inc. Dickson, left, presents Norman S. Rabb, Stop & Shop senior vice president, with a certificate of appreciation on behalf of the orchestra.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

AUG 20 1961

Final Esplande Concerts

The Esplanade concerts resume for the third and final week tomorrow evening. They will continue nightly at 8:30 through Aug. 26 at the Hatch Memorial Shell on Storrow Drive at the foot of Mt. Vernon st., Beacon Hill. There will be a children's concert on Wednesday evening, at 10:15 in addition to the usual evening concert.

The Boston Symphony Musicians, after playing two weeks on the Esplanade in July, have been performing in the Berkshire Music Festival which concludes Sunday afternoon, Aug. 20.

The programs of the week are as follows:

Monday, Aug. 21, at 8:30. Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct:

Academic Festival, Overture, Brahms; Symphony No. 100, in G major ("Military"), Haydn; Violin Concerto in E-minor, Op. 64, Mendelssohn, with soloist Fredy Ostrovsky; Ballet Music from "Faust," Gounod.

Tuesday, Aug. 22, at 8:30. Dickson will conduct:

Overture to "Genoveva," Schumann; Variations on a Theme of Haydn, Op. 56a, Brahms; Overture to "Die Fliedermaus," Strauss; Concerto to D minor for Strings, Op. 3, No. 11, Vivaldi; Ave Maria, Schubert-Wilhelmj, with solo violin, Roland Tapley; Espana, Rhapsody, Chabrier.

Wednesday, Aug. 23, at 10:15. Children's Concert. Dickson will conduct;

The Thunderer, March, Sousa; Miller's Dance, from "The Three-Cornered Hat," Falla; Finale from Symphony No. 4, in A major, Op. 90, Mendelssohn; ("Italian"); First Movement from Violin Concerto in E minor, Mendelssohn, with soloist, Penny Ambrose; Irish Tune from County Derry, arr. Grainger; Farandole, from "L'Arlesienne" Suite No. 2, Bizet; Russian Sailor's Dance, from "The Red Poppy," Gliere; Hoe Down, from "Rodeo," Copland.

Wednesday, Aug. 23, at 8:30. Dickson will conduct:

"Don Juan," Tone Poem, Op. 20 (after Nikolaus Lanau), Strauss; Symphony No. 35, in D major ("Haffner") K. 385, Mozart; Trumpet Concerto in E major, Hummel, with soloist Armando Ghitalla; Minuet for Strings, Boccherini; Suite from "The Three-Cornered Hat," Falla.

Thursday, Aug. 24, at 8:30. Dickson will conduct:

Overture to "Coriolan" (after Collin), Op. 62, Beethoven; Symphony No. 36, in C major, ("Linz"), K. 425, Mozart; Serenade for Strings, Op. 48, Romeo and Juliet, Overture-Fantasia, Tchaikovsky.

Friday, Aug. 25, at 8:30. Arthur Fiedler will conduct:

Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro, Mozart; Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 61, Beethoven, with soloist George Zazofsky; Prelude to "Lohengrin," Wagner; Excerpts from "The Damnation of Faust," Berlioz.

Saturday, Aug. 25, at 8:30. Fiedler will conduct:

Polonaise from "Eugene Onegin," Violin Concerto, Op. 35, with soloist, Joseph Silverstein, Suite from "The Nutcracker." Finale from Symphony No. 4, Tchaikovsky.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076

JUL 3 1961

50 Wait in Vain In Esplanade Rain

Arthur Fiedler sent 50 drenched music-lovers home last night after a violent summer thundersquall threatened to wash the Boston Pops Orchestra from Hatch Memorial Shell.

The 50 dogged fans, shielded by umbrellas and ponchos, waited patiently as sheets of rain were whipped across the Charles River.

Fiedler announced that the opening performance of the Esplanade concerts would be tonight at 8:30 p. m.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991

JUL 3 1961

Esplanade Concerts Opening Rained Out, Premiere Tonight

The 33d season of open-air Esplanade Concerts will have its premiere tonight. Last night's opening was rained out.

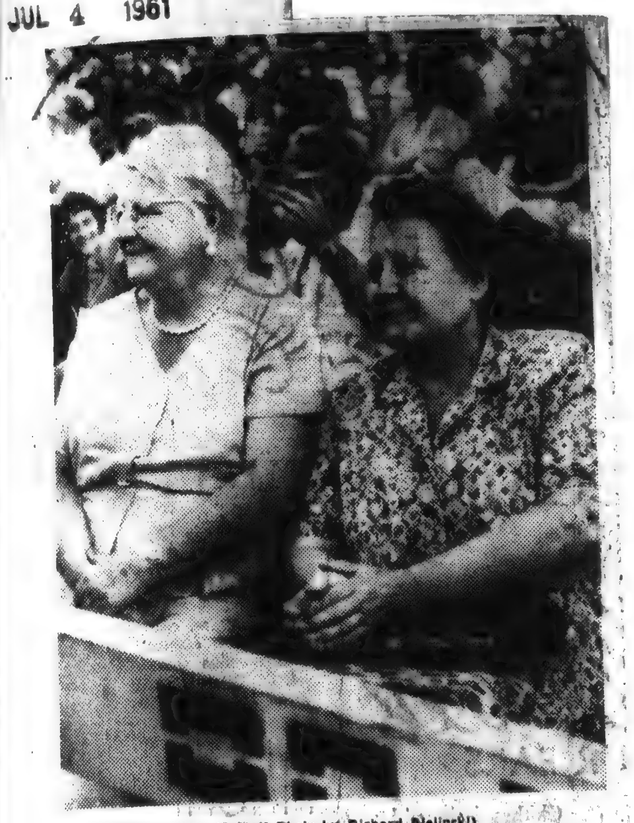
Arthur Fiedler will conduct an orchestra of Boston Symphony men in Hatch Memorial Shell on Charles River Esplanade starting at 8:30.

The free concerts will be presented nightly the next two weeks with the exception of this Saturday and Thursday, July 13.

Children's programs are presented Wednesday mornings from 10:15 to 11:15.

A second series will be given Aug. 21 through Aug. 26.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
JUL 4 1961



(Herald Staff Photo by Richard Bielinski)

THIRTY-THIRD OPENING—Mrs. Florence Dunlap of Westland avenue, left, and Betty Cooper of St. Stephens street attend opening night of Esplanade Concerts for 33d time. They arrived at 5 p.m. and sat through rain shower for front row seats.

Esplanade Concerts in 33d Season

Fiedler Artistry Enthralls 8000

By MICHAEL C. JENSEN

The grass was wet, the breeze cool, and the music red, white, and blue last night as the 33d season of Esplanade Concerts got off to a belated start with a special pre-Fourth of July program.

It rained bucketsful up to two hours before Maestro Arthur Fiedler lifted his baton and started the orchestral fireworks.

Sunday, for the third time in 33 years, the opening concert was canceled, but it took a tornado alert to do it.

Some 8,000 enthralled music lovers took to the grass at Edward Hatch Memorial Shell on the Charles River and soaked up an evening of music — Boston Symphony style.

"It makes me happy to be here," said Fiedler, "because the Esplanade Concerts are my baby."

The concerts were started by

(Continued from First Page)

Fiedler in 1929 when he was a violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"And this beautiful shell is certainly different from our first," he said. "The original used to sway in the breeze so we all thought it would tumble down on us."

Sitting under the soft lights of the shell were three musicians who, like Fiedler, were celebrating their 33d year at the Esplanade.

Minot Beale, a violinist from North Abington, shook his head in disbelief.

NOT CAT-COOL

"It doesn't seem possible," he said, "that I've been at this for 33 years."

"It's cool," he said, (Not cat-cool but shirt-sleeve-cool).

Another violinist, Samuel Diamond of Boston, marveled at the pleasure of playing outdoors, close to nature.

"It reminds me of our concerts in Australia," he said, "where we played in unheated concert halls wearing overcoats and earmuffs."

Oboeist Jean deVergie enthused over the newly renovated shell. "It's the best I've ever played in," he said. "And look at all the wonderful people who could never have a chance to see us without these concerts."

Sitting in the front row, just behind the police barricade, were Betty Cooper of St. Stephens Street and Mrs. Florence Dunlap of Westland Avenue.

They smoothed their damp dresses and settled back to enjoy the concert.

"Yes, we've been coming for 33 years," said Miss Cooper. Today we got here at 5 p.m. When the rain started guess where we headed?"

Into the shell, naturally.

OVATION CUT SHORT

At 8:32 Fiedler strode onto the stage. An ovation was cut short after 30 seconds when he lifted his baton and motioned the orchestra into action.

It was Mozart's Eine Kleine Nachtmusik.

In addition to the traditional post-intermission opener, The Star Spangled Banner, Fiedler led Gould's American Salute, and Meacham's American Patrol.

Other numbers included Mozart's Symphony No. 41, and the Irish Suite by Anderson.

The crowd of 8,000 was smaller by almost half than customary opening night audiences.

Police blamed a 7 p.m. rain squall and the sad experience of hundreds who were washed out of the scheduled opening Sunday.

Fiedler will conduct all this week. The concerts will continue through July 15, except July 8 and 13.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
JUL 4 1961

10,000 Jam Esplanade For Concert

Over 10,000 music lovers made their way to the Esplanade last night for the opening of the 33d season of the famed outdoor concerts, despite the fact that, for a while, it appeared "stormy weather" would be the only allusion to music.

The Sunday evening opening was cancelled because of the heavy winds and rain that lashed the area, leaving some 100 drenched fans of the Esplanade Concerts who heard not a single note of music.

CONCERT
Page Ten

t at 7:20 last night, the rain stopped, and the late-day sun flashed the signal for the arrival of the thankful crowd.

Another hitch almost canceled the opening. Necessary wiring for the lighting and sound amplification systems had not been done.

M.D.C. Comm. Robert F. Murphy speeded up the completion of job bids, and the work was finished in time.

Among the 10,000 present last night were large groups of elderly persons from the Marian Manor, South Boston, South End House, N. E. Deaconess Assn., Concord and Home for Aged Women.

Only three in the huge throng apparently did not feel the music of the Boston Pops was worthwhile. Three teenage girls turned on rock 'n roll music on their portable radio. After icy stares of nearby people they shut it off.

Fielder Arrives

At 8:30 sharp, conductor Arthur Fiedler marched on stage, bowed to the audience and signalled his 75 musicians into the first selection.

Fiedler wore no jacket. But he wore a green necktie, particularly appropriate for Leroy Anderson's "Irish Suite", commissioned by the Eire Society of Boston.

In the middle of the concert, the assemblage looked skyward after hearing apparent rumbling of thunder.

But it was only the sound of fireworks on Cambridge Common, visible from the Esplanade.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
JUL 16 1961

Hatch Concerts Resume Aug. 23

Yesterday marked the final Esplanade concert of the two-week series at the Hatch Shell on the Charles Esplanade. The Boston Symphony musicians now rejoin their colleagues at Tanglewood for the concerts by the full orchestra.

At the close of the Berkshire Festival the Esplanade Concerts through 26 with a special children's program on Wednesday will resume from Aug. 23 morning of that week.

The concerts founded by Arthur Fiedler have retained their popularity with large audiences present at the free open-air programs throughout the past two weeks.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
JUL 2 1961

Fiedler Directs At Castle Hill On Saturday

Arthur Fiedler and 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will highlight the next weekend at the Castle Hill concert services in Ipswitch.

Friday at 8:30 p.m., pianist Earl Wild will present a series of piano solos.

Mr. Fiedler will conduct an all-Mozart program on Saturday at 8:30 p.m. beginning with "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," followed by the C Major Piano Concerto in which Mr. Wild will be the soloist, and Mozart's Symphony No. 41, "Jupiter."

Seats for the series are available at Filene's in Boston and at various North Shore agencies.

241
MIDLAND, MICH.
NEWS
D. 11,578
JUL 5 1961

Featurama

Detroit Masonic Auditorium Offers Varied Attractions

During the 1961 - 62 season the Detroit Masonic Auditorium, under the general managership of C. W. VanLopik, will again offer an exciting and distinguished array of symphony orchestras, artists and dance companies on the concert and symphony series.

The high light of both Series will be the first Detroit appearance of the internationally renowned New York City Ballet Company. This dance group, under the direction of George Balanchine, will be the initial attraction of the concert series on Friday, October 13.

Friday, October 20 will mark the premiere of the symphony series, celebrating its 16th year with the appearance of the Boston Symphony under the baton of Charles Munch. The highly acclaimed Berlin Symphony, conducted by Karl Boehm, will follow on Friday, November 10. Featured for the first time this year on this series will be the New York City Opera Company. Julius Rudel will lead the cast and orchestra on Friday, November 17 in a performance of Puccini's "Madame Butterfly." Walter Susskind will conduct the Toronto Symphony, on Wednesday January 3, and Eugene Ormandy with the Philadelphia Orchestra will close the Symphony series on Wednesday, May 2.

The Concert Series, celebrating its 29th year, will offer seven artists, orchestras and dance companies. Following the New York City Ballet will be Poland's Mazowsze Dance Company. Regarded as the Moiseyev of Poland, this company of more than one hundred will perform on Friday November 3.

Luboshutz and Nemenoff, the two - piano team, will return to the Masonic Auditorium on Friday, December 8. Zino Francescatti will appear on Friday, January 12.

On Friday, February 2, soprano Mary Costa, wil make her Masonic Auditorium debut. The Boston "Pops" Orchestra under Arthur Fiedler, which was absent from Detroit the past season, will be heard on Saturday, February 17. Concluding the Concert Series will be Arthur Rubinstein, on Friday March 23.

Additional information concerning the Concert and Symphony Series may be obtained by writing the Masonic Auditorium, 506 Temple, Detroit 1, Michigan.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 143,529
AUG 2 1961

Boston Pops Will Play in Newport

The Boston Pops Orchestra with Arthur Fiedler conducting will present a program at Newport Aug. 27 at 8:30 p.m. for the benefit of the Boys Clubs of Newport County.

The concert, which will be held in the Naval Station Drill Hall, is being sponsored for the second consecutive year by the Newport Music Festival, Inc. headed by Howard G. Cushing.

Mrs. Benjamin Ladd Cook of the committee in charge announced yesterday that the program would be lighter than last year.

All seats will be three dollars each but tables for four may be reserved in advance for $20 through the Boys Club office in Newport. On the night of the concert, individual table seats for one to four will be available at $5 each.

Mrs. Lydia A. Foote heads the committee in charge of the concert. It includes Mr. Cushing, Mrs. Cook, Mrs. Theodore P. Grosvenor, Irving A. Rolter, Frank L. Nunes, Adm. Richard W. Bates (ret), William A. Cary and James E. Whitford.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 61,175
AUG 2 1961

Newport Concert To Be Presented By Boston Pops

The Boston Pops Orchestra with Arthur Fiedler conducting will present a program at Newport Aug. 27 at 8:30 p.m. for the benefit of the Boys Clubs of Newport County.

The concert, which will be held in the Naval Station Drill Hall, is being sponsored for the second consecutive year by the Newport Music Festival, Inc. headed by Howard G. Cushing.

Mrs. Benjamin Ladd Cook of the committee in charge announced yesterday that the program would be lighter than last year.

All seats will be three dollars each but tables for four may be reserved in advance for $20 through the Boys Club office in Newport. On the night of the concert, individual table seats for one to four will be available at $5 each.

Mrs. Lydia A. Foote heads the committee in charge of the concert. It includes Mr. Cushing, Mrs. Cook, Mrs. Theodore P. Grosvenor, Irving A. Rolter, Frank L. Nunes, Adm. Richard W. Bates (ret), William A. Cary and James E. Whitford.

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN-TIMES
D. 566,219 S. 648,179
JUN 30 1961

Nine Boston 'Pops' For July, August

Nine concerts by the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, will be broadcast on FM Radio Station WFMT (98.7) during July and August.

Originating from Boston's Symphony Hall, it is scheduled for Saturday evenings at 8 p.m., beginning this Saturday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
JUL 2 1961

Berkshire Concerts Again on WGBH-FM

The opening Berkshire Music Festival concert of the 1961 season will be presented by WGBH-FM Saturday, July 8 at 8:25 p.m. This marks the eighth consecutive year WGBH-FM has recorded the concerts.

Charles Munch has chosen an all-Bach program to inaugurate the season. He will direct the orchestra in four Suites: Numbers 3, 2, 1 and 4.

Throughout the Summer WGBH will broadcast Festival concerts each Saturday evening and on Monday nights (starting July 11) Tanglewood concerts in stereo will be presented with WBCN-FM (104.1 mc).

In addition to the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, many chamber music and student performances will be recorded for broadcast during Fall and Winter months.

GREENVILLE, S.C.
NEWS
D. 80,524 S. 84,660
JUL 2 1961

Boston Pops Plays In Lo

Dates for the five Greenville Community Concert Association 1961-62 attractions were announced yesterday by R. Earle Gregory, president.

They are:

Hilda Gueden, soprano, Thursday, Oct. 10.

The Goldovsky Grand Opera Theater with "Barber of Seville" (in English), Monday, Dec. 4.

Ferrante and Teicher, duo-pianists, Monday, Feb. 26.

Boston Pops Tour Orchestra, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, Monday, March 26.

Mr. Gregory said Miss Gueden is the singer selected to perform at the musical attended by President Kennedy and Premier Khrushchev in Vienna.

Admission to concerts is by season membership only. Memberships are: reserved section, $14; general admission, $11; student, $4.

Information may be secured by writing P. O. Box 5541 or telephoning 244-5951.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Wednesday, August 9, 1961

Symphony 'Live' on TV

The National Broadcasting Co.'s "Today" show will be televised "live" from 7 to 9 a.m. tomorrow from the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 210-acre estate in Lenox, Mass., to a nationwide audience estimated at 6,000,000 viewers.

John Chancellor, host on the program, will interview Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, Aaron Copland and Arthur Fiedler, among others, and the Boston Fine Arts Quartet (members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra) will perform.

Leinsdorf

242

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 5 1961

Whitestone

BSO CONDUCTOR-TO-BE Erich Leinsdorf is making his first extended visit to Tanglewood this week, making his headquarters at Heaton Hall in Stockbridge. Currently conductor for the Metropolitan Opera in New York, Mr. Leinsdorf will take over the BSO post from Dr. Munch in September, 1962.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
NEWS
D. 270,746 SAT. 193,765
JUL 17 1961

Young Dell 'Alumni' to Meet

Robin Hood Dell will host a reunion Wednesday for all the young musicians who have appeared as soloists in its children's concert series.

The event will commemorate the tenth year of free musical events for children of Philadelphia at the Dell. It will take place backstage following the second children's concert of the current season, set for 11 a.m.

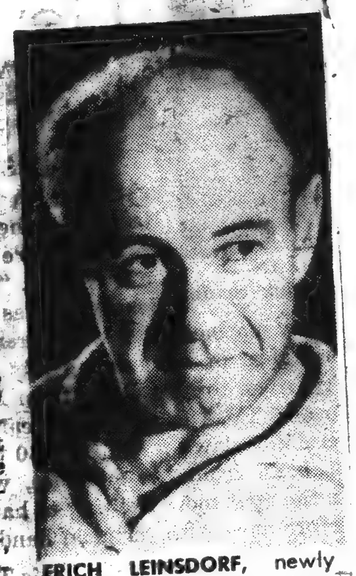
IN ALL, 31 Dell "alumni" will be guests at the hotdog, coke and birthday cake party. Most of the youngsters are still in school but others are about to be launched on a full-time concert career.

These include Susan Starr, 19, and the 21-year-old Marlowe Twins, all pianists.

Wednesday's concert has been entitled "Music for a Summer's Day." It will feature John Constantine, 13, on the accordian and Adrienne Zecca, 12, who will narrate a musical version of "Jack and the Beanstalk." William Smith will conduct.

ERICH LEINSDORF, who has just been named music director and chief conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, effective September, 1962, will conduct four concerts during the current Dell season, the first three of which will occur this week.

He will be on the Podium tonight with Isaac Stern as violin soloist. Tomorrow night he will present symphonic selections of Wagner and Tschaikovsky. Beethoven's Ninth Symphony will be his offering at Thursday's concert. Appearing in the work will be four Metropolitan Opera stars as soloists and the Singing City Choirs.



ERICH LEINSDORF, newly named conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be on the podium at Robin Hood Dell for tomorrow night's symphonic program.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
JEWISH TIMES
W 21,730
JUN 30 1961

Dell Concerts

Free tickets to the fifth week of the current Robin Hod Dell season will appear in the Bulletin, Inquirer and Daily News during the coming Holiday week.

Following the normal coupon schedule, those interested in attending concerts 12, 13 and 14 will find coupons for these evenings in the papers this coming Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

Erich Leinsdorf, one of the principal conductors of the Metropolitan Opera, who has recently been named musical director for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Massachusetts, beginning in 1962, will conduct the three concerts on Monday, Jul 17, Tuesday, July 18 and Thursday, July 20.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News-Times (e)
DANBURY, Conn.
Circ. 19,114
JUN 21 1961

CHOSEN — Conductor Erich Leinsdorf, 49, has been named to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra when Charles Munch retires at the end of the group's 1962 season.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
D 532,079 S. 907,027
JUL 13 1961

Erich Leinsdorf to Conduct at Bowl Tonight

Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and music consultant of the Metropolitan Opera, will conduct his final Hollywood Bowl concert of the season today at 8:30 p.m. with Chilean pianist Claudio Arrau as soloist.

The conductor opened the 40th season of Symphonies Under the Stars last week. In the season of 1962-63 he will become music director of the Boston Symphony and the Tanglewood summer concerts, succeeding Charles Munch.

For his final concerts Leinsdorf will conduct two works by Serge Prokofieff: the unique "Classical" Symphony and an excerpt from the ballet suite "Romeo and Juliet." Arrau will play the Piano Concerto No. 2 in B Flat Major.

Leinsdorf

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 5 1961

Whitestone

BSO CONDUCTOR-TO-BE Erich Leinsdorf is making his first extended visit to Tanglewood this week, making his headquarters at Heaton Hall in Stockbridge. Currently conductor for the Metropolitan Opera in New York, Mr. Leinsdorf will take over the BSO post from Dr. Munch in September, 1962.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
NEWS
D. 270,746 SAT. 193,765
JUL 17 1961

Young Dell 'Alumni' to Meet

Robin Hood Dell will host a reunion Wednesday for all the young musicians who have appeared as soloists in its children's concert series.

The event will commemorate the tenth year of free musical events for children of Philadelphia at the Dell. It will take place backstage following the second children's concert of the current season, set for 11 a.m.

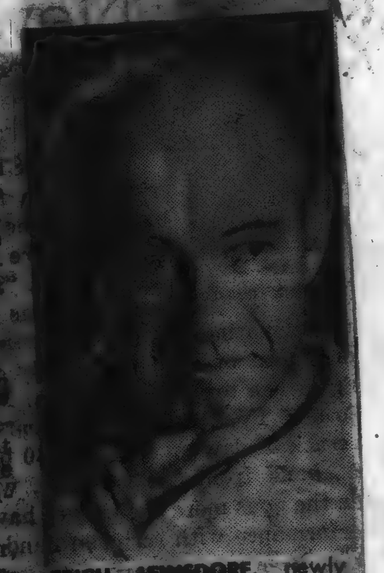
IN ALL, 31 Dell alumni will be guests at the hotdog, coke and birthday cake party. Most of the youngsters are still in school but others are about to be launched on a full-time concert career.

These include Susan Starr, 18, and the 21-year-old Marlowe Twins, all pianists.

Wednesday's concert has been entitled "Music for a Summer's Day." It will feature John Constantine, 13, on the accordian and Adrienne Zecca, 12, who will narrate a musical version of "Jack and the Beanstalk." William Smith will conduct.

ERICH LEINSDORF, who has just been named music director and chief conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, effective September, 1962, will conduct four concerts during the current Dell season, the first three of which will occur this week.

He will be on the Podium tonight with Isaac Stern as violin soloist. Tomorrow night he will present symphonic selections of Wagner and Tschaikovsky. Beethoven's Ninth Symphony will be his offering at Thursday's concert. Appearing in the work will be four Metropolitan Opera stars as soloists and the Singing City Choirs.



ERICH LEINSDORF, newly named conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be on the podium at Robin Hood Dell for tomorrow night's symphonic program.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
D. 532,079 S. 807,027
JUL 13 1961

Erich Leinsdorf to Conduct at Bowl Tonight

Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and music consultant of the Metropolitan Opera, will conduct his final Hollywood Bowl concert of the season today at 8:30 p.m. with Chilean pianist Claudio Arrau as soloist.

The conductor opened the 40th season of Symphonies Under the Stars last week. In the season of 1962-63 he will become music director of the Boston Symphony and the Tanglewood summer concerts, succeeding Charles Munch.

For his final concerts Leinsdorf will conduct two works by Serge Prokofieff, the unique "Classical" Symphony and an excerpt from the ballet suite "Romeo and Juliet." Arrau will play the Piano Concerto No. 2 in B Flat Major.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News-Times (e)
DANBURY, Conn.
Circ. 19,114
JUN 21 1961

CHOSEN — Conductor Erich Leinsdorf, 49, has been named to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra when Charles Munch retires at the end of the group's 1962 season.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
JEWISH TIMES
W. 21,730
JUN 30 1961

Dell Concerts

Free tickets to the fifth week of the current Robin Hod Dell season will appear in the Bulletin, Inquirer and Daily News during the coming Holiday week.

Following the normal coupon schedule, those interested in attending concerts 12, 13 and 14 will find coupons for these evenings in the papers this coming Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

Erich Leinsdorf, one of the principal conductors of the Metropolitan Opera, who has recently been named musical director for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Massachusetts, beginning in 1962, will conduct the three concerts on Monday, Jul 17, Tuesday, July 18 and Thursday, July 20.

243

HOUSTON, TEXAS
CHRONICLE
D: 205,824 S. 231,922

AUG 4 1961

THE SPOTLIGHT

No Butterfly For Boston

BY ANN HOLMES
Fine Arts Editor

One Friday afternoon last spring in Boston, the good ladies of the Boston Symphony's weekly "piety" gathered in Symphony Hall to hear Charles Munch conduct. Tickets have been sold out on a subscription basis for years and the Beacon Hill crowd, a sea of white-haired ladies, listened in comfort and happy security in the seats they had been occupying for 25 years or so.

Little did they know that outside in the corridors and in the lobby, in the manager's office and the conductor's dressing room a maelstrom of activity was under way.

Big Story

Knots of reporters were tucked away in the broadcasting booth, others were in Manager Todd Perry's office, television cameras were concealed behind the stage. They had been told that a big story would break after the concert. The sweet ladies listened and nodded and smiled as Munch played a happy Beethoven—and went home suspecting nothing.

Next day they picked up their newspapers and read that after the concert manager Perry had announced to the assembled press, the retirement of conductor Munch next spring, and the succession of Erich Leinsdorf to the Boston podium.

The music world shook to its very foundations. The word swept like wildfire. The Boston podium is, in the books of many, America's musical pinnacle. Why Leinsdorf, some critics asked. They argued that he had not come from another symphony orchestra, but from opera at the Metropolitan, and had not had experience in guiding a great orchestra's life. The Metropolitan Opera was in fact performing in Boston, and Leinsdorf was doing Wagner the very week his rise to the Boston throne was declared. The matter of getting Perry, and Munch and Leinsdorf together to talk, and finally to sign, without alerting the press had required a cloak and dagger game the Boston musical manipulators won't soon forget.

The surprise of Leinsdorf as Boston's top musical Brahmin hasn't died down yet. One denizen of Boston's inner musical sanctum declared she would wear a black armband; even Todd Perry smiled a little and tossed his head in a familiar gesture. "We seem to have thrown a bomb. I can't see why. Mr. Leinsdorf is acknowledged as a great conductor." Some of the French-inclined woodwind players may have to change their ways a bit, for a conductor schooled in German opera, but Leinsdorf's conducting, as Houston found out last May when he led a Houston concert, was magnificent in Wagner.

Wanderlust

Leinsdorf himself wrote in Opera News last January before he had the Boston job, "conductorial wanderlust poses a grave problem for some cities in the United States where the fast growth of the community is matched by the clamor for first-class music . . . but a conductor's success, career and future security are better served if he keeps popping up in all music centers of the world every 12 months, and he runs less risk of wearing out his welcome."

Leinsdorf said "it would seem that the butterfly has all the advantages . . . yet the deep musical togetherness between a truly permanent conductor and his orchestra after a number of years is such a beautiful musical experience, so rewarding for the musicians themselves as well as their audiences, that it might still outweigh the lure of the open road for some men."

It looks like cozy winters coming up soon for Boston. How Leinsdorf will fare remains to be seen, and Boston has lots of time.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
JEWISH EXPONENT
W. 44,137
JUL 28 1961

MUSIC — PAUL CURTIN

Some Inspired Evening

Erich Leinsdorf, conductor-designate of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, came off at his first three Dell concerts of this season as one of the few inspired music makers to lead the Orchestra in many a year.

PERHAPS it is his ability to take pedestrian works or the overplayed at face value, and give them an honest reading among performers already bored to tears with the mention of their names: Tchaikowsky's Sixth Symphony, Wagner's Parsifal music and Meistersinger Prelude, the Brahms Academic Festival Overture and Violin Concerto.

What he did with these pieces was excellent, well-considered playing. Interpretation, the bane of musical egomaniacs, with Leinsdorf seems to be rather a matter of putting every forte and piano in its just place and nowhere else. This is rare among conductors.

BUT TO DO THIS successfully with players jaded to the point of cantankerousness is no less than miraculous. There is not even a second fiddle player in the Orchestra who doesn't have his own notion of this literature after twenty or more years of sawing through it. To subvert these individual views to the authority of a conductor who cannot fire personnel nor use coercion without personal risk is a Herculean achievement. Doubly so, if one considers that they also played more exquisitely at times than during the regular season.

The capstone of the three concerts was the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven. With resources not always of equal merits, and certainly not as much rehearsal as any conductor would like to have, Leinsdorf gave a most memorable reading of the work.

The Ninth, while far distant from the finical crocheting of Mozart and Haydn, is not yet the unbridled romanticism of the 19th Century. Thus, cognizant of this, Leinsdorf produced something that burned and glistened with a restrained fire; certainly, it very closely approximated Beethoven's intent.

THE SINGING CITY CHOIRS, though adequate, are not mature nor brilliant enough to be able to make this music sound well. These dedicated young men and women lacked tonal vibrance at the extremes of their registers, and sounded rather dead most of the time. The vocal quartet made up of Helen Laird, soprano; Elena Nokolaidi, mezzo; Robert Nagy, tenor; and Ezio Flagello, baritone, were alarmingly out of focus as an ensemble. Singly, they all did much better; most notably Flagello whose rich, supple voice handled the obtusities of Beethoven's voice-writing with an enviable professionalism.

The Dell was jammed; the audience, insanely enthusiastic. There were moments when Fred Mann must have feared for the well-being of his benches. And triumphant Leinsdorf made a pretty speech about the joys of being able to bring a cultural landmark to many people. After his music, he could be forgiven almost anything, including a speech.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times - Argus (e)
BARRE, Vermont
Circ. 10,445

AUG 3 1961

CHOSEN — Conductor Erich Leinsdorf, 49, has been named to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra when Charles Munch retires at the end of the group's 1962 season.

Recordings

HI FI/STEREO REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 164,688
AUG 1961

Explanation of symbols:
Ⓜ=monophonic recording
Ⓢ=stereophonic recording

4-TRACK CLASSICS

Ⓢ BRAHMS: Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat, Op. 83. Rudolf Serkin (piano); Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy cond. COLUMBIA MQ 357 $7.95.

Interest: Great concerto
Performance: Uneven
Recording: Bright
Stereo Quality: Good

With due appreciation for such lovely moments as the piano's entrance in the slow movement, this tape has its shortcomings. Serkin's first movement is a remarkable study in effective keyboard rhetoric, and his playing of the finale, although it lacks spontaneity, is remarkable pianism. But in the big second movement his performance is mannered and shot through with imprecisions. Ormandy's third accompaniment for Serkin is the most sensitive he has given him, and the Columbia engineers have recorded the piano very well, but without matching the over-all warmth and clarity of the excellent RCA Victor recording by Sviatoslav Richter. The stereo spread is very wide, but depth is a bit lacking, and the high strings have a brightness that borders on stridency. E. S. B.

Ⓢ DVOŘÁK: Symphony No. 5, in E Minor ("New World"). London Philharmonic Orchestra, Hugo Rignold cond. BEL CANTO ST 128 $6.95.

Interest: Popular masterwork
Performance: Good
Recording: Flawed
Stereo Quality: Excellent

In this seventh tape version, Hugo Rignold leads a rough-and-ready, thrusting, performance in which he shapes the slow movement with feeling but goes too far in whipping up the tempos at the end of the first movement and toward the close of the finale. Technically the recording is also uneven. The very first note cuts in with an abruptness that suggests a frantic hand switching in on the performance an instant after the downbeat, and at the beginning of the finale the strings sound coarse and papery. Elsewhere, however, the sonic effect is impressive. E. S. B.

Ⓢ KHACHATURIAN: Gayne Ballet Suite. OFFENBACH: Gaité Parisienne. Boston Pops Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler cond. RCA VICTOR FTC 2045 $8.95.

Interest: Lightweight favorites
Performance: Brilliant
Recording: Excellent
Stereo Quality: Excellent

The big golden sound of this tape puts you right in Symphony Hall in Boston. Of the four Gayne ballet numbers recorded in this suite, the over-familiar "Sabre Dance" remains the most direct and effective in communication. Fiedler's Gaité Parisienne is a genial and enjoyable excursion, even if he may occasionally lose the distinction between the brilliant and the merely rackety. E. S. B.

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 110,268
OCT 1961

"Music of Frank Loesser." Boston Pops Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler, cond. RCA Victor FTC 2068, 38 min., $8.95.

The latest installment of Fiedler's symphonic expansions of hit show scores reminds us anew both of Loesser's superb creative powers (except in his inexplicably barren music for Greenwillow) and the skill with which the Pops' own specialist arrangers, Jack Mason and Richard Hayman, enrich and enlarge the original show instrumentations. Perhaps they try to cram in too many tunes in each medley, or at least segue a bit too hastily from one to another, yet one can hardly have enough from the incomparable Guys and Dolls and Most Happy Fella, and even in the somewhat less distinctive music for Hans Christian Andersen and Where's Charley? there is a wealth of none too familiar melodism —all of which is magnificently expressed and colored by Fiedler and his forces and by the most glittering of stereo recordings.

RENO, NEV.
GAZETTE
D: 20,488
JUN 29 1961

On the Record Front

Moderns on Record Are Prize Winners

Two prize winners by modern composers have become available on records which deserve notice from classical listeners who want more than Mozart. Too often such initiative by record makers is not adequately rewarded in sales volume.

The Music Critics Circle of New York awarded prizes in April to both items — one for the best chamber music of 1960 and the other for the best choral work.

The chamber music, Elliot Carter's Second Quartet, also won the 1960 Pulitzer prize in music. The score was finished in 1959 and played first in New York in March, 1960. It now is on an RCA Victor record, by the Juilliard String Quartet, which won a Town Hall award in 1950. Whether the appeal of Carter's work will endure remains to be seen, but as a recorded performance it is brilliant and fascinating.

Th choral work is Francis Poulenc's "Gloria in G Major for Soprano, Chorus and Orchestra." The premiere recording by Angel was made in Paris in February, under Poulenc's supervision, with soprano Rosanna Carteri and the French National Radio-Television Orchestra and Chorus under Georges Pretre. On the other side is Poulenc's "Concerto in G Minor for Organ," with organist Maurice Durufle. The stereo effects of the score and the recordings will attract audio enthusiasts.

The Poulenc "Gloria" won critical praise when performed in New York by the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch. Its melodies are fresh and joyful and the work should gain in favor as this fine recording makes it better known.

An American-taped RCA Victor release of Beethoven's "Appassionata" Sonata, both on disc and in four-track tape, by the Russian pianist, Sviatoslav Richter, is one of the top versions now available. This is a tremendous performance that stands along with his earlier disc of as one of the season's better pi- Brahms Second Piano Concerto ano recordings. The "Funeral March" sonata is on the other side.

Capitol has recorded two young European pianists in distinguished fashion. Maurizio Pollini, 18, performs excitingly Chopin's First Piano Concerto with which he won a 1960 Warsaw award. The young Italian shows great promise in this disc with the Philharmonic Orchestra under Paul Kletzki. He has won acclaim in Milan since he was 14. The recording has great sound appeal.

The other Capitol disc is by Eric Heidsieck, 24, a Frenchman playing Mozart's Concertos No. 20 and 23 with Andre Vandernoot and the Conservatory Concert Orchestra. Heidsieck, a member of the champagne family, plays his own cadenzas instead of the traditional ones provided by Beethoven and Schnabel.

Gary Graffman interprets Chopin's Piano Concerto in E Minor in a refined and delicate styling that makes the RCA Victor recording a desirable one. On the other side, also with the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch, is a delightful version of Mendelssohn's gay "Capriccio Brilliant," with a bubbly mood that Graffman achieves with ease.

THE TOP TEN: Best-selling records of the week based on The Cash Box Magazine's nationwide survey:

TRAVELIN' MAN, Ricky Nelson
RUNNIN' SCARED, Roy Orbison
STAND BY ME, King
MOODY RIVER, Boone
RAINDROPS, Clark
THE BOLL WEEVIL SONG, Benton
QUARTER TO THREE, U.S. Bonds
I FEEL SO BAD, Presley
DADDY'S HOME, Shep
HELLO WALLS, Young

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (e)
NEW BRITAIN, Conn.
Circ. 31,609
AUG 8 1961

Records:

Caruso Among New Stereos

By L. J. KRAMP
AP Newsfeatures

Some Mozart horn concertos, a Beethoven trio, French folk songs and Caruso in his prime are among the better record buys this vacation season. Also attractive are several bright new ballet discs.

"The Virtuoso Horn," like an earlier Vanguard release of oboe music, is a delightful bit of Mozartiana, played by Albert Linder with the Vienna State Orchestra under Hans Swarowsky.

Heifetz, Primrose and Piatigorsky provide the Beethoven Trio in D in a superb RCA Victor disc that includes three Bach sinfonias and a Schubert trio in B flat. Piatigorsky is available also in a new RCA disc of Dvorak's cello concerto in B minor, with the Boston Symphony.

Recordings

HI FI/STEREO REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 164,688
AUG 1961

Explanation of symbols:
Ⓜ=monophonic recording
Ⓢ=stereophonic recording

4-TRACK CLASSICS

Ⓢ BRAHMS: Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat, Op. 83. Rudolf Serkin (piano); Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy cond. COLUMBIA MQ 357 $7.95.

Interest: Great
Performance: Uneven
Recording: Bright
Stereo Quality: Good

With due appreciation for such lovely moments as the piano's entrance in the slow movement, this tape has its shortcomings. Serkin's first movement is a remarkable study in effective keyboard rhetoric, and his playing of the finale, although it lacks spontaneity, is remarkable pianism. But in the big second movement his performance is mannered and shot through with imprecisions. Ormandy's third accompaniment for Serkin is the most sensitive he has given him, and the Columbia engineers have recorded the piano very well, but without matching the over-all warmth and clarity of the excellent RCA Victor recording by Sviatoslav Richter. The stereo spread is very wide, but depth is somewhat lacking and the strings have a brightness that borders on stridency. E. S. B.

Ⓢ DVORÁK: Symphony No. 5, in E Minor ("New World"): London Philharmonic Orchestra, Hugo Rignold cond. BEL CANTO ST 128 $6.95.

Interest: Popular masterwork
Performance: Good
Recording: Flawed
Stereo Quality: Excellent

In this seventh tape version, Hugo Rignold leads a rough-and-ready, thrusting, performance in which he shapes the slow movement with feeling but goes too far in whipping up the tempos at the end of the first movement and toward the close of the finale. Technically the recording is also uneven. The very first note cuts in with an abruptness that suggests a frantic hand switching in the performance an instant after the downbeat, and at the beginning of the finale the strings sound coarse and papery. Elsewhere, however, the sonic effect is impressive. E. S. B.

Ⓢ KHACHATURIAN: Gayne Ballet Suite. OFFENBACH: Gaité Parisienne. Boston Pops Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler cond. RCA VICTOR FTC 2045 $8.95.

Interest: Lightweight favorites
Performance: Brilliant
Recording: Excellent
Stereo Quality: Excellent

If the gold-plated sound of this tape puts you right in Symphony Hall in Boston. Of the four Gayne ballet numbers recorded in this suite, the over-familiar "Sabre Dance" remains the most direct and effective in communication. Fiedler's Gaité Parisienne is a genial and enjoyable excursion, but here we may occasionally lose the distinction between the brilliant and the [illegible]. E. S. B.

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 110,268
OCT 1961

"Music of Frank Loesser." Boston Pops Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler, cond. RCA Victor FTC 2068, 38 min., $8.95.

The latest installment of Fiedler's symphonic expansions of hit show scores reminds us anew both of Loesser's superb creative powers (except in his inexplicably barren music for Greenwillow) and the skill with which the Pops' own specialist arrangers, Jack Mason and Richard Hayman, enrich and enlarge the original show instrumentations. Perhaps they try to cram in too many tunes in each medley, or attempt segues that are too hastily from one to another, yet one can hardly have enough from the incomparable Guys and Dolls and Most Happy Fella, and even in the somewhat less distinctive music for Hans Christian Andersen and Where's Charley? there is a wealth of none too familiar melodism —all of which is magnificently expressed and colored by Fiedler and his forces and by the most glittering of stereo recordings.

RENO, NEV.
GAZETTE
D: 20,488
JUN 29 1961

On the Record Front

Moderns on Record Are Prize Winners

Two prize winners by modern composers have become available on records which deserve notice from classical listeners who want more than Mozart. Too often such initiative by record makers is not adequately rewarded in sales volume.

The Music Critics Circle of New York awarded prizes in April to both items — one for the best chamber music of 1960 and the other for the best choral work.

The chamber music, Elliot Carter's Second Quartet, also won the 1960 Pulitzer prize in music. The score was finished in 1959 and played first in New York in March, 1960. It now is on an RCA Victor record, by the Juilliard String Quartet, which won a Town Hall award in 1950. Whether the appeal of Carter's work will endure remains to be seen, but as a recorded performance it is brilliant and fascinating.

Th choral work is Francis Poulenc's "Gloria in G Major for Soprano, Chorus and Orchestra." The premiere recording by Angel was made in Paris in February, under Poulenc's supervision, with soprano Rosanna Carteri and the French National Radio-Television Orchestra and Chorus under Georges Pretre. On the other side is Poulenc's "Concerto in G Minor for Organ," with organist Maurice Durufle. The stereo effects of the score and the recordings will attract audio enthusiasts.

The Poulenc "Gloria", won critical praise when performed in New York by the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch. Its melodies are fresh and joyful and the work should gain in favor as this fine recording makes it better known.

An American-taped RCA Victor release of Beethoven's "Appassionata" Sonata, both on disc and in four-track tape, by the Russian pianist, Sviatoslav Richter, is one of the top versions now available. This is a tremendous performance that stands along with his earlier disc of as one of the season's better p Brahms Second Piano Concert ano recordings. The "Funera March" sonata is on the other side.

Capitol has recorded two young European pianists in distinguished fashion. Maurizio Pollini, 18, performs excitingly Chopin's First Piano Concerto with which he won a 1960 Warsaw award. The young Italian shows great promise in this disc with the Philharmonic Orchestra under Paul Kletzki. He has won acclaim in Milan since he was 14. The recording has great sound appeal.

The other Capitol disc is by Eric Heidsieck, 24, a Frenchman playing Mozart's Concertos No. 20 and 23 with Andre Vandernoot and the Conservatory Concert Orchestra. Heidsieck, a member of the champagne family, plays his own cadenzas instead of the traditional ones provided by Beethoven and Schnabel.

Gary Graffman interprets Chopin's Piano Concerto in E Minor in a refined and delicate styling that makes the RCA Victor recording a desirable one. On the other side, also with the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch, is a delightful version of Mendelssohn's gay "Capriccio Brilliant," with a bubbly mood that Graffman achieves with ease.

THE TOP TEN: Best-selling records of the week based on The Cash Box Magazine's nationwide survey:

TRAVELIN' MAN, Ricky Nelson
RUNNIN' SCARED, Roy Orbison
STAND BY ME, King
MOODY RIVER, Boone
RAINDROPS, Clark
THE BOLL WEEVIL SONG, Benton
QUARTER TO THREE, U.S. Bonds
I FEEL SO BAD, Presley
DADDY'S HOME, Shep
HELLO WALLS, Young

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (e)
NEW BRITAIN, Conn.
Circ. 31,609
AUG 8 1961

Records:

Caruso Among New Stereos

By L. J. KRAMP
AP Newsfeatures

Some Mozart horn concertos, a Beethoven trio, French folk songs and Caruso in his prime are among the better record buys this vacation season. Also attractive are several bright new ballet discs.

"The Virtuoso Horn," like an earlier Vanguard release of oboe music, is a delightful bit of Mozartiana, played by Albert Linder with the Vienna State Orchestra under Hans Swarowsky.

Heifetz, Primrose and Piatigorsky provide the Beethoven Trio in D in a superb RCA Victor disc that includes three Bach sinfonias and a Schubert trio in B flat. Piatigorsky is available also in a new RCA disc of Dvorak's cello concerto in B minor, with the Boston Symphony.

245

CHICAGO HEIGHTS, ILL.
STAR
TW. 16,821

AUG 17 1961

Music In The Groove

By PAUL H. LITTLE

RCA Victor's August releases are exciting and abound in variety entertainment for every musical taste.

Two albums recall the forthcoming fall season of the Chicago Symphony orchestra as Dr. Fritz Reiner conducts the Schubert "Unfinished" and Fifth symphonies on one album (LM-2516) and joins forces with Van Cliburn in the Beethoven "Emperor" piano concerto in E flat major on the other (LM-2562).

The glowing buoyance and verve of our great orchestra has never been better perpetuated on wax than in the Schubert album. The almost hackneyed "Unfinished" score is given vital concept and power by Reiner's sensitive interpretation while the radiant zest for living of the Fifth is masterfully achieved.

* * *

WE HAVE ALSO admired Van Cliburn's genius, but regretfully we must say of this new discing that it lacks the poetry and lucidity that Artur Rubinstein, Walter Gieseking or Artur Schnabel brought to the concerto.

There is technique in abundance, but the overall impression is one of sobriety, not of compelling, splendid dynamics as to phrasing and culmulative styling. Dr. Reiner's brilliant accompaniment highlights Van Clinburn's comparative lack all the more. Sonics are superb.

For opera enthusiasts two outstanding albums are among the new Victor releases. The first is a three disc complete recording. (in either stereo or monaural) of Wagner's "The Flying Dutchman," that magnificent, gloomy early masterpiece in which Wagner took as his theme a man accursed who must roam the seas until the love of a pure woman would be offered as sacrifice to atone for his sins.

Antal Dorati conducts the orchestra and chorus of the Royal opera house of Convent garden, and his interpretation is notably one of his best achievements on lp.

As the Dutchman, George London scores another triumph. Leonie Rysanek is an incomparable Senta and Chicago born Giorgi Tozzi, a brilliantly sung and dramatically apt Daland. Karl Liebl's Erik, Richard Lewis' Steersman, and Rosalind Elias' May go to make up a splendid integrated cast.

* * *

COMPARISONS are always odious, but one will inevitably be made with Angel's version which stars Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau as the Dutchman. This latter singer is one of the great artists of our generation. In diction, meaning communication and understanding, he has few rivals, and we must cede to him the laurels over London so far as impact and artistic appeal are concerned.

But Rysanek and Tozzi bring the balance scale over to Victor's side. RCA engineers have "miked" some of the scenes from what seems to be at a distance while Angel uses a more close-up technique, but the illusion of ghostliness which Wagner desired is better served by the Victor styling. And if we were to select a single highlight of this great opera, it would be Rysanek's way with "Senta's Ballad."

The other operatic disc is a single 12-inch performed by the Symphony of the Air under Leopold Stokowski with chorus under Margaret Hills (LM-2555). It programs the "Ride of the Valkyries," the prelude to the third act of "Tristen and Isolde," and the "Entrance of the Gods into Valhalla" from "Das Rheingold," while the reverse side is devoted entirely to the overture and the Venusberg music from "Tannhauser."

Stokowski's lavish gifts for extracting every orchestral nuance from the score is masterfully revealed in this all-Wagner program. Particularly noteworthy is his interpretation of the music from "Tannhauser." This is exciting artistry, and it will convert many a listener who is dubious about opera in general.

* * *

FOR SHEER orchestral beauty it would be difficult to find a score to surpass Ravel's exquisitely haunting "Daphis et Cholle." Victor presents it here in its complete form with wordless chorus and the great Boston symphony orchestra under Charles Munch (LM-2568).

Munch's finesse with French music has never been heard to finer advantage; the shadings, colorations, rhythms and dynamics are absolutely stunning. And as regards to sonics, we predict this disc will be worn out at many a hi-fi show.

If you've never heard the music, you've an unforgettable treat in store for you; it is ripe with melody and intoxicating rhythms. Originally conceived for the ballet, it suggests the very epitome of choreography!

Musicals? Then listen to the master of them all, Victor Herbert, in "The Immortal Victor Herbert" by the Robert Shaw Chorale (LM-2515) with such gems as "Kiss Me Again," "Streets of New York," "Every Day is Ladies' Day with Me," "I Want What I Want When I Want It," "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Love," and "I'm Falling in Love with Someone," and many other all-time delights with a quartet of admirable soloists in baritone Calvin Marsh,, tenor Mallory Walker, contralto Florence Kopleff, and soprano Saramae Endlich.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809

AUG 10 1961

Record-ially Yours

By MARTIN BOOKSPAN

Mr. Bookspan a native Bostonian is director of Recorded Music for WQXR, the Radio Station of The New York Times, and a contributing editor to the monthly publication Hi Fi and Music Review. His commentary on Boston Symphony broadcasts is heard on WXHR at 3:05 p.m. on Sundays.

PROKOFIEFF: Symphony No. 4, Opus 47/112; Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy; Columbia cond.; MS-6154, $5.98.

Columbia and Ormandy are to be congratulated upon this release of Prokofieff's Fourth Symphony, a virtually unknown masterpiece from the pen of one of the twentieth century's mightiest symphonists.

The score has a curious history. In May, 1929, a new ballet by Prokofieff called The Prodigal Son was produced at the Theatre Sarah Bernhardt in Paris by Serge Diaghilev. Serge Lifar danced the title role, the scenery and costumes were designed by Georges Roualt and the scenario was by Boris Kochno. It was one of Diaghilev's last productions: three months later he lay dead.

At about the same time that he was working on the score for the ballet, Prokofieff received a commission from the Boston Symphony Orchestra for an orchestral score celebrating the orchestra's fiftieth anniversary season, 1930-31. Prokofiaff decided to compose a symphony his fourth, using musical material from the ballet. Anticipating that he might be accused of plagiarizing from himself because he had run out of ideas, he issued this statement in advance of the Symphony's first performance: "In the Symphony I had the possibility to develop symphonically what a ballet form did not enable me to do. A precedent may be recalled with Beethoven's Ballet The Creatures of Prometheus and his Symphony No. 3."

Serge Koussevitzky conducted the world premiere of the Fourth Symphony at a Boston Symphony concert in November, 1930, but it met with a cold reception from both the audiences and critics. Seven and a half years later Prokofieff came to Boston to conduct the orchestra in a program of his own works, bringing with him one of his latest scores for what were to be its first performances outside of Russia. Referring to the lack of enthusiasm for his Fourth Symphony in 1930, Prokofieff remarked to the Boston press that the new place, a fairy tale for children called Peter and the Wolf, would be much closer to the intelligence level of the local audiences.

Even in his last years Prokofieff smarted from the wounds of the neglect of the Fourth Symphony. He returned to the score, revised and expended it to nearly twice its original length and assigned a dual opus number to the revised version: 47 (the original one) and 112.

I have spent some fascinating hours comparing this new recording of Opus 47/112 with a now discontinued Urania recording (by George Sebastian with the Colonne Orchestra) of the original version, Opus 47. The revision is at once a more formidable, more grandiose work than the original score of 1930, but there is much to be said for the conciseness and tightly-knit structure of the original edition. It is the first and last movements which have been most thoroughly transformed in the new, revised version, with new and contrasting episodes aided to the original form.

The music is Prokofieff to the core, lyrical and forthright, with a prevailingly dark instrumental color. The first movement is a sombre, reflective section which reminds me of the brooding melancholy of the first two movements of the composer's Sixth Symphony The second movement is an improvisatory nocturne; the third a bitter-sweet allegretto; and the finale, a bold and proclamative resolution.

BILLBOARD MUSIC WEEK
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 35,932

JUL 31 1961

Semi-Classical

HEARTS IN ¾ TIME

Boston Pops Ork (Fiedler). RCA Victor LM-2556 (Stereo & Monaural)—Superb performances and sound mark this lush and lovely album of famous waltzes by the Boston Pops under Arthur Fiedler. The waltzes range from the title tune, to "Danube Waves," "Gold and Silver Waltz" and "Valse Bluette." Album can sell to the semi-classical, classical and adult pop market.

Sound

SELMA, ALA.
TIMES-JOURNAL
DI. 11,171 S: 11,171

AUG 6 1961

Record Review

By JAMES G. ROY, JR.

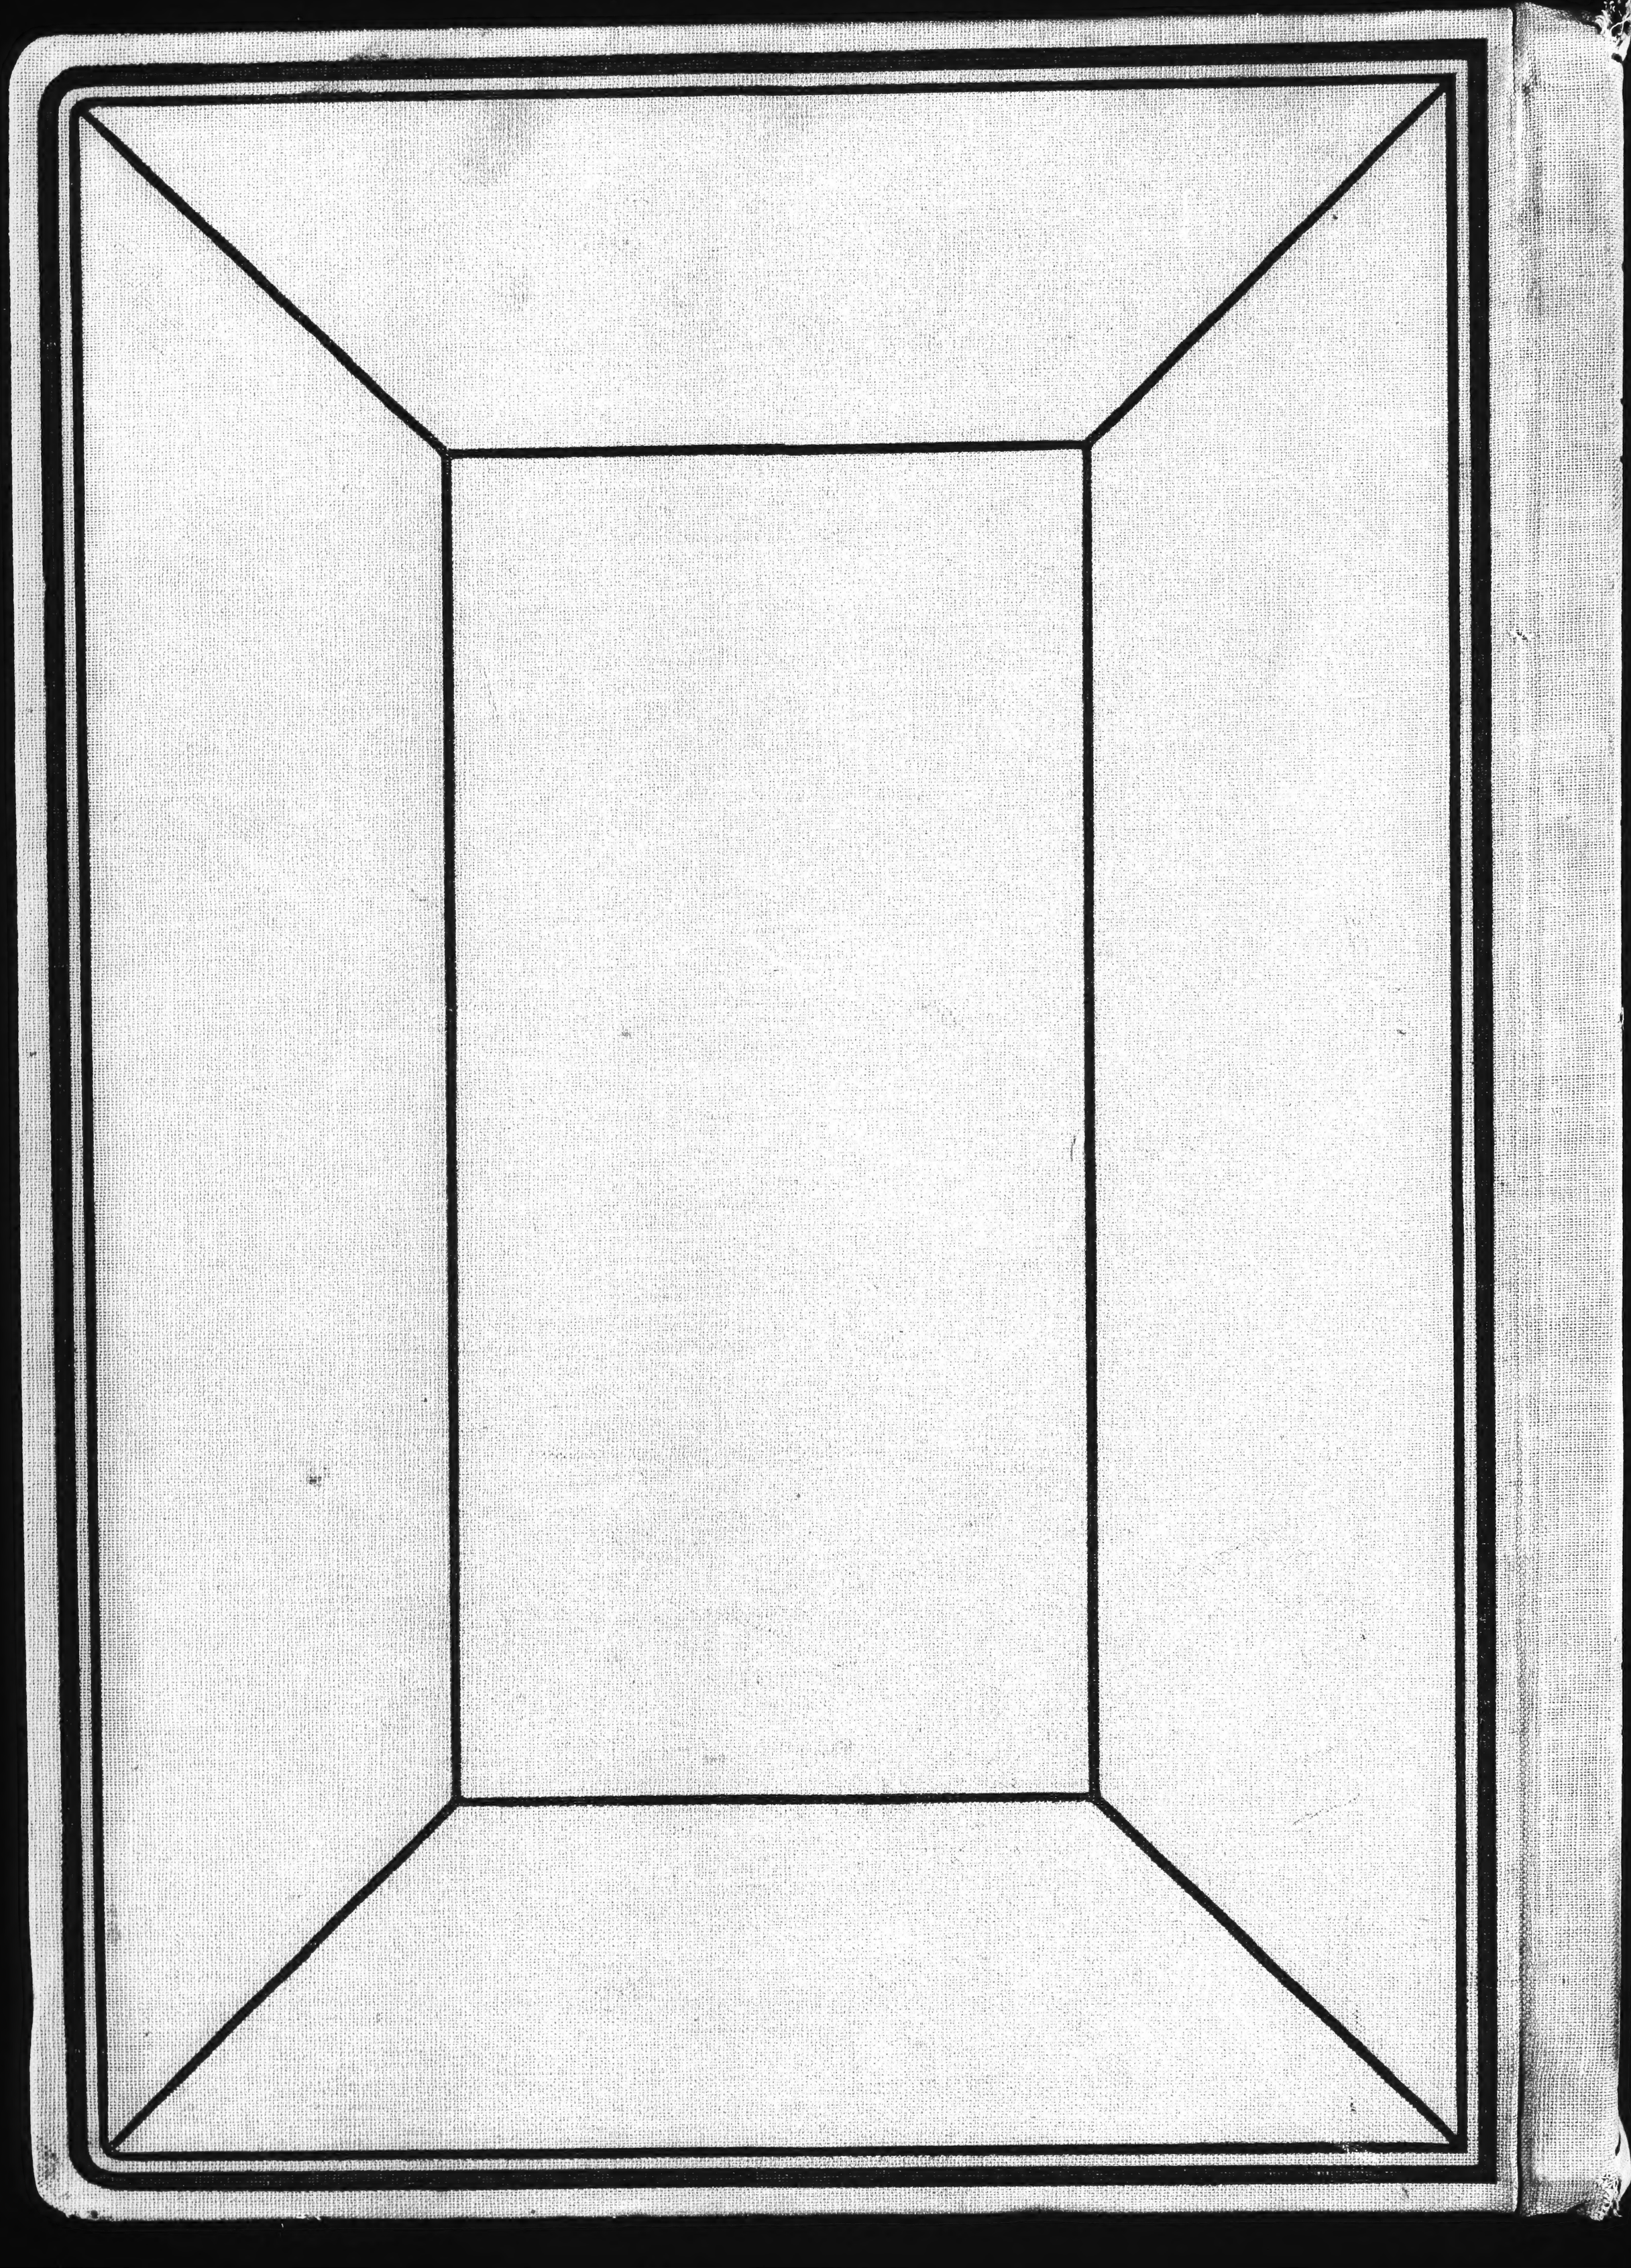
The Boston Symphony Orchestra Playing Romantic Orchestral Repertoire on RCA - Victor Red Seal Records — Music by Schumann, Mendelssohn, and Dvorak have kept the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra busy in the confines of Boston's Symphony Hall this past year. With Conductor Charles Munch on the podium, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has delivered some of its finest performances on stereo records for the tell-tale ears of RCA's producer Richard Mohr and recording engineer Lewis Layton. These new releases have a beauty of orchestral sound that far surpasses anything previously heard from the Boston musicians on the RCA-Victor label, and the quality of performance would be difficult for any contemporary orchestra in this country or Europe to match for authenticity of style and expressive musicianship.

On a single 12" stereo record (LSC-2474), Munch leads his musicians in a beautifully expressive well-drilled rendition of the "Symphony No 1 in B Flat Major" (Schumann) coupled with the famous "Manfred" Overture. Koussevitsky recorded the so-called "Spring Symphony" back in the days of 78 RPM with critical acclaim with the same orchestra, and the new stereo edition under Munch again demonstrates the feeling that the Bostonians have for the music of Schumann. The "Manfred Overture" is played with singular effectiveness and dramatic drive.

The picturesue imagery of Mendelssohn's "Scotch Symphony" and the bravura of the "Scherzo" from the "Octet in E Flat Major" provide Munch and his players with another opportunity for superior instrumental performance, offset by deeply moving feeling for emotional content (LSC-2520, one 12" stereo record). Munch departs from the usual tempi for the first movement of the "Scotch Symphony," but his approach is completely valid in its convincing sense of excitement and romantic fervor.

Gregor Piatigorsky is a happy choice for soloist in the finest of all cello concertos, the "Concerto in B Minor," by Dvorak (LSC-2490, one 12" stereo record) with a superior accompaniment by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Munch. The Piatigorsky technique is as brilliant as it was thirty years ago when the Russian refugee first appeared in this country, and the beauty of tone that Piatigorsky draws from the cello is not likely to be equalled by any living cellist today. It would be difficult to find any version on stereo today that might surpass the Piatigorsky - Munch performance of the Dvorak "Cello Concerto" for definition of technique and poetry.

Beethoven-Overtures. (Epic -BC-1128, one 12" stereo record). This release provides the usual Beethoven concert and operatic overtures like "Egmont," "Coriolanus," and the popular "Leonore No. 3 in C Mahor," played with immaculate taste and technique by the great Concertgebouw Orchestra of Amsterdam under Eugen Jochum. What makes the repertoire offered on this Epic stereo disc even more appealing is the inclusion of seldom-heard overtures like those to "Consecration of the House" and "Namensfeier," two of Beethoven's late orchestral works that show the contrapuntal influence of Handel and Bach. The stereo sound is spaciously resonant and captures the sound of the celebrated Dutch orchestra with effective realism.



END OF VOLUME

END OF REEL

PLEASE REWIND